FOR THE FAMILY

The Oyster.

There's been much wisdom wasted
On many a written page
O'er the man that found the oyster
In the prehistoric age.
And who first devoured that morsel,
His hunger to assuage.

But in Darwin's evolution
The simple fact appears,
That the oyster—noble creature,
Which stimulates and cheers—
Outdates the human species
By a hundred million years.

He's such an ancient settler,
I harbor the conceit,
That when the first man blossomed
Into being, all complete,
The oyster kindly taught him
The proper thing to eat.

The oyster of the present,
Whate'er his past may be,
With shell so roughly crusted,
And form so fine to see,
In his rich and juicy sweetness,
Is good enough for me

But why reduce your comfort,
Or your simple pleasures mar,
By a barnacle attachment
To Superstition's car,
Which condemns the honest oyster
In the months that lack an R?

The fishermen of Suffolk,
Whose minds are very clear,
And whose knowledge of the oyster
Is native and sincere,
Assure me that they eat him
Throughout the livelong year.

I admit that in October,
When the garnered fields are bare,
When the lengthened nights are freshened
By a keen and nipping air,
There's a flavor in the oyster
That's dainty, rich and rare.

Then, in his fullest glory,
He leaves his native coast,
And then—I'm free to own it—
I love the oyster most.
"Yes, waiter, I am waiting Bring me a Boston roast!"

A Offscouring.

BY ELEANOR KIRK.

"Well, yes, ma'am, I have stole!"

"Why, John!"

"You asked me, didn't you?'

"Yes, I asked you!" the mission teacher replied, a sad, almost disgusted expression on her sweet, young face.

"What did you ask me for, if you didn't want me to tell you? I could 'a' lied!" the boy went on in a stolid sort of a way, and yet with a ring of feeling in his voice.

"No, you couldn't, Johnny," the teacher answered with a smile, 'because you promised, you remember, that you would always tell the truth to me."

"Well, I didn't go back on it, did I?"

"No, Johnny. Have you any objection to telling me how often you have taken things that didn't belong to you?"

"Mebbe I couldn't remember them all," the boy replied, "but I never lifted anything very partikeler. Once when the old woman where I hang out got sick, and cried a blue streak for oranges, and nobody had any money to get 'em, I asked the old cove that kept the grocery to trust me for a couple till the next day. He wouldn't do it, and that night I stole six from him."

"Why, Johnny!"

"Why didn't he let me have 'em, then?" the boy went on doggedly. "I'd 'a' paid him, 'cause I said I would. Anyhow the old woman got well off them oranges."

"Then you are not sorry you took them?" the teacher inquired.

"Well, the old woman had to have them oranges, and somebody had to get 'em for her."

The teacher's face was very grave, and as her companion looked up he saw the tears in her eyes, a sight which had a curious effect upon him.

"Don't make me tell you any more, please ma'am," he said, dropping his eyes, while his face flushed scarlet. "I ain't nothing but a offscouring anyhow, and it ain't no go to fret about what I do. I was kinder dragged into this place, else I'd never a bothered you."

"What name did you call yourself?" the teacher inquired. "I didn't understand you."

"Granny Leeds always said I was a offscouring, and so I am."

"What is an offscouring, John?"

"Oh! the leavin's of something that ain't no good."

"Granny Leeds, as you call her, was very much mistaken, and you are very much mistaken about yourself, Johnny," the teacher replied. "You are not an offscouring but God's own child, and he is giving you a chance to make something of yourself. How much do you think the things are worth that you have taken, in all, Johnny?"

"Them oranges was worth four cents apiece when I took 'em, that's twenty-four, and then two loaves of bread I lifted for two fellows that froze their feet last winter, and a mackerel to make the bread go down. It's awful tough to eat bread without nothing with it, and then a base-ball that was worth fifty cents, and all them things would make near hand to a dollar. I don't remember anything else now."

"Well, John, I shall give you a dollar, and I want you to go to those places and pay for all those things."

"Then I'll have to own up," the boy interrupted, in his bewilderment relapsing at once into slang.

"Wouldn't you feel better to confess, Johnny," the young lady inquired, not a little troubled at the effect of her words. For a moment the boy seemed lost in thought, and then lifting a frank face to his companion said, "I ain't never felt partikeler bad about any of them things 'cept the base ball, and that I could 'a' done without, but if you say so, Miss Lee, I'll give the whole thing away, only as I ain't lifted anything lately and don't never mean to again, they would always suspicion me, and make me out a thief when I ain't no such thing. Don't you think 'twould do, ma'am, if I dropped the money in them places so they'd be sure to find it? If you don't think so I'll blow the whole thing if it takes me to the Island."

"What will you do, Johnny, if somebody needs bread and oranges, and you haven't any money to buy them with?"

"That's a-sticker, ma'am. I dunno."

"And it wouldn't be strange if something of that kind were to happen any day."

"No, ma'am. There's something putty general to pay with the folks I know."

"Well, Johnny, I will tell you what to do," the teacher replied. "Here is my card, and when any of your acquaintances are in trouble I wish you would come directly to me; and if anything is amiss with you at any time be sure and send a messenger. You had better come up to-morrow, anyway, Johnny, for I want to give you some warm clothes, and then it will be easy for you to find the place next time."

Johnny hung his head. This kindness overpowered him, and not a word could he speak.

"I didn't mean to hurt you, Johnny," the tender-hearted teacher hurried to say. "You are willing I should help you, are you not?"

"I guess you had better let me git, now, Miss Lee," the boy replied, huskily. "You could knock me down with a eye-winker. You needn't worry about my remembering all you've said, but just now I'm all broke up."

"And I can trust you, Johnny?" the lady inquired.

"It is a go, ma'am," the boy answered, simply.

Miss Lee tucked a dollar bill in his hand, and Johnny hurried out of the building.

It took considerable tact and skill, as well as time, for the boy to satisfactorily manage the business which his teacher had provided the money for. For instance, the grocer from whom he had "lifted" the oranges had sold out to another man, and Johnny was obliged to hunt him up. He was at last found, poor and ill, and the boy, without a moment's hesitation, confessed the theft and produced the money. 'I guess I can make it thirty cents," he said, "and that'll be a little interest. If I wouldn't like to give you five dollars then you may shoot me for a crow."

The ex-grocer was so surprised at Johnny's confession and subsequent generosity that he shook the boy's hand heartily and invited him to step in again soon, which the lad promised as heartily to do.

By nightfall these "back debts," as Johnny naively called them, were all settled, and then, after a scanty meal, the boy started out with his evening papers. About quarter to eight he had sold out, and then, as fast as his fleet feet would carry him, he hurried to the neighborhood of the Academy of Music to watch the people go into the building. It was opera night, and this was one of Johnny's greatest pleasures, and so, with his back to a lamp-post, he gave himself up to the delight of watching the gay throng. Johnny wondered what it would be like to drive round in luxurious carriages and have plenty of money to spend on fine clothes. He thought of the bread and herring he had eaten for his supper, and tried to imagine what it would be like to have turkey and cranberry sauce every day. Every Christmas Johnny had turkey and cranberry sauce for his dinner, and he knew from experience how nice they were. He had once ridden in an ambulance with a friend of his—a newsboy—who had been run over by an express wagon, and this was the nearest approach to a carriage ride that Johnny had ever enjoyed. He wondered, as he watched these happy, gayly dressed people, why it was that some people had all they wanted while others were cold and hungry, and sometimes starved to death. This was not the first time that Johnny had been perplexed with such thoughts, but they had never made him feel quite so uncomfortable as on this occasion. He called to mind the warm underclothing and tidy jacket and pants which Miss Lee had given him that day, and tried to comfort himself with the thought that there was one person in the world who cared for him.

There had been a heavy fall of snow that day, and as Johnny, still absorbed with his thoughts, started to cross the street, he saw something sparkle in the snow at the side of the crossing. There had been a rush of carriages, and a few had not been able to pull up at the curb. As he picked it up he saw that it was an ornament in the shape of a cross, and studded with diamonds.

Johnny knew they were "shiners," as he called them, as soon as he looked at them, so with his heart in his throat he tucked the precious jewel in his pocket, still holding it firmly in his hand. Johnny's ambition had been to start a coffee and cake establishment where newsboys could be entertained at low rates. For more than a year he had nursed this project, and here was a chance to carry it into execution. There were nine stones in the cross. Disposing of one at a time so as to avoid suspicion, there was money enough to last him "for years and years" he told himself. It puzzled him to know where he could keep the shiners, for there wasn't a soul among his acquaintances whom he dare trust with the secret. Not until he had crept into his poverty-stricken bed, with his treasure carefully hidden among the straw, did the thought occur that he ought to try and find an owner for it. Then followed a hard battle between the natural honesty of the lad and his very natural desire for creature comforts. The person who could wear a gold thing like that "chock-full of shiners," he said to himself, "must have money enough to buy more shiners." Here he was, cold and hungry half the time, with no prospect before him but to be always hungry, if not always cold; and here were these "shiners" which would set him up in business and give him a chance to help the boys. Johnny honestly wanted to help the boys. Why should he find the owner of this cross when he had nothing and the owner had everything? This fight continued until it was time for the lad to start out for his morning papers. All through the busiest part of the forenoon the battle still raged, and the newsboy's thoughts were so occupied with his new found riches that he almost forgot to attend to his customers. About half past ten, as he crossed City Hall Park, he noticed a gentleman in earnest conversation with another gentleman, and as he passed he heard the words "diamond cross" spoken. Johnny slackened his pace and listened.

"The diamonds were all of the first water," the gentleman said. "It was a present to my wife from her father, and she is terribly cut up at the loss. I don't suppose we shall ever find it."

"You will advertise it, won't you? his companion inquired.

"Oh, of course," the gentleman replied, but more than likely it has fallen into dishonest hands, and unless the reward is made equal to the value of the diamonds we shall probably never see them."

When the gentlemen separated the one who was interested in the diamonds entered the City Hall, and after a little inquiry Johnny discovered that this gentleman held a very honorable office in the city department. After finding this out the lad took a turn round the Park to think it over again.

"Granny Leeds said I was a offscouring, and Miss Lee says I ain't" he argued to himself. "If I keep these shiners Granny'll be right and Miss Lee'll be wrong. She said the Lord was giving me a chance to make something of myself. Well, now, the question is, am I or am I not a offscouring? If I keep these shiners, I am, if I give them up I ain't. Well I ain't!" and with these words on his lips Johnny started for the gentleman's office. Nothing daunted, he entered, and presented himself at the desk.

"Some of your folks have lost something, ain't they?" he asked.

"They have," said the gentleman.

"Will yer honor tell me what it is like?"

"It is a gold cross set with diamonds," and the gentleman described the relative position of the stones. "It was lost either in the Academy of Music last night, or on the way to or from that place."

Johnny's coat was off in a twinkling, and with a rip at the stitches which confined his treasure he took it out and put on his coat again. "I 'spose this is it," he said, handing it to the gentleman. "I wanted to keep them shiners awful bad," he continued. "They'd 'a' set me up in business, them shiners would, but you see I couldn't get to be such a offscouring as that, though I have been trying to be a thief all night long. If I was your folks," he went on, "I'd get a stronger string to hold them shiners, for fear they'd be gone for good and all next time."

"What is your name?" the gentleman inquired, as the lad, with his cap in his hand, stood modestly before him.

"John Resney," the boy replied.

"Have you a father and mother? was the next question.

"Nobody, yer honor, but myself."

"Which would you prefer to do, Johnny," the gentleman next inquired; "go into business or go to school?"

"Why, I would rather go to school, ten to one," said Johnny, "but there ain't no show for that."

"We will see," said the gentleman. "Will you come into my office, Johnny, until I see what is best to be done?"

"Yes, sir," Johnny replied, the tears starting to his eyes.

"I shall want you to go home with me in an hour or two, and give my wife her diamonds, and see what she thinks of you."

"All right," said Johnny, brushing away the tears. "Anything to do now, yer honor?"

The following Sunday Johnny went to the Mission School for the last time, and in such good clothes that Miss Lee hardly knew him. The grateful boy told his teacher all that had happened, and concluded as follows:

"I am going away to school to-morrow, and if I've got the learning stuff in me I can go to college; but Miss Lee, if it hadn't been for you and God I should have been a offscouring all the days of my life"—Christian Union.

In Pekin.

We went down one of the broad streets that run for miles without a bend. The vista is closed by a city gate, and broken by here and there an elaborate arch that spans the roadway. A pylow erected to commemorate either wealth or virtue; but the green and gold have rubbed off, and the structure is out of line, like a gravestone where the earth has sunk; the houses, built of brick, are one story, yet, as the fronts of the chemists,' tea and tobacco shops are a mass of gilded and painted wood, sometimes thirty feet high, they make a dazzling show when new; but paint and gilding wear away rapidly in this climate, and when the gold tarnishes it is not renewed, so that there are sombre lines of faded finery, broken at intervals by a brilliant flash of color, like the glare of a public house in a street that has lost gentility. The middle of the roadway is the highest; there are lower roads on either side, and off these the sidewalks and the shops. At intervals the middle is occupied by rows of booths covered with wooden boards or with curtains of rags, where travelling merchants display their goods as in an English fair, or else cook and sell hot viands that always attract the country folk who have come in to market. At other points there are oblong groups of eager listeners, each group gathered around a story-teller, who tells his tale with wonderful dramatic action; and, as wise as the editors of Western magazines, when he has worked up the audience to the highest suspense, sends round the hat before he begins the next chapter. I saw him once vehemently shake his cash-box in the face of a mean fellow who was sneaking away without paying. A few yards off a juggler has an equally eager crowd, while he swallows porcelain cups and needles without end. A little farther, and there is the veritable box of Punch and Judy, although the distinguished persons on that mimic stage are but very distant and poor relations to their namesakes here. On the sidewalks the chiropodist operates on way-worn feet, and the barber is busy shaving customers and settling their tails. An ancient scribe, with horn spectacles well on his nose, is writing a letter for some love-sick swain, and a knot of ten or twelve idlers gather round to hear it. Other crowds have collected about ballad-singers and street-musicians; and we are told that if it was the kite season old gentlemen of grave aspect would be flying paper dragons one hundred feet long. A ceaseless throng, on foot and horseback, is in motion through all these stationary bodies. Soldiers ride by with guns slouched across their shoulders, and others armed with only bows and arrows. Cows and camels lie about the sideways, and the camels are loaded with sacks of coal. A huge red umbrella appears, and a mandarin follows it, borne in his chair, and with ragged lictors clearing the way. We pass a Pekin cabstand, both the carts and the mules rather faded. A golden streak of fire rushes out of the smithy, and urchins stay and watch it as they do at home. A blind man treads his way by beating a doleful tune upon a tambourine. Old men and young men carry sticks to which birds are attached by a slight thread under the wing, and a good bird may cost as much as £2. There is a sound, not of revelry, but of mournful stringed instruments, and banners gleam in the distance unsteadily in the press; it is a wedding procession, we are told, and for an hour the procession flows slowly by; coolies, who have flung scarlet cloaks over their native poverty; bearers with huge structures, supposed to be bride's presents, sometimes in chairs, sometimes on flat trays; and instruments of music, banner-poles, sedan chairs, heraldic shields, tablets coolies, trays follow in a confused and broken line as if they had no natural beginning or end. Overhead there is a musical whirr, incessant but not unpleasing; a tiny lyre is inserted in a pigeon's tail, some say to guard it from birds of prey, and the wind makes the music in its flight.—Good Words.

Automatism in Portrait Painting.

Dr. Gaetan Delaunay, in a recent article on this subject, writes that he has often observed that a designer making an extemporaneous sketch of a head involuntarily reproduces his own portrait; and that, having made a scientific study of the fact, he has reached conclusions which are curious, though they are not fully demonstrated. He has been informed by teachers of drawing, painters, and designers, of whom he has made inquiries, that a person tracing with a pencil figures of spontaneous conception will always produce the same head unless he is copying from or imitating a model. M. Lyon's, Professor in the Medical Faculty at Paris, states substantially the same principle in his work on the brain, and explains it by a theory of automatism, or habit. It is illustrated in the works of the French caricaturists. A degree of resemblance may be traced between the design and the designer, whether we consider the work as a whole or in part. Sex exercises a similar influence; little girls amusing themselves at drawing will generally be found making female figures, little boys male figures. Dr. Delaunay has also observed that an artist seeking to represent would always draw the same woman, and has learned from designers that the woman who thus persistently came from their pencil was of the type which they preferred to all others, the one who figured in their dreams. If we have a drawing-class of fifty pupils, having a respectable degree of skill, all drawing at the same head, theoretically we should have fifty heads more or less well executed, but all resembling the model, and consequently one another. This will not, however be the case. The drawings will differ from each other so obviously that, instead of fifty copies of the same head, there will be fifty different heads. Each pupil executes a different head from the one drawn by his neighbor, and more or less resembling his own head. A professor of drawing in a lyceum in Paris, says: "When our pupils are competing for a prize, they have the same model in view, but each one in copying from it produces himself more or less. We may, by simply examining his design, determine whether his face is round, oval, or square, whether it has projecting forms, or a smooth contour with few irregularities." The same is the case with sculptors, and even with costumers, who were found by Dr. Delaunay to be most apt to have figures of their own style in view in fitting their customers. —Popular Science Monthly

SECULAR NEWS.

Charlotte is to have an ice factory.

Our young friend and enterprising stockman, W. H. Hargrove, of this place, sold last week to Mr. Charlie Ross, of Warrenton, Va., about 200 sheep, averaging about 100 pounds gross—all the growth of this county.—Lexington Exchange.

The first car-load of sawed lumber shipped from the western slope of the Blue Ridge was sent to Charleston last week by the Ewart Manufacturing Company.—Hendersonville Courier.

Mr. George Allen's famous four acre lot has paid him well. We learn that he has sold nearly six hundred dollars worth of peas from it, and we see that it is already planted in cotton.—Newbernian.

The convicts at work on the Mt. Airy Division of the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railroad are wild with excitement over the prospect of finding treasure in an Indian mound which they have struck. Tradition has it that a large amount of specie was buried in this mound at the battle of Guilford Court House, and many people living in the vicinity believe that tradition tells the truth.—Greensboro Patriot.

All Endorse It.

The Recorder, Americus Ga., says: "Clerks, Senators, Representatives, Doctors, Lawyers, Citizens, in public and private life, are testifying by the thousands, and over their own signatures, that a remedy has been found for Bright's Disease of the Kidneys and for Diabetes; these are respectively known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure."

CHICAGO, ILL., Jan. 20, 1880.

H. H. WARNER & CO.—GENTLEMEN:—Have suffered long and severely with acute kidney disease, trying everything without success. Finally struck your great remedy; am taking it at present, with wonderful success. Use this as you please.

Very respectfully,

THE BURDEN WHICH NEITHER WE NOR OUR FATHERS WERE ABLE TO BEAR.

Some passages of Scripture seem directly to contradict other passages. Thus in one place in the New Testament we read, I came not to destroy the law; "Not one jot or tittle of the law shall fail" and in another place "The law is a burden which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear."

Again: (in Rom. 7:12) "The law is holy and the commandment holy, just and good," while again (Gal. 2:21) "If righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain." There are only a few of the many texts which seem to contradict each other I do not think this apparent contradiction can be explained away by saying that one class of texts refer to one part of the law, which was to be abrogated;—and that the other class refer to another part which was to be retained. We involve ourselves in many difficulties and perplexities when we adopt this mode of reasoning.

No we must abide by only what "is written." We attempt to obey the law in our own strength and without relying upon the grace of Christ, it becomes a "burden which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear." Yet it is our duty to know the law—every jot and tittle of it:—for it is the house of Moses built by Christ. And the apostle James, in Council, declared that it was necessary for the apostles to preach Moses because (mark the reason) "Moses hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." He did not say that the law of Moses was abrogated—a past dispensation, far from it—but in effect, this: "You, a little band of twelve men, do not preach those doctrines of the Bible, which are already preached by thousands of others:—the law which they preach is holy, just and good, but it stops short of the main point—the doctrine of justification by faith. It is a good thing to be zealous of the law, but you understand it wrongly if your understanding of it does not lead you to Christ. Christ said "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me."

This is the gist of the argument. "All who do not believe Moses will truly believe Christ." And in order to convert that wonderful people, the Jews, it will be necessary for Christians of the present day to become like those primitive Christians in Jerusalem, numbering thousands, and all of whom were "zealous of the law."

The modern Jews know, by centuries of experience, that their law is "good." Read the following extract, and see how great is the physical advantage which the observance of the Mosaic law gives them over Christians.

"The vitality of Jews, compared with that of Christians, from tables of vital statistics made up from observation in the great centres of civilization, England, Germany, France, etc., show in the first five years of life of one hundred Jewish children twelve die; of one hundred Christian children twenty-four die. Among one hundred Christians thirty-eight reach fifty years; among one hundred Jews fifty four attain fifty years. Thirteen Christians in a hundred attain seventy years, while forty-six of one hundred Jews twenty-seven attain seventy years. One quarter of all Christians attain only six years and eleven months; one quarter of all Jews attain twenty-eight years and three months."

Gen. T. J. (Stonewall) Jackson, tried the force of argument, on one occasion, on the various opinions of a Jew. The Jew listened carefully and attentively to all he had to say, and then replied, "Sir our religion produces better results than yours:—there are fewer drunkards amongst Jews; fewer inmates of jails and houses of vice;—why should we change a better for a worse religion?" Had the fellow been preached to by one of the old Fathers of St. James' Church at Jerusalem, the answer to his remark would have been: "You do right to be zealous of your law—it is holy, a divine law; but unless it leads you to Christ, you do not fully understand all its teachings, either for this world or the world to come."

There is another sense in which we may not understand the phrase "the burden which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear." To illustrate it—two physicians were holding a consultation over a person who was very ill. "Why do you not give her————?" (naming a certain medicine) asked the physician who had been called in by the other. "Because her heart is so much diseased that it cannot bear it," replied the family practitioner. She was suffering with two diseases, and the remedies used for one aggravated the other. Many Christians are in this poor lady's case. The Mosaic law is holy, just and good, but if our attention is called away, for one moment from the cross, we begin to become self-righteous. We are two much diseased to use any but the great remedy, yet if we were able to take both, it would be much better for us. Those Jerusalem Christians who were "zealous of the law" probably did not fall into self-righteousness;—yet others might. St. James, however, thought a little portion of the Mosaic law was so essentially necessary, that the twelve apostles, as well as the thousands of Mosaic preachers, who taught in the synagogues, must teach them. These laws were, to abstain from "pollutions of idols, from fornication, from things strangled and from blood."

What right have we?—what right have Christians of any age to ignore those solemn injunctions? Even while thousands of Jewish priests were thundering the laws of Moses in the ears of the people in every synagogue and on every Sabbath day, the little band of twelve were also commanded to teach these things! How immensely important they must have been!

That the whole Jewish law is important, is proved by European statistics as stated, although four thousand years have elapsed since Moses gave them. But these few are the most important of all:—that is, of what we call the Mosaic laws. I think abstinence from blood may mean abstinence from animal food; but here again we are hedged in by the command not to judge each other in regard to food. Quarreling about food is another thing which, with our weak tempers, "we are not able to bear." For that reason we are forbidden to touch upon it. "But he that discerneth is damned if he eat, for whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

The true Christian does not avail himself of any liberty which wounds the conscience of his brother; "I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend. (1 Cor. 8:13).

Allow me to make one more reference to Stonewall Jackson. A friend of his laughed at his scruples about getting his mail out of the post office on Sabbath. Jackson laughed too, and remarked quietly, "It may be a sin to get it out; it is certainly not a sin to let it stay until Monday, and therefore I will be on the safe side." How gently indulgent to others, how sternly rigorous to himself!

So with regard to food; it may be a sin to eat flesh and drink wine; it is certainly not a sin to abstain.

The passage "If righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain," is a fearful warning to those who obey the law from selfish motives. But another wise saying is this: "Good works (obedience to the law) cannot save us, but without good works, we can't be saved." A true belief in the law will lead us to Christ; a true belief in Christ will force us into obedience to the law.

Luther's reformation has restored to the Church the New Testament; let a new reformation restore to us the Old. Let strong self-denying Christians band themselves together, into a new Church of St. James, and armed with a holy zeal for the law, devote themselves to the work of converting the Jews. And then, oh then, when that great work is accomplished, what may we not expect?

H. M. I.

Charlotte, N. C.

"TAKING IT EASY."

The grammar of the colloquialism above written is questionable, but the idea it suggests is too often unquestionably bad. We are naturally indolent, self-indulgent and unwilling to take trouble Stimulus of the right kind, and not sedative, is needed by most of us. Unless in peculiar circumstances, he is an unwise counsellor who bids us "take it easy."

There may be such circumstances in the physical or mental condition of the laborer, or in the kind of work being done. A man's health may render moderation in work desirable, or the work may be of a kind that to "rush things" would spoil it. To hold on to an undertaking with the brain in a chronic fever, or to march a regiment five miles an hour when two hours are available, is folly, and may be mischievous; but setting aside cases of this kind that have to be determined their merits, we should resist the soft counsels of our own hearts, or of smooth-spoken friends, when they bid us "take it easy."

For—to begin with—we do that usually with the most satisfaction into which we put ourselves most thoroughly. Dreamy, drowsy, half-and-half working becomes uninteresting. It is when we are all alive that we have vivid enjoyment. "I like it," a healthy worker will be apt to say, "it so entirely occupies me." And he is a hundred times happier than the man who is condemned to the merest routine, and whose greatest afternoon excitement is the chewing of a toothpick as as his eyes lazily follow the passing public. Few positions are less comfortable to a man who has anything in him than that in which he has little or nothing to do. If you want to enjoy your work, do not "take it easy."

For work is not always to be had in many lines of effort. The human race is annually growing in numbers and the world is not growing bigger. Human ingenuity is, moreover, making, "hands" of the mechanical sort—hands that do not "strike," or go for shorter hours, which in many directions are superseding the old "hands." Competition is keen wherever there are prizes, and there is hardly any lot more pitiable than his who must live by work and cannot get it. But the chances—if there is any chance in it—are always in favor of the man who puts all his force into what he does, and against him who slumbers over it. It was cool and witty of Charles Lamb to set off against his being the last to come to the office, that he was the first to go away. But Charles was a peculiar man and could take liberties; and every man is not in an easy Government office. If Lamb had been an ordinary clerk in ordinary employment he would have lost his place for "taking it easy."

Excellence is never reached on the plan of taking it easy; what is valuable costs. Cheap things are commonly worthless. Poor pay is often the only thing that could be afforded, for it represents poor work. Here is Captain Carver astonishing London by the rapidity, accuracy, and one may say, the grace, with which he shatters the glass balls in the air. Two or three at a throw going into pieces under his quick and sure bullets, his eye and his fire moving together, even when he has to turn while his ball is in the air. But he did not come to do it by taking it easy. Macaulay did not become a great writer, Thomson a great poet, Bacon a great thinker, Luther a great reformer, Napoleon a great fighter, Whitfield a great preacher, nor Watt nor Stephenson great inventors, by taking it easy. In government, in art, in mechanics, in law, in medicine, the men of mark have been the toilers who put their entire strength into what they did. Young man, when you are resolving to "take it easy," you are making up your mind—however admirable your necktie or artistic your moustache—to be commonplace. Even strong and vigorous minds have often fallen below the level which they early attained, by taking it easy. How many great names could be indicated in literature that are known mainly by their earliest efforts. Then they were on their mettle. They had to do their utmost, if they were to do anything. Time, pains, care, revision, were given to their writings before they were ventured before the world. Their best things were brought out in the best way. Later they had an assurance of success. Their names were made. But the works they then wrote are not bought as were those that made their names. Who reads Sir Walter Scott's later poems as he reads "The Lay," or even "Paradise Regained" as he reads "Paradise Lost?" There is no evidence that Burke, or Dr. Johnson, with his great, rollicking, hearty, hard-worked nature, ever sat up all night to read any of Miss Burney's later works: but the former paid that sincere compliment to "Evelina." Great preachers have been described as men who can preach great sermons but rarely do it. If for some cause they fall into the way of "taking it easy," they will do it rarely indeed. And they are not at all singular. All great results represent great exertion.

"But," it may be asked, "is there to be no rest, no quiet, no repose in one's life?" Ah! we are not talking about life, but about work. Take rest, by all means, at proper times, in proper places, in proper ways. But even in taking rest some method is needed, and one may "take it" so "easy" that it will be irksome instead of restful, and the memory of it unsatisfactory. Absolute idleness is poor rest, unless one is sleeping. See new objects, get new ideas, make new exertions, move on new lines, bring a new set of muscles—bodily or mental—into use; and do it heartily, and you rest, and so rest as to be in many ways a better furnished worker when you resume work. To let weeks pass in which—like the man's idea of comfort in church—one sits still and thinks about nothing, is to prepare one's self for that habitual absent mindedness which has not always the plea of great genius behind it. One would like to see a strong vigorous worker even resting in character. It is not given to every man as to Prof. Wilson to climb mountains and to traverse moors, like a deer, or to be equally at home above or below the waters of the Westmoreland lakes which he so much loved, and where he could amuse himself by falling overboard, giving a ducking to the boatman who jumped after him, and after a gambol with him in the water, setting him back again in his boat—but the great, intense, hearty being that appears in such vehement rest is just the nature to laugh or cry in print with a laughing or weeping reader, or to lecture in the dusk with a fervor and force that stop the students' note-taking, as they sit still and gaze on the face that reflects so vividly the enthusiasm of the poet and scholar.—Dr. John Hall.

TAKING COMFORT AS WE GO ON IN LIFE.

Sooner or later, friends, the time for folded hands will come to us all. Whether or not we cease from hurry and worry now, we shall one day shut our eyes upon it, and lie still, untrondled by the stir and fret of the things about us. Why not take comfort as we go on? You, proud mother of a beautiful, active boy, of what use will it be to you by-and-by to remember how exquisitely fine was his raiment, how daintily spread his bed, and how costly and profuse his toys? What the child needs is mothering, brooding, tender resting on your heart; and he needs it every step of the way from baby days to manhood. Take the comfort of your opportunities. Never mind though the dress be coarse, and the food plain, and the playthings few, but answer the questions, tell the stories, spare the half-hour at bedtime, and be merry and gay, confidential and sympathetic, with your boy. And you, whose graceful young daughter is just blushing out into the bloom and freshness of a wondrously fair womanliness, do not be so occupied with your ambition for her, and your desire for her advancement in life, that you let her ways and your own fall apart. Why are her friends, her interests, and her engagements, so wholly separate and distinct from yours? Why does she visit here and there, and receive visitors from this and that home, and you scarcely know the people by sight? You are losing precious hours, and the comfort you ought to take is flying fast away on the wings of time that are never overtaken.

We lose a great deal of comfort through our indecision about matters of small moment. Shall we clean the upper front chamber today or to-morrow? Shall we trim the new bonnet with black ribbon and rosebuds, or with gay ribbon and lace? Shall we drop into Aunt Mary's for a half-hour of pleasant gossip, or shall we stay at home and finish our new dress? It is perfectly amazing how much thought, and judgment, and reasoning, is thrown away on things which are of comparatively slight importance, which could be settled without any mental fuss worth speaking of, and yet which cause us to fidget and worry time too precious for such waste.

As for the comfort we lose through unbelief, that is simply beyond our power of calculation. Who has not made herself miserable in thinking of the things that the future hides? The burdens of to-morrow crush many a sensitive soul, although the Master's words stand firm, that "To-morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof." Strangely enough, the habit of fretting, like other morbid habits, after awhile begets a certain appetite for fretting, and we take comfort in repining, and find pleasure in woe. None the less do we suffer spiritual loss by this custom, and constantly, in our homes and personal experience, furnish illustrations of falling from grace.

Do not walk with peas in your shoes if you can help it. Gird thyself with strength, O desponding one. And even when clouds are thickest remember that, could the eyes be opened, even then the mountains over against us might be seen crowded with shining ones hasting to the relief of God's own.—Christian at Work.

TOKENS.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

Each day upon the yellow Nile, 'tis said,
Joseph, the youthful ruler, cast forth wheat,
That haply, floating to his father's feet—
The sad old father who believed him dead—
It might be sign in Egypt there was bread,
And thus the patriarch past the desert sands
And scant oasis fringed with thirsty green
Be lured toward the love that yearned unseen.
So flung and scattered, ah! by what our hands,
On the swift rushing and invisible tide,
Small tokens drift down from far, fair lands,
And say to us, who in the desert bide,
"Are you athirst? Are there no sheaves to bind?
Beloved, here is fullness; follow on and find."

ROAMING IN EUROPE.

I had thought to write to you from our summer's abiding place—Interlaken—hoping that some of its beauty might filter through pen and ink into a faint picture of our lovely surroundings. A summer there serves as a tonic to both body and mind. One can scarcely remain ill in its delicious air—nor very wretched in the midst of its great beauty.

Interlaken, as its name denotes, lies between two lakes, both very lovely—one reflecting the deep green of its protecting mountains; the other, more in the open, blue as the blue sky spread above it. These two lakes are connected by the rapid, foaming, unnavigable river Aar, in the bended arm of which, nestle the twin villages, Interlaken and Unterseen. Very loving indeed are the two little places, as it cannot be told where the one ends and the other begins. Interlaken is perhaps the more modern of the two, and is built up chiefly of hotels, shops, and that ilk, though, as well as Unterseen, it possesses still a few corners sweet with reminiscences of past days.

What a curious sense of pleasure they give us, these old places; quite different from our modern abodes fresh with paint and varnish! Interlaken has still an old monastery—a picturesque, cool-looking, ivy-covered, old building, where many a monk has lived, and prayed, and died. Over a hundred years have passed since the very last one laid him down to rest with his little sum of griefs and joys. The structure has been appropriately converted into a church, indeed I may say churches, for in different rooms, under the same roof, worshippers of every denomination send up their psalms of prayer and praise, separated only by the lath and plaster of the walls.

Unterseen, too, has its pretty little corner left from two hundred years ago. A tiny church with a tall pointed belfry, from one side of which an old clock still points out the hours of day and night, while its face, though faded, bears witness that in its youth it was like Joseph's coat, gay with many colors. Around the church stand a few old houses, their little windows peeping curiously out from under their heavy overhanging roofs. They are a group of good old friends, whose friendship is the closer that they are quite alone among the smart new cottages of nineteenth century birth and growth. The two villages are built for a mile or two along one bank of the river, across which three or four bridges lead into the narrow, fertile valley that lies between the other bank and the nearer mountains.

These mountains rise to a great height on either side of the valley, and in the varied lights of morning, mid-day and evening, deepen into every shade of green, brown and amethyst. I have seen the eastern mountains in our own country, but they never so charmed me as do these Swiss giant hills. One must live in their shadow for a month or two, adequately to enjoy their fascination. It grows upon you daily until you learn to love their rugged old sides, and wonder no longer that the Swiss can die of home-sickness. Just in front of Interlaken rise the Jungfrau, Monch and Eiger, three magnificent, snow-capped old peaks, that look down in venerable, silent dignity upon the lesser hills and the sweet, green valley. This latter has its ruin, with its traditional story, a story of oppression, revolt, and bloodshed, of a peasantry maddened by wrong, and a princely house destroyed. All that remains now is peaceful and pleasant enough, the birds occupying without dispute the moss-grown walls.

Over the length and breadth of the valley, dominates the weird face of the Harter-mauli, or man of the Harter Mountain. This face is a rock which bears a remarkable and ghostly resemblance to the human countenance, is away up towards the top of the precipitous Harter, its pale gray complexion always distinctly visible against the dark green of the surrounding pines. The peasants tell a story of the face. So many years ago that record of the time is lost, a young monk, wearying of his quiet convent and joyless life, stole away from his cloister, and, mingling among the village folk, fell deeply in love with a young novice, who, like himself, was weary of her vows. Love begat love, and they twain were agreed upon a night, when all should sleep, to leave the valley, and cross the Harter, to find themselves a home in some unknown happy country. They toiled painfully up the slaty, precipitous side, and, reaching the top, turned to look once again over the quiet village that had held them unwilling captive, and to breathe happy sighs of relief and joy. Alas! their joy was premature; for the avenging fates, jealous of their happiness, struck the young monk into stone, buried him in the mountain, leaving uncovered only his face, grey and scowling over the valley beneath. From his unhappy and joyless height he looks down, ever frowning upon the merry-making, the joys and loves of the young folk of every generation. How it must cut him to the soul, poor old monk! Not one taste of joy himself all these weary centuries, his hunger only mocked by the thousands of glad voices ascending year after year to his jealous ears. The hot summer sun smites him, the winter snow and ice rest in the furrows of his aged face, the tears of melting spring trickle into his beard of grass, the grey growth of a hundred years—but the caressing sun, the gentle snow, the tender, softening tears can bring no gentleness to the sinister face that broods unchanged through all the seasons. Neither history nor tradition tells of the fate of his companion. Let us hope that she lives in the wild Alpine roses that grow around him, or in the dew that caresses, or even the wind that blows always over the grey monk of the Harter mountain.

Switzerland has an unhappy side; for so many of its people are parched by that "dry wind that blows from dolorous poverty." So little of the soil comparatively is productive, that it is over-crowded. All they can raise with the hardest toil scarce suffices for life, and many families live upon food that would in our country feed only one hearty hungry man. Many live for months without one mouthful of meat, their only food a scanty supply of poor potatoes, black, heavy bread, and poisonous adulterated coffee. The Protestant clergyman at Interlaken told me that he had been among these people for years, and their misery made him heart-sick. The wretched nutrition added to the ceaseless hard labor causes many children to become deformed or idiots, and it is sad to see the number of pinched, vacant, little faces—faces so miserably and prematurely old, they seem to bear the suffering of many generations—so vacant that one is tempted to believe that these unhappy ones have been denied the gracious gift of a soul. It is a sad stain upon the beauty of the little country. The people in this part of the country profess the creed of Calvin, but a great part of Switzerland remains devoted to the Roman Catholic faith, and shrines with wooden or stone crucifixes are numerous in the fields, and by the roadsides. It is touching to see the devotions of the peasants sometimes as they kneel before some of these places. Whatever blessings of prosperity or happiness they invoke, they sorely need, poor things!—Cor. St. Louis Presbyterian.

THE NEW TYPE.

She is the outgrowth of our latest and best civilization, the direct offspring of the strength and tenderness of Protestant Christianity. She is a working woman and an old maid. She is usually a teacher, but may be found in other walks of life. Her eye is bright, her complexion rosy, not a gray thread is in her hair, nor a wrinkle in her calm forehead. Her years cannot be guessed from her looks, yet when she frankly tells her age, her hearer thinks she has, unwomanlike, exaggerated. Her step is firm as it should be, must be, in a shoe with a broad sole and a low heel, and she shakes hand with a warm, manly (alas that it should be so!) grasp, though her hand has all the softness of a woman's. She avoids every extreme in dress, for she feels that no true woman will call attention to herself by her costume, but is an ardent lover of water-proof cloak and shoes in wet weather. Keeping herself in good health by careful, yet not selfish and over-anxious attention to the laws of hygiene, she is usually in good spirits, abhorring "the blues" not only for their own misery's sake, but from a deep religious conviction that they belie the color of a healthy, God-fearing soul. She goes out to her work with cheerful heart and willing hand, and a face so bright with the full gladness of life that she seems a daily morning gleam to the people who have learned to set their run down clocks by her punctual passing by. The young girls with whom she comes in daily contact look to her as to an ideal—nor are they ever disappointed in getting just the love and sympathy they need—a look, a book, a caress, a word fitly spoken. And the boys—they worship her. She is to them the very woman—a strange commingling of mother, sister, friend, to whom they give their confidence on the noblest thoughts and ambitions of their dawning manhood—since God has made us so that we give our confidences more readily to those without our own households, who never see us in the half-dress our minds and souls at times get on. And many boys have been known, under her gracious influence, to declare boldly for the Master and the right, to "cease to do evil and learn to do well." I myself have known her in her school-room to so charm them by her calm requests that they have committed to memory large portions of the best minds' best thoughts, only to give her pleasure. By-and-by "her boys and girls," as she calls them, bring their husbands and wives to see the dear friend of their youth, and call their daughters by her dear name, and pray God the little ones may grow in her sweet likeness. If she has, or had a sorrow, God only knows it; you and I can only suspect it from a dreamy, far-away look in her eyes, coming sometimes when in the midst of very happy people. Her heart is open to every human cry, her hand ready for every good work, her mind alive to every step of progress, and her soul on the alert for every revelation of God's word and will. She deserves to be canonized above St. Theresa, and doubtless would have been in an earlier day in the Romish Church. But she founds no orders, builds no convents, does not shut herself in a narrow cell, vibrating between states of exalted ecstasy and ascetic humility. She lives a strong healthful, beautiful life in the midst of the working-day world.—Presbyterian.

NARROW LIVES.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

An obscure life is not of necessity a narrow one. There are aged people, laid aside by reason of infirmities, from taking an active share in the world's work, who still retain their bright vivid interest in whatever is going on, and who live largely outside and beyond themselves. There are invalids, seldom able to venture from the seclusion of home, who diffuse a benign and wide-reaching influence, which blesses hearts, and strengthens hands, in a way that only the Master sees. To most of us come hours when we sit in the shadow, when our defeated plans and broken hopes seem to be strewn like driftwood on the shore of life; and then, perhaps, we despair of such accomplishment as we would honestly desire, such achievement as would be rewarding and successful, in our day and generation. Let us not lose courage. The Master has another measure of success, and judges in a tenderer and truer fashion, than we can, of our loss and gain. If our opportunities be few, and our privileges limited, we are responsible for what we have and never for what we have not.

The trouble is that many of us, some in our little retired nooks, and some on our hill-tops of social advantage, are willing and contented to live narrow lives. Selfishness is invariably narrow, and nothing is so subtle as selfishness. The home duties of a wife and mother are her first and nearest duties. They rightly take precedence of others. But there are wives and mothers, in all our towns and villages, who are making the daily mistake of so absorbing and concentrating their entire energy in the kitchen and the nursery that they have neither time nor strength for anything else. Unconsciously they are growing narrow. They are bringing everything in life to the rigid rule of an inelastic custom. They test their own and their neighbors' conduct by an arbitrary code, which is good of its kind, but which is not susceptible of the least modification, because their point of view has not varied a hand-breadth in years. Many excellent mothers fail of touching their children's lives, at the critical moment when youth approaches maturity, from this reason. Their fidelity to their children's comfort, health, and well-being, has prevented their keeping pace, as mothers should, with the mental and spiritual developments going on in their homes. Sons and daughters turn away from the love that she has sheltered and brooded over them always, and seek other counsellors, sometimes unsafe and unprincipled ones, because the narrowness of the mother repels them.

It seems to me there is nothing on earth much more beautiful, attractive, and inspiring, than the picture presented to us by some dear feeble woman, unable to enter with great zeal into the details of any labor, but able to help and cheer those who are bearing the burden, by her sympathy, intelligence and love. How much the Church owes to those older members who are seldom able to be present at the prayer-meetings, who only now and then are happy in sitting in their pews, or going to the communion table, yet who love her solemnities, and pray for her progress. These keep in mind her missionaries and her ministers. These take time to name her wants before God, and plead, with faith unfaltering, for His spirit to abide in her temples. These, with enthusiasm kindled at the divine altar, never despair of the prodigal in the far-away land, but anticipate the hour when he shall return to his father's house.

It is a narrow life you are living, friend, if in if you care only for your own profit, pleasure, and enrichment. If you cannot put yourself aside for one who sits in the gloom of bereavement, or the stern pressure of pain, with compassion and consolation, you are narrowing your own power of sympathy. If you cannot deny yourself an hour's ease at your own fire, a bit of ornament or luxury in your dress, or a little rest in the morning or the night for love's sake, you are dwarfing your soul's growth in Christ-like gentleness.

Some of us have known girls, beautiful, noble, and generous, dowered with wondrous charms of mind and person, and we have seen them entering womanhood, as we might have watched a queen at her coronation. They have gone on a few years, the admired and beloved treasures of their own kindred, or the idolized wives of men worthy of them. But, alas for the unfulfilled promise of the imperial blossoming! These, commonplace, vain, and capricious women should not have been the ripened fruit of buds and blooms so fair. It is idle to charge the change upon lack of health, or home care, or any superficial cause. The trouble is deeper. Nobody stands still in this world. Those who do not advance, retrograde; and the brilliant, fascinating, and elegant girl of twenty, unless she lead a narrow, selfish, and too introspective life, should not remain stationary. She should become the gracious, dignified, and lovable woman of forty; the saintly, pure, and almost heavenly woman of sixty.

There are those who reverence sorrow as God's great educator, and think that grand characters are disciplined only by the sharp strokes of adversity. This is but a partial truth. Sorrow is one of God's ministers. So is joy. So is faith. So is tender household love. So is prosperity. The peach grows mellow in the sun. The rose takes on its crimson tint, and emits its sweetest fragrance under June's skies. Trouble rightly accepted, brings forth the peaceable fruit of righteousness. Sometimes if resisted, it hardens and crushes. We are not to dictate to our Father. We are to be sure that He knows best, and that whatever He sends, He sends in love. And as He placed us in a wide and weary world, with something to do for Him, every day it behooves us to see to it that we live, not narrowly, nor niggardly, nor grudgingly, but with liberal hands, and eyes looking trustfully up to Him.—*S. RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

It is proposed to bring forward at an early date a motion in reference to the disestablishment of the Church of England.

Mr. W. C. Jones, of the Elms, near Warrington, a Manchester merchant, has presented to the Liverpool Bishopric Fund £5,000 on account of Canon Ryle being appointed. Mr. Jones is distinguished for his christian liberality to the Church Missionary Society and other institutions of the Church of England.

For the first time since the reign of Henry VIII. a military mass is now celebrated in the Tower of London for the benefit of the Roman Catholic officers and men of the Guards stationed there. This result has been mainly brought about by the efforts of the Rev. Father Bowden, who was formerly an officer in the household brigade.

To the French pilgrims, who were received by the Pope on Saturday, his Holiness made a brief speech, in which he stated that even faithful France is giving him concern, but that in the struggle he would not flinch from his duty as Pontiff in defending the interests of religion, which, he said, are the interest of peoples.

A party of eight Africans have arrived in London in company with two missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, from Central Africa, the district through which Stanley recently carried his explorations. The party is composed of six men and two boys, one quite young, all of whom show considerable intelligence. They bring presents for the Queen, and are desirous of promoting commercial relation between Europe and the regions of Africa from which they have come.

Tan Khai-lin, the first convert of the Swatow mission of the English Presbyterian Church, was baptized by the Rev. George Smith in September, 1859. During twenty-one years he has been a faithful witness for the truth, and as the native superintendent of the Training College he still continues to render excellent service to the mission. Since that first baptism, 880 adults have been received into the communion of the Church at Swatow, and at the present time, after deducting the many losses by death, those from removals, and the names also of some who are now under discipline, there remain 593 in full communion. During last year the number of adult baptisms was 56. Of the 18 members who died during the year, most gave pleasing evidence, we are told, that in their last hours they were sustained and comforted by the hope of the Gospel.

A correspondent of the London Weekly Review says: "The Pope, the Cardinals, the Ambassadors to the Holy See, the Papal nobility, and the students of the Propaganda, filled on Monday the vast hall of the consistory for the Grand Academia Polyglotta, prepared in honor of the Pope by the college. It consisted of poetic addresses in forty-nine languages of Asia, Africa, and Europe, from ancient Hebrew to modern Icelandic, from Galla and Cinghalese, to French and English, interspersed with set pieces of music of various nationalities, executed by the Papal choir, under the direction of Maestro Mustara. At the close an album with an Italian translation of the addresses was presented by the college to the gratified Pontiff."

Bishop Gregg, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has been presented with a purse of 100 guineas in celebration of the second anniversary of the opening of his church at Southend. The Bishop said his congregation was as united as any congregation in the land. The cause had been honored by the attacks of eleven bishops in the House of Convocation, but he did not think the committee appointed to report upon the Reformed Episcopal Church would ever do so. That Church now extended as far north as Scotland, as far South as Canada, as far east as Southend, and as far west as Wales. Within the previous twenty-four hours he had been asked to license a place of worship in London, and within the last three days to open another in the north. He had also been asked to extend the cause to New Zealand and Australia.

The Rev. J. G. Gregson, a well-known missionary, is engaged in a temperance missionary tour through India, in the course of which he will visit every garrison and military station. He reports a total of more than 8,000 abstainers in the Indian army, and societies are being rapidly formed among the various classes of the civil service, railway employees, &c., &c.

Miss Maria West is doing a novel work at her "Rest and Coffee Room" in Smyrna. About thirty shoe-blacks, mostly Jewish lads, are in the habit of coming every day, when their "shining" is done, to the Scriptures. Bibles have been called for in eighteen languages, and many wish to purchase. Preaching services are conducted for an hour each Sunday evening.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1880.

EARLY CHRISTIANS—THEIR LOVE.

Neither perfection nor infallibility belonged to the early Church. False teachers troubled the apostles. Yet the first two centuries after Christ's death is the heroic age of the Church. If full and exact records of that period existed, nearly every ecclesiastical controversy might be settled, and an almost inspired commentary would expound the New Testament; for faith then closed in mortal combat with the frightful corruptions of the heathen world, and wrestled for foothold and life with superstition, ignorance, policy, Jewish and Pagan philosophies, and abounding worldliness. But antiquarians have preserved many charming pictures of Christian life.

It is interesting to look back fifteen hundred years and learn how deep and pure was the love of the early saints. It was not fashionable to love Jews held Gentiles aloof in their hot spiritual pride. Greeks, in their heyday of lofty nationality and culture, called everybody else barbarians. Romans could never amalgamate the nations—their arms subdued—into one homogeneous and living whole. Evil for evil was the law of heathen life. Selfishness was the life of heathen morality, and love of fame was mainly their highest motive. Friendship was ranked by Cicero as the next highest good to wisdom, and could exist only among social equals. For the barbarian or enemy there was no feeling, save that of contempt or hate. Seldom are the blessed virtues of magnanimity and clemency exalted in heathen ethics as noble in supplanting vindictiveness. They are rather connected with egotistic pride, or mere retraining from just retaliation under stoical apathy. Plutarch says that, in the imperial age, friendship had died out even in families, and the love of brothers and sisters was supposed possible only in a heroic age.

In such a time these simple-hearted early Christians believed this Scripture, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love to one another." So Justyn Martyr says, "We who hated and killed one another, and permitted not those of another nation, on account of their different customs, to live with us under the same roof, now since the appearing of Christ, live at the same table, and pray for our enemies." So even when differing with heretics, he says, "We are heathen still. Our prayer is to the same God. Our faith is in the same Saviour. We keep the same feasts." And Tertullian tells us that their love excited suspicion and censure among the heathen, who must hate and kill one another. Christians saluted each other, in Oriental fashion, with a holy kiss on admission to the Church, at the Lord's Supper, and in their religious assemblies, as a pledge of religious fellowship. At their Agapæ, or love-feasts, they sat down, after prayer, to a temperate repast. Their conversation was under consciousness that God heard them. Then water for their hands having been brought, and lights kindled, they sang Psalms of their own composition, or from the Bible, conducted the feast with prayer, and modestly returned home.

Their brotherly love was one sentimentality. After public worship the necessities of the poor, the orphaned, and the widowed were ascertained and provided for. Into the chests provided every one cast voluntary contributions for the Lord's work. A Christian, with his pastor's letter of commendation, could travel anywhere and be welcomed with cheerful hospitality. They feared lest it should be said at last to them, "I was a stranger, and ye took me not in." So remarkable was their hospitality that even the Emperor Julian, the Apostate, ordered an imitation of their kind rites to the poor throughout the Empire. The poor and humble found sweet rest in Christianity. The Church of Rome, A. D. 250, maintained 1,500 poor widows, besides the afflicted and needy. So did their liberality abound in their poverty or moderate wealth, that the heathen thought their riches very great. Eusebius exemplifies this by the following incident: Under the persecution of Decius, A. D. 251, a Roman officer demanded of Laurentius, a deacon in the Church of Rome, the Church's treasures; asking for three days in which to gather them, Laurentius summoned him, at the set time, to one of the churches, and exhibited the treasures in the immense multitude of aged, blind, lame, diseased, and destitute of every grade. "Come, Prefect, see the treasure of our God. You shall see a great court full of vessels of gold, and talents heaped up to the porches." Then pointing to them: "Behold the treasures I promised you. I add to these the widows and orphans; these are our pearls and precious stones—the crown of the Church. Take the wealth of Rome, for the Emperor, for yourself."

Unbounded as was their love for each other, it also overflowed to the whole community. Magnificent displays of neighborly love abounded, and proved their doctrine to be of God. It would be well for the Church of today to advert to the olden times, and learn to abound more and more in brotherly love; to forget all minor differences, and march under one shining banner of the Gospel of love, against all evil, and thus conquer the world for Jesus.

DEATH OF REV. WILLIAM H. ADAMS.

The News and Courier of Charleston, S. C., furnishes the following sketch of the life of Rev Wm. H. Adams who died in that city on the 15th inst.

"The community was deeply shocked on Saturday to learn of the sudden death of the Rev. W. H. Adams, at his temporary residence on Sullivan's Island. Mr. Adams was attacked a few days ago, with congestion of the liver, which unexpectedly took a typhoid form on Friday and resulted fatally at 3 o'clock on Saturday morning. Mr. Adams was a son of the late Rev. Nehemiah Adams, of Boston, Mass., and was himself born in that city. He was a graduate of Harvard College, and came to the South just before the war, locating in Washington, Ga., where he engaged in school-teaching. From there he entered the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C., 1861. Upon his graduation from that institution he accepted a call as pastor of a church in Eufaula, Alabama, where he remained until 1867. In that year he accepted a call as pastor of the Circular church in this city, and served in this field with marked zeal and ability until 1878, when he was called to Boston to the death-bed of his father. Upon the death of his father, Mr. Adams began the editing of his works and the preparation of a biographical sketch of his career, at the same time serving as pastor of a church at Lexington Mass. He returned to this city about a month or two ago and settled on Sullivan's Island in order to secure leisure and quiet for the literary work in which he was engaged. He had accepted a call to act as pastor of the Sullivan's Island Central church during the summer, and expected to begin his labor in this field on the first of June next. He leaves a widow and one child.

As a minister of the gospel, Mr. Adams was earnest and zealous. He was a man of fine natural gifts and solid acquirements, and was an indefatigable and faithful believer. In society his soft, gentle manners won for him hosts of warm friends wherever he went and to the clergy of this city he was especially dear. His death is a sore affliction, not only to the loved ones of his family circle, whom he leaves behind him, but also the community at large, and his place cannot easily be filled."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Thanks are tendered to Simonton Female Institute for an invitation to attend the Annual Concert, and to the marshals of Wake Forest College to attend the Commencement.

We congratulate our contemporary, the St. Louis Presbyterian, upon the marvelous improvement in its appearance under its new head and arrayed in its new types. May this improvement be the foreshadowing of increased prosperity and usefulness.

The General Assembly proceedings are interesting and we bespeak for them attentive perusal. Reports from the various committees in charge of the benevolent operations of the Church are cheering as showing increasing interest in all departments of Church work. Editorial comments are excluded from want of room in this issue.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters or this column.

A friend writing from Rockingham, N. C., informs us that the Presbyterian church at that place has secured the services of Rev. S. C. Alexander for the present year.

Rev. Prof. J. F. Latimer of Davidson College will sail on 29th inst., by the City of Chester of the Inman line, from New York for Germany. His postoffice address for the present will be, Poste restante, Leipzig, Germany.

At the communion service held in the Second Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C., on 23d inst., six young persons took their places for the first time at the Lord's table. Of these three received baptism. One gentleman was received by certificate.

The Tarboro Southerner says: "Rev. B. F. Marable, Evangelist from Wilmington Presbytery, has been delivering a series of discourses that for logical force, breadth of mental scope, powerful chain-work of argument, adroitly and pertinently put, mark him one of the intellectual pulpit giants of age. He speaks without notes and enchains the attention from beginning to end. We heard his two sermons on Sunday on "The Gospel" and "Who will be saved?" Those who heard them will not soon forget them nor the colossal divine, (mentally speaking) whose physical debility is a matter of so much concern to all. He is a broad-guage gospel expounder, whose services can be illy spared from the field."

PROCLAMATION OF THE KING OF SIAM.

I, Phya Tape Phra Chune, the royal representative of his Majesty the Supreme King of Siam at Chiongmai, and also for the Laos states and cities of Lakann and Lampoon, hereby make a proclamation to the princes and rulers and officers of various grades, and the common people, in the states and cities named: That His Majesty the King of Siam was graciously pleased to send me a royal letter with the royal seal, to the effect that D. B. Sickel, the U. S. Consul, had communicated to his Excellency the Foreign Minister of Siam a complaint, signed by the Rev. D. McGilvary and Dr. M. A. Cheek, against certain parties for molesting the Christians and compelling them to observe their old religious customs. The Foreign Minister had laid the subject before His Majesty, who had most graciously listened to the said complaint, and had given the following royal command in reference to the same. That religious and civil duties do not conflict, and that any religion that is seen to be true by any person may be embraced without any restraint; that the responsibility of a correct or a wrong choice rests on the individual making it; that there is nothing in the foreign treaty nor in the laws and customs of Siam to throw any restriction on the religious worship of any. To be more specific, if any person or persons wish to embrace the Christian religion they are freely allowed to follow their own choice; and that this proclamation is designed from this time forth to remove any fear that may have existed to the contrary. It is, moreover, strictly enjoined on the princes and rulers and friends of those who may wish to embrace Christianity, that they throw no obstacle in the way, and that no creed be enforced upon the Christians, nor work demanded of them, which their religion forbids them to hold or to do, as the worship and feasting of demons or departed spirits, and working on the Sabbath day. Except in case of war or other unavoidable or important work (and not feigned to be such) they are allowed to have the free observance of the Sabbath. No obstacle is to be thrown in the way of American citizens employing any person needed for their service. The treaty in this respect must be observed. Whenever this proclamation is known by the princes and rulers and officers and people, they are to beware that they violate no precept contained therein. Proclamation made on the 11th of the 12th waxing moon, year of the Tiger, and 11th year of His Majesty's reign.

The annual reports were called for. The nineteenth annual report of the executive committee on education was then read by the Rev. E. M. Richardson. The report shows a most encouraging condition of the educational interests of the Church during the past year. At a called meeting of the committee in June, 1879, the resignation of Dr. Waddell, chairman of the committee, was received and accepted. The committee elected the Rev. E. M. Richardson at this meeting to take charge of the work so long and so faithfully discharged by Dr. Waddell. Since his election Mr. Richardson has been actively engaged in the discharge of his arduous duties, working up the wants and necessities of the educational institutions of the Church, visiting the different synods, receiving contributions, attending to a voluminous correspondence, and preaching on occasions to vacant churches. Mr. Richardson's salary has been fixed at $50 a month while doing the work of his office at home, or at $1,500 a year with all necessary traveling expenses, while visiting the churches in the prosecution of his labors. In his report he stated that of $11,000 transmitted through the mails he had only sustained a loss of eleven dollars.

The committee report that during the past year ninety-five students have been enrolled from forty Presbyteries. Eighty-seven students have been aided by the committee to the amount of $9,512 60. Contributions have been made to the educational fund of the Church of $9,480 99, from fifty-seven Presbyteries, comprising 874 churches, and from miscellaneous collections $1,664 14, making a total of $11,145 13 contributed during the year to the cause of education. The total expenses of the committee amounted to $1,331 15. A balance in the treasury was reported of $191. The committee suggest that the Presbyteries should more carefully guard the reception and qualification of candidates. They recommend the observance of the usual Day of Prayer for colleges in all the churches.

The nineteenth annual report of the executive committee on foreign missions was made by Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D. D. The report is very full, and takes a comprehensive survey of the entire field of foreign missions, and makes a favorable exhibit of the efforts of the Church in this wide field of Christian labor. The whole force now engaged in the missionary work, and depending upon the funds of the treasury for their support, consists of eighty-three persons, of whom fifteen are ordained missionaries and twenty-one assistant missionaries from this country, ten native preachers, five native licentiates and thirty-two native helpers, variously engaged as teachers, colporteurs, &c.

The receipts from all sources, during the past year are $48,485 98, being an increase over those of the previous year of $2,251 23. The aggregate receipts are made up of 32,470 95 from churches and individuals; $10,031 36 from ladies' missionary associations; $5,983 67 from Sabbath schools. The general increase of $2,251 23 is made up of an increase of $442 73 from churches; $1,215 85 from ladies' missionary associations, and $493 26 from Sabbath schools. The principal part of the increase therefore is from ladies' missionary associations. The whole number of churches that have contributed is, in round numbers 1,200, the names and number in one Presbytery not having been given. The number of ladies' missionary associations is 211, which shows an increase of 28 new associations. The number of Sabbath schools that contributed is 232, which is less by three than contributed the previous year. The contributions from the ladies' missionary associations and from Sabbath schools make up about one-third of the whole missionary fund. The general debt has been reduced from $9,524 96 to $4,378 15. $1,682 56 have been paid on the Campinas debt (principal and interest,) bringing that debt down to $7,343. The increase of receipts on the one hand and reduction of indebtedness on the other have brought very material relief to the missionary treasury. The reduction of the indebtedness is more than twice as much as the increase of receipts.

The Missionary cost last year $325 48, a reduction of $116 97 less than the cost of the previous year. The committee estimate that the needed enlargement of the missionary work will require $75,000. In Brazil, during the last three or four years six churches have been organized, and though none of them have a large membership, they all have the prospect of growth and prosperity. A flourishing church has been gathered in Pernambuco, and the work is encouraging. Four young men at this mission have undertaken a course of study for the ministry, and are now engaged in the active work of colportage. The Chinese missions are in a satisfactory condition. Ten missionaries are engaged in this work, together with two native licentiates and seven native teachers. At Hangchow there are thirty-four communicants and the contributions from the natives amounted to $23. The mission schools are largely attended, and, in addition to the street chapels, are nine in number, with an attendance of 171 pupils. Bibles are furnished to the mission work by the American Bible Society. The facilities for the diffusion of religious knowledge, afforded by the Chinese written language, by the printing press, and by the cheapness of books, are simply wonderful. An octavo edition of the Gospels and Acts in the Soochow dialect has been published. The Greek missions are doing a good work, although out of a large number of applicants only five have been admitted into full membership during the year. In Italy and Mexico the missionary work has been pushed forward with gratifying results. The work among the Indians has also been pressed with much success, and there are now engaged in this mission seventeen missionary laborers in all, of whom six are native ordained ministers and two licentiates.

At this stage of the proceedings the Stated Clerk read a communication from Mrs. Ellen M. Watson, of Pittsburgh, Pa., chairman of the "National committee of the Women's Christian Temperance Union to secure a Day of Prayer in the Week of Prayer," asking the co-operation of the General Assembly in the object of the committee, and that "one day in 1881 be devoted to the cause of temperance progress," "believing that the liquor traffic and its results constitute the greatest obstacles in the way of the Gospel in every land."

Dr. Hooper said that the General Assembly had never recognized the Week of Prayer, and upon his resolution the latter was laid on the table.

An appeal or complaint from the Rev. J. A. White, of Chester, against the Synod of South Carolina, was referred to the judicial committee.

A letter from the Rev. W. B. Farr, St. Louis, Mo., containing the Christian salutations of that body, was read and referred to the committee on foreign correspondence.

The report of the executive committee of home missions was then made by the Rev. Richard McIlwaine, D. D., of Baltimore. The report makes a very gratifying statement of the progress of missionary work in the domestic field during the past year. 1,088 churches have contributed to the sustentation fund, an increase of 140; 795 to the evangelistic fund, an increase of 109; 979 to the invalid fund, an increase of 124. There has been a general gain throughout the Church. One hundred and twelve Sabbath schools contributed $761 36, and thirty-three ladies' societies contributed $586 75 to sustentation. The total receipts for all the funds have been $44,912 51—$6,274 56 more than last year. The receipts for the sustentation fund have been $19,250 43; for the evangelistic fund, $8,438 78; colored evangelistic fund, $347 33. The invalid fund has reached $10,253 02. The relief fund amounts to $34,000. Fifty-five Presbyteries have reported on the sustentation work.

Fifty-five Presbyteries report 59 per cent. of their ministers wholly engaged in ministerial labor 85 per cent. or about five-sixths of the working ministry are adequately supplied. The executive committee has paid out in appropriations to 156 ministers, representing about 400 churches, $15,630 41; $7,017 45 have been paid to 28 Presbyteries for 33 evangelists in the home mission work. Among the colored people the evangelistic work has been pushed forward with zeal, and the committee report 14 colored ministers, 18 churches and 4 candidates under the care of the Presbyteries; 122 families have received help from the invalid fund. Under the relief fund 83 persons have been paid up in full. Annuities have been paid to seven deceased ministers, amounting to $2,000. The whole amount paid from this fund since its creation is $10,440. The committee recommends the prosecution of missionary work among the seamen.

The Rev. Dr. Hazen, of Richmond, offered the report of the committee on publication. During the past year $8,041 11 were received from the churches and individuals for the publication interests. Only 868 churches of 1,892 contributed anything to the cause. The committee owes a debt with interest, exclusive of the mortgage on the house, of $10,870. In 1877 this debt amounted, in round numbers to $59,000. The committee publish three Sunday school papers, all of which are in good condition and have a large circulation. During the past year 59,000 books and pamphlets were published by the committee. This great interest of the Church is more encouraging than it has been for many years, and the work that it has accomplished cannot easily be computed.

A recess of twenty minutes was taken, after which the report from the trustees of Union Theological Seminary was heard and was referred by the Moderator to the committee on theological seminaries. The report of the Tuscaloosa Institute for the education of colored men for the ministry was read by Dr. Stillman. This institute is in a most thriving condition.

Synod of North Carolina, to unite the educational and publication committees under one secretary.

From the Nashville, Columbia, Knoxville, and Holston Presbyteries, to remove the committee of education to Nashville under the control of the Rev. J. H. Bryson as secretary.

From Dallas, St. Louis and Missouri Presbyteries, to remove the committee of education from Baltimore to St. Louis, Mo.

Synod of Texas, asking the deliverance of the General Assembly on the question of women preaching. Synod of Alabama, to revise the appointment of delegates to the Evangelical Alliance, with a view to a more equal distribution between the Synods.

Presbytery of East Hanover, that the question of the binding force of the Assembly deliverances be referred to a committee to report at the next Assembly; also that the question as to the sinfulness of worldly amusements and the best means of correcting these evils be referred to a special committee to report at next Assembly, so as to secure unity of opinion and action.

Tuscaloosa Presbytery, to arrange the course of study of candidates for the ministry so as to make theological students spend six months every year in laboring among the vacant churches of our land, so as to make them more practical in their studies rather than scholastic.

Several overtures were received from the Synod of Texas, asking for its division into two Synods, and several overtures from the Presbyteries composing the Synod, asking for a modification of the proposed terms of the division and postponement.

These overtures were all referred to the appropriate committees, and will come up for discussion and settlement as the General Assembly proceeds with its work

The committee on devotional exercises announced preaching appointments for the Sabbath.

After prayer by the Rev. Dr. Leyburn, the General Assembly adjourned to meet at half-past 9 o'clock on Saturday morning.

THIRD DAY.

SATURDAY, May 22d, 1880.

The minute referring to the communication of Mrs. Watson, of the Temperance Union of Pittsburg, was stricken out.

The following new commissioners were enrolled: From the Presbytery of Central Texas, Sidney Seymour; from the Presbytery of Charleston, W. A. Clark.

The Hon. J. B. White was added to the Judicial Committee.

The report of the Board of Trustees of the General Assembly was read.

The Treasurer reported $1500 in bonds and $2500 in stocks on account of the Relief Fund, making a total of $34,000 in stocks and bonds of that fund.

The trustees call attention to the responsibility imposed upon them by the Savannah Assembly, making them responsible to the Assembly for the safe custody of the funds in their hands. They ask that their responsibility be made such as is usual to trustees, good ordinary care. They recommend that the treasurer of the board be paid a salary out of the proceeds of the Relief Fund. The Hon. J. J. Gresham has resigned his position as treasurer, and the Rev. John Douglas has died.

On motion of Rev. Dr. Kirkpatrick all matters of a financial character will be referred to the Auditing Committee.

REPORT ON RETRENCHMENT.

The committee appointed by the last General Assembly to report upon reform and retrenchment in the management of the benevolent schemes of the Church made its report. The report does not discuss the constitutional principles involved, these having already been settled by long and intelligent usage. No complaint has been made by any lower court of any invasion of its rights, in the management of benevolent schemes or of usurpation by the Assembly. A minority report was made by the Rev. S. Taylor Martin of the committee. The majority report declares that the practical object of the Assembly in appointing a committee on retrenchment and reform was to promote the efficiency of Church work which will depend upon a proper distribution of labor; permanency of place; direct, frequent and easy accountability of agents; fitness of agents and the confidence and support of the Church. The committee conclude that the present distribution of labor is admirably adapted to the nature, the variety, the amount and the conditions of the work undertaken, and corresponds to that made by other churches most like the Presbyterian in faith and order. The test of long usage has enabled the Church to understand the plan, to eliminate what was weak, and to preserve whatever was most durable, strongest and best. The executive committee are elected every year, and all their accounts, books and proceedings are open to inspection and their accountability direct, frequent and easy. Suitable men can be chosen and all needed changes made in the composition of the committee at the annual election. The present plan enjoys the general confidence of the Church—no other has so many marks of excellence, and the committee think the Assembly should make no changes in the constitution of the board for the following reasons:

The present plan is the result of the Presbyterian Church's experiment for nearly one hundred years, and the outgrowth of the experience and observation through nearly a century's development of her order, power, vocation and work, and as such was adopted by the first Assembly of this Church, which met at Augusta in 1861.

The plan provides a special agency for each distinct branch for benevolent work. With her five executive committees the Church is admirably equipped for her mission to this generation at home and abroad, in the Church, the school and the family. The work to be done requires the present number of committees.

The secretaries of the committees are not merely financial agents with only diaconal functions, but they are in reality "watchmen upon the outer walls," through whom pastors and people are made acquainted with the wants and promises which God's providence discovers. The quantity of work is sufficient to keep all the committees employed, and the secretaries are engaged in the discharge of their duties from six to ten hours daily, four of these officers doing the work corresponding to that done by eight salaried officers in the Reformed Church of America and that done by sixteen salaried officers of the Church in the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

The cost of the committees is no greater than either necessity or prudence would dictate—no more than the work is really worth.

The ratio of expenses to the fund of the Church is large because the fund is small. The expenses are, for foreign missions .08½, home missions .10, education .16, publication (including salaries, traveling expenses, &c.,) .15 of income.

The committee discuss the proposed reforms and declare that the consolidation of the committees will destroy the efficiency of the work; it is utterly impracticable to do the work of the Church with less than four secretaries who are worthy of their hire, and such consolidation would complicate instead of simplify the machinery, and would augment instead of decrease the expenses. The benevolent schemes cannot be operated through the Synods without additional complications and increased expenses.

The proposition to abandon the scheme of beneficiary education and remand it to the Presbyteries for their independent action is not approved by the committee, who declare that "if there is any cause demanding the united counsels, the united wealth and the united effort of the whole Church, it is the training and educating of a ministry for the whole Church."

The reduction of expenses as an inducement to increased liberality on the part of the churches will have no effect. The expenses of conducting the benevolent schemes of the Church have hindered contributions in only five out of sixty-four churches who have given any testimony upon the subject. The expense of running the committees have not materially impaired the confidence of the people. The decrease in the contributions of the Church during the past few years have resulted from a lack of more thorough and general consecration to God; from an impression that church money is often loosely handled by church officers and that church offices are often negligently kept and their claims superficially audited; from the prostitution of industrial and financial business of the last seven years; from the impolitic agitation of this subject.

The committee say that the time for the policy of retrenchment has passed. Business is reviving, industry finds remunerative employment and capital profitable investment.

The committee report that the Tuscaloosa Institute, for the education of colored candidates for the ministry, is in excellent progress and condition. It is the only institution of the kind under the care of the Church, and should be fostered and promoted in all its interests.

The committee recommend that the five executive committees of the Assembly be continued for the present, and that the Publication and Education committees shall hereafter publish monthly acknowledgements of their receipts; that the General Assembly shall insist upon a rigid inspection of all accounts, and systematic and exact management of money matters by all diaconal officers of the congregations; that the Assembly either appoint a special committee to examine thoroughly into the whole question of the Assembly's responsibility for the investments and annuities of the Relief Fund, and report to the next General Assembly, or that this Assembly at once take orderly steps to close up the business equitably to all interested parties, and to abolish the scheme.

The minority report from the Rev. S. T. Martin of this committee was then read. It is a very long and exhaustive document and makes a thorough survey of the benevolent schemes of the Church. The minority report holds that the present plan is fatally deficient in all the elements of efficiency claimed for it by the majority of the committee. A proper distribution of labor is not realized because the duties which should be discharged by the Presbytery are turned over to the General Assembly, and business which should properly be done by the deacons is distributed to the ministers. Permanency is not realized, because foreign missions and sustentation have two secretaries instead of one as formerly, and so of education and publication. The relief scheme has been radically modified and the benevolent feature which distinguished it from ordinary life insurance has been stricken out. Tuscaloosa Institute is an innovation. The accountability of the agents of the Assembly is not realized, for in a session of ten days, once a year, the details of the agencies cannot be inspected and experience shows that the expenses of the several departments for years have been largely in excess of the requirements. The fitness of the agents of the Church is not realized, for the ministers who fill these offices are disqualified by the call of the Holy Ghost, by their mental training, and by the character pertaining to their calling. The confidence of the Church is not realized as is manifested by decreased contributions with an enlarged membership.

The minority dissent from the reasons of the majority report, relative to the antiquity of the present plan and to the costs of the agencies. The force employed in their management is too large, and the Assembly should not assume the whole work. There is no necessity for locating the agencies in the cities with our present mails, telegraph, railroad and banking facilities. In the country towns the business could be conducted at a much less cost. The reason that it is necessary for the secretary of foreign missions to live in a city because he has to buy foreign exchange is without strength, for foreign exchange has a market value and the personal presence of the secretary is not essential to its purchase. If it were, there are certainly enough members of the Presbyterian Church in the cities who would cheerfully negotiate such business for the secretary of the Assembly without charge. Grant that the presence of the secretary is necessary, and it would pay to appropriate two or three hundred dollars for his traveling expenses rather than locate him where his salary must be $3,000 instead of $1,500. In paying such salaries the Church has been wasting Christ's money. The multiplication of agencies is unwarrantable extravagance, for one person could manage all the funds of the Church now. It is folly to continue the present expensive machinery in view of a possible future want. The plea of the majority that the Church is to be injured by any agitation in the direction of reform, leaves the irresistible inference that the present schemes are unworthy of confidence.

In his report, Mr. Martin offers a plan for securing greater simplification, economy and efficiency in the management of the work of the Church; the appointment of one treasurer who shall hold all the bonds under the control of the General Assembly, and who shall be a thorough man of business, not a minister; to abolish all paid secretaryships and commit each department to its respective committee; to diminish the machinery in the several departments; to abandon the theological seminary for colored students, because one such seminary is inadequate to the design, and because the principle upon which the scheme is based is self-contradictory. "The assumption is that the negro race can only be evangelized by negroes and if this be true their case is hopeless." The new plan also suggests triennial instead of annual sessions of the General Assembly.

The relief scheme is in direct opposition to Scriptural teachings. If the collection of money to be invested in bonds and stocks for the purpose of making money for the future wants of the Church is endorsed, the way will be open for the Church to engage in any kind of money-making enterprise. The good old name of the Presbyterian Church is not dependent upon the permanent solvency of railroad and city bonds. The report upon this point reads as follows: "If the Lord should appear in our midst today we verily believe He would overturn the tables of the money-changers and drive out from His temple those that buy and sell therein. The Presbyterian Church instructs its people to exercise faith and consecrate their substance to the advancement of God's Kingdom, at the same time that its highest court induces them to hoard $30,000 of Christ's money for the supply of the possible wants of their perishing bodies."

The minority report discusses the subject in all its aspects and declares that the adoption of the new plan proposed would save to the Church an annual expenditure of $18,000, which would educate ninety ministers or send out eighteen evangelists every year. The new plan would also enable the Church to conform its practices to its doctrines, elevate the diaconate to its proper place in the economy of the Church and relieve the clergy of their self-assumed duties which are no part of their ministerial office.

On motion of Dr. Wilson the two reports on retrenchment and reform were made the order of the day for Monday morning at 11 o'clock.

A recess was taken for twenty minutes, after which an overture was presented from the Presbytery of Florida asking the General Assembly whether the office of ruling elder or deacon, like that of a minister, can be demitted.

Referred to the committee on bills and overtures.

The Moderator appointed the following additional members on the standing committees of the Assembly:

Systematic Benevolence, M. W. McGill; Sabbath Schools, J. O. Ray; Publication, Rev. J. M. Chaney; Home Missions, Sidney Seymour; Judicial, W. L. Clark.

The report from the special committee on the observance of the Sabbath was then read, disclosing a better state of things in this regard, and the favorable action taken by several of the State Legislatures to prevent the desecration of the day. The report was made the order of the day for 1 o'clock on Monday.

The committee on overtures reported favorably on the overture of Synod of Memphis, asking for the transfer of Oak Grove Church from the Tombeckbee to the Chickasaw Presbytery. The report of the committee was adopted and the transfer was ordered.

The committee also reported upon sundry overtures relating to the division of the Synod of Texas, that the whole matter be remanded to the Synod for further action. Report adopted.

The report of the trustees of the Columbia Theological Seminary was read. During the past year twenty-six students attended this institution, but the board of trustees represent that the school was carried on in the face of great perplexity, distress and hardship. Its financial condition is so gloomy that its exercises have been suspended. To avert this result the salaries of the Professors were decreased from $2,500 to $2,000 and every effort has been made at economy, but the exigencies of the institution have been beyond the control of the trustees. The seminary was kept open during the past year by special contributions in the Synods of South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, but inasmuch as the seminary is the property of the General Assembly and not of any particular Synod it deserves the support of all the churches. The seminary has an income of $5,100, but the expenses have been $8,000 a year. The temporary closing of the institution is a painful necessity, but the trustees hope some plan may be devised for its future usefulness and support. The buildings have been turned over to the care of the Rev. Dr. Howe, who will be paid a salary of $1,500 a year. The trustees have elected the Rev. Dr. Plumer professor emeritus with a salary of $1,000 per annum. The seminary property is very valuable and in addition to the buildings and furniture has a library of 20,295 volumes. The report was referred to the committee on theological seminaries.

Among the appointments for Sunday was that of the Rev. Mr. Brearly at the Unitarian Church. After the reading of the report Dr. Woodrow said that if this meant a recognition of the Unitarian Church in any way he would object to the adoption of the report. He thought the Assembly could not be too Catholic upon such points, and if this appointment was only a courtesy extended to the Church it might be accepted.

The chairman of the committee replied that the appointment had been made at the request of the pastor of the Unitarian Church as a simple courtesy to the body. He thought the Assembly could accept a courtesy without binding itself to any special line of doctrine or policy.

The Rev. Mr. Penick could not refrain from protesting against the acceptance of this appointment. He said that the great Dr. Thornwell once refused to engage in family prayers with an Unitarian because they did not worship the same God.

On motion the report of the committee on devotional exercises was adopted and the appointment accepted.

The Rev. Charles E. Scott, D. D., commissioner to the General Assembly from the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America was introduced to the Moderator by Dr. Wilson, and by him in turn presented to the Assembly, the whole body rising to their feet.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Week-Day Religion. By Rev. James Russell Miller. Pp. 315. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, 1880.

The design of this good book is to help Christians to bring their religion from the closet, the Church and the Creed, into the week; that every duty, burden, and joy, may be bathed in the brightness of hope and faith. Believers' knowledge and faith are better than their lives. None can read this precious book without signal service, as it discusses "Help for Worried Week Days;" "Religion in the Home;" "Wayside Ministries;" "The Beauty of Quiet Lives;" "Manly Men;" and many other practical topics.

Vagabond and Victor. The story of David Sheldon. By Kate W. Hamilton, author of "Old Portmanteau," &c. Pp. 331. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. Illustrated. 1879.

A beautiful and touching story of a lawyer's family reduced to great suffering by his intemperance, but rescued by the converting grace of God. It is well written, and will be a valuable addition to any Sabbath School library.

After he had completed his education at Princeton Seminary he made a trip to Europe by which he raised quite a fund as an endowment for the theological education of his people."

The Revue Industrielle states that a German manufactory is turning over a ton a day of glucose made from old linen rags. These rags, which are composed of hard vegetable fibres, are treated with sulphuric acid, which converts them into dextrine. The altar product thus obtained undergoes a washing with milk of lime, and is then treated with a fresh supply of acid stronger than the former, when the mass is at once transformed and crystalizes into glucose, of which "rich' confections and jellies may be made. The process is said to be a very cheap one, and the glucose chemically identified with grape sugar. A strong outcry, however, has arisen against the manufacture of grape sugar from rags, and the enterprise is understood to be in danger of being interfered with by the German Government.

Jewelry, Watch Cases, Silver Ware, Etc

The writer has recently passed over a manufacturing establishment in the city of Cincinnati which, to him, was a short season of pleasure as well as a means of extending his knowledge. We refer to that of Messrs. Duhme & Co., silversmiths and manufacturing jewelers, Fourth and Walnut Streets, Cincinnati. They are also manufacturers of gold and silver watch cases. They commenced business in 1838, and have had an increasingly progressive history up to the present time. In the jewelry department they are unexcelled on the continent, and never fail in succeeding to meet the scruples of the most exacting connoisseurs. Their work in every branch is by hand, save in the polishing and finishing departments. Their methods of working are the most modern an effective. In the melting of gold they have adopted the new process of heated charcoal played upon by wind. In the setting of diamonds they have acquired a high reputation, and cater much to those who are desirous of having their ideas embodied in an original way in jewelry productions. The gold and silver watch case manufacturing branch is very extensive. It is under the supervision of a thoroughly competent manager, he having a practical acquaintance with every department of it. They have blocks of all the different sizes of watches, and can, therefore, make cases for all descriptions used in the country. This branch, the same as every other, is conducted in a superior and systematic manner, the various workmen being very skillful and the different materials used in connection with it of the most genuine character. They purchase the fine gold, and alloy it themselves as required. The silver factory deserves special note because of the solid nature of the goods made in it, and the artistic skill displayed in their fabrication. There are no products in this metal that the firm cannot undertake to manufacture. Vessels ornamented with repousse work engage very special attention. On the topmost floor the burnishing and polishing of articles are done, part of it being devoted to watch repairing and gilding. Gold and silver plating are also carried on here. The floor immediately below is devoted to the manufacture of jewelry and watch cases. We must not omit mentioning that the firm are considerable manufacturers of gold chain and spectacles in various styles, and further, that they possess every facility for assaying of gold and silver. The refining which is a most effectual process with them, is done in the subcellar. The packing and shipping are conducted in the basement. In addition to the goods the firm manufacture, they are heavy jobbers in other lines. They handle clocks of all descriptions very largely; indeed, there is scarcely any kind they do not keep in stock. This trade is undergoing considerable development. In silver-plated ware they have always the most ample variety, their grand collection comprising a complete line of Simpson, Hall, Miller & Co.'s celebrated Wallingford Wares. In this, as well as in other lines, a more extensive assortment is demanded of them than is found in large cities on the seaboard. This arises from their having to suit more numerous tastes. Cincinnati geographically being a focal point to which Eastern, Western and Southern buyers repair to make purchases of silver ware, jewelry and kindred articles, a house situated as Messrs. Duhme & Co, are must be provided with stocks that will please all. They have always two travellers operating in their interest, and do a trade in all directions around and to a great distance from Cincinnati. They have also a splendid high-class retail business, their situation, at the southwest corner of Fourth and Walnut Streets, being unequaled for this purpose. A firm with such a history and reputation must increasingly command public confidence from year to year, and, as the city augments in population and wealth, there is no question that firms such as Messrs Duhme & Co., must extend, and consolidate their now valuable connections.—A. C. Review.

Unquestionable.

YELLOW FEVER

That this terrible disease has for years held a despotic sway, at certain seasons of the year, in portions of our own fair land, and in other countries, is known by each and every one. As well known is it, that a cure, or even a preventive, has not been, heretofore discovered.

It is known to every intelligent man and woman, that the reason for this fearful scourge is neither more nor less than the malarial poison that emanates from low marshy lands—whether adjacent to salt or fresh water—especially in certain stages of the drying process, under a hot sun; as well are these familiar with the fact, that uncleaned cess-pools, insufficient drainage, unremoved filth of any kind or character, are generators of this same death-dealing miasma. Observations of centuries has made every person, blessed with the least faculty of discernment, acquainted with the effect of this subtle malarial poison. Each and all know that Typhus and Intermittent Fevers are the lesser natural consequences of an inhalation of this poisonous exhalative, and that Yellow Fever is the greater.

After a careful reading of the late report of the National Board of Health, no other conclusion can be drawn, than that if the blood is kept in a healthy condition the birth, growth and spread of yellow fever is materially lessened, if not actually prevented. It is a matter understood by all and every one, that if the kidney and liver—the organs that filter and cleanse the blood—are kept in a wholesome and sound condition, this same vital fluid will ever be clear from impurities. That these organs, the kidney and liver, can be kept free from disease, and at all times in a condition to well and faithfully perform their duties, is a matter beyond dispute, cavil or argument, and equally it is true, that a free use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills, will actually compel these same organs to perform their allotted functions.

Testimonials by the thousands are in the hands of the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure vouching for its curative qualities in all diseases of kidney and liver, and hence as a cleanser of the blood, and as well a preventive to yellow fever, we have no hesitation in offering it to the public.

WARNER'S

Kidney and Liver Cure.

The Stubborn Convinced.

In writing of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Bitters, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, the Sentinel, Weedsport, N. Y., has following: "That these possess all the remedial qualities claimed for them is a matter beyond dispute; bona fide testimonials by the thousand from well known citizens in public and private life are evidences strong enough to convince the most stubborn doubter, that they are the best medicines for the diseases for which recommended, ever yet known to the public or the physicians.

Game Played For.

The Republican, Omaha, Nebraska, says: "In the game of life the 'stake' played for is health, wealth and happiness. Each of these can be obtained by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetis Cure, Warner's Safe Pills, Bitters, Nervine and Tonic."

Gratitude Lavished.

Is clipped from the columns of the Journal-Courier, New Haven, Conn., the following endorsemen: "Gratitude of character strong, earnest and impetuous, is daily, in person and by letter, being lavished upon H. H. Warner & Co. for the introduction of, and the making so extensively known, their wonderful cure, named as Warner's Kidney and Liver Cure."

Mental Strain Relieved.

The Washington, D. C., Critic says: "It is intimated to us that numbers of the Senate and House are freely using Warner's Safe Nervine and relief of nervous prostration incident upon the severe strain upon their mental powers."

Not Open to Argument.

The testimony of the Sunday Herald, Rochester, N. Y, is taken from their columns and is to the effect "that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is a positive cure for disabilities for which it is a specific, there is no disputing; neither is there the 'ghost' of a chance to call into being a negative to so positive an opinion."

Honorable Men.

The Sunday Tribune, Rochester, N. Y., in one of issues prints the following: "The proprietors (of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies), each and all, are men born here, and here have lived the whole period of their stay on earth, and are men who have the unbounded confidence of all who know them."

Speedy and Sure.

The Journal of Commerce, Boston, says: "As a speedy and sure cure this (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure) remedy is 'Safe,' and the cases wherein it misses are those beyond the reach of human relief."

Faith and Confidence.

The following is clipped from the News, Marysville, Kansas: "In calling the attention of our readers to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and other Safe Remedies, we do so with a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good and said of them."

Good Advice.

The Daily Advertiser, St Albans, Vt, has the following: "We feel sure that it each of our friends as are sufferers from diseases of Kidneys and Liver would but use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, they would be benefitted."

Quality Maintained.

The Rochester, N. Y., Express says: "So far as the standard of quality is concerned, parties can rest assured the same will be maintained up to the present high character. As a remedy for the speedy cure of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and all complaints of the Kidneys and Liver, no article of any kind or character can equal it (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure).

Wonderful to Contemplate.

From the columns of the Republican, Springfield Mass., is taken the following: "It is a settled fact that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are all they are represented to be by the proprietors, H. H Warner & Co. The way they go into the habitations of those afflicted with disease for which recommended is truly wonderful to contemplate."

"Bona Fide."

The following is taken from the columns of the York Daily, York, Pa: "The testimonials in possession of H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, are not manufactured to order, are bona fide, and have attached date, time, place and signiture of the writers thereof."

Dividend-Paying.

The following is found in the columns of the Standard, New Bedford, Mass: "Parties, after using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, pronounce it the best dividend-paying (in health and happiness) property they ever handled.

Evidence Corroborated.

The Sun, Indianapolis, Ind., has the following: "Testimonials, not numbered by hundreds, but by thousands, are in hands of H. H. Warner & Co., all furnishing ample corroborative evidence that as curative, for specific diseases for which recommended, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies are unqualified and pronounced successes."

Unbounded Confidence.

Peck's Sun, Milwaukee, Wis., in referring to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, has the following: "H. H. Warner & Co., Rochester, N. Y., are the sole proprietors, we have a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good, and said of them."

Surest and Best.

The Journal, Battle Creek, Mich., thus puts it: "The surest safest, best blood purifying medicine known is Warner's Safe Bitters, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills. Regular practitioners prescribe them as a remedy for impure poisoned blood."

Confident, Reliable.

"In writing of the Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, of which H. H. Warner & Co., are proprietors, the Evening Dispatch, York, Pa., says: "We say all this that is good of them as we have a perfect faith in the efficiency, the preparation, and unbounded faith in the truth of all that is said good of it."

Deserve a Monument.

The Standard, Syracuse, N. Y., is the journal from which the following extract is cut: "That the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are entitled to a monument is unmistakably true. It is an indisputable fact that these parties be and are looked upon as Good Samaritans."

WHAT THE

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Did For a Kansas Woman.

Its Great Controlling Power over the Nervous System, the Digestive Organs and Uterine Affections.

Case of Mrs. B——, stated by Dr L. M. Wood, Wyandotte county, Kansas.

Extract from a letter dated White Church, Wyandotte county, Kansas, February 1st, 1880:

"I first saw Mrs. B—— laboring under Hysterical Coma, from which she had not been sufficiently aroused to take nourishment for four days. She was of large frame, but in a condition of extreme emaciation. From her husband I obtained the following statement: She was thirty-six years of age, and when in health unusually robust, her average weight being one hundred and fifty pounds. She was accustomed to do all of her house work and to perform other labor when necessary. Several years before she had undergone an operation for a Tumor formed in the region of the right Acetabulum. Her general health remained good for some time. Afterwards, however, she became a great sufferer from a distressing form of Dyspepsia, there being at times almost total Atony of the digestive organs. There was also serious derangement of the Monthly Fnactions, with general prostration of the Nervous System resulting in attacks similar to that described, and she had been under the care, at different times, of several distinguished medical men without benefit. Under appropriate treatment she was aroused to a state of consciousness, took nourishment such as her stomach would retain, and her general condition improved to some extent. There was, however, a frequent recurrence of these attacks, and I saw but little if any hope of permanent benefit. Recollecting that I had seen the Buffalo Lithia Waters endorsed by men eminent in the profession, as a "Powerful Nerve Tonic," I determined as a last resort to make a trial of it in her case, and ordering it directly from the Springs put her upon it. In a few weeks the beneficial result was unmistakable, in the increase of appetite—the invigoration of the organs of digestion, and most especially in the gradual restoration to a healthy condition of the exhausted Nervous System and a diminution both of the frequency and severity of the attacks referred to. She used the water for several months with continued and decided benefit. The Monthly Functions have been restored to a normal condition, and there has been a total cessation of the attacks of Hysterical Coma, and she has gained rapidly in flesh and strength, until she is now in robust, vigorous health, eating as much "Hog and Hominy," and doing as much hard work as any woman in this Western country, the credit for all of which, I give where it is certainly due, to these remarkable waters."

These Springs are opened for Visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE. The Waters in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, Five Dollars per case, at the Springs.

They are prescribed by Dr. J. Marion Sims, Dr. William A. Hammond and Dr. John T. Metcalf, of New York, as well as by a large number of leading medical men in all sections of the country. Spring pamphlet sent to any address.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Constancy.

BY HOWARD L. MURIEL.

The beating torrent falls
Upon the rock to-day;
The sun to-morrow calls
Its traces far away.

But day by day the drops
Fall from the mountain stream;
And on the rock's gray tops
The hollowed basins gleam.

And here the likeness ends,
Though still it well appears
The love is best that sends
Its sweetness through the years.

Two Sides to a Frolic.

Bert was on one side of the fence, and the boys on the other. His hand was on the gate, but he had not quite made up his mind to open it.

"Oh, come on," said Val Morton. "What is the use of moping in the house such a splendid night as this? Come on and have some fun."

"I ought to study my Latin," said Bert, reluctantly as he remembered the long, dry lesson.

"Bother the Latin; it's no use any way. I'd like to see anybody getting those irregular verbs out of me," said Will Moore.

Bert laughed a little at the idea of getting anything out of Will's brain, that never had much but mischief in it, and then he slowly opened the gate, drew a long breath, and went out. It was a glorious night, with just enough frost in the air to make it cool and crisp, while the white moonlight almost revealed the colors of the maples that had been flaming all day in the hot sunshine.

"Where are you going?" asked Bert.

"Oh, just round town," said Val, carelessly, and at that moment they came opposite Dr. Parker's gate, which stood a little way open. In an instant Val lifted it off the hinges and laid it in the gutter.

"Teach him to keep his gate shut," laughed Will, and Bert laughed, too, though he felt ashamed of himself, for everybody liked Dr. Parker.

A few blocks further on were some wooden steps at the edge of the side-walk. Will gave Val a nudge, and with one stout tug the steps were upset.

"That's too mean," said Bert. "Suppose some one should step off there?"

"Pooh!" said Val, "it is light as day, and nobody ever does go down there, except old Bijah, when he is in a hurry for his grog. Serve him right if he pitched over."

Bert knew he was in bad company; but he was beginning to enjoy the excitement of the adventure, and when Will proposed that they should carry off the sign from a little shop, and fasten it to the horns of Mrs. McPherson's cow, he was ready to lend a hand himself. Old Whitey, who was peacefully chewing her cud, was easily coaxed into an alley with a handful of turnips pulled from her owner's garden; and before she realized that any mischief was intended, she found herself blundering about with a board fastened over her face. The sign read, "Dressmaking and Fine Sewing; all kinds of Hair Work. Ladies' Hair dressed in the latest styles."

The boys laughed so much over this that they were in danger of being found out. But at last Bert said he must go home, and that ended the frolic for the night.

In his own room he tried for a little while to fix his mind upon his lesson, but soon found himself laughing at the thought of the figure the cow would cut, and wondering where they would find her in the morning; so he tossed the book aside, and went to bed. This was one side.

The other side began the next morning; when, with Bert's first waking thoughts, came consciousness of the unprepared lesson, and a dismal foreboding of failure, that brought him to the breakfast-table in anything but an amiable mood. His father was not there, but Aunt Margaret explained that he had been called away to see a patient.

"It's that smart little Johnny Collins; he's twisted his ankle dreadfully; worse to manage than a broken bone, your father says, and may lay him up half the winter."

"How did it happen?" asked Bert, absently.

"That's the worst of it," said Aunt Margaret; "some mischievous boys that ought to be sent to the reform school, upset the steps in front of the house."

Bert was wide enough awake now, and staring at Aunt Margaret with frightened eyes as she went on.

"Bijah was off on one of his drinking sprees, and his wife was so anxious for fear he'd lain down somewhere on the track, that she sent Johnny out to look him up. He ran out of the gate, boy fashion, and made a rush for the steps, never noticing they were gone till he pitched down the bank with his foot twisted under him. He must have fainted and lain there some time before he managed to crawl back, and they did not send for your father till morning. It does seem too hard for that poor woman. Johnny was her only dependence, and such a nice boy."

Poor Bert was fairly sick with horror at the unlooked-for result of the mischief, for though he had made a feeble protest, he had really sanctioned it by his presence, and he knew that his father would say he was as much responsible as any one. His father! must he know it? Could he ever hold up his head again if such a disgrace came upon him?

"I'll never tell him," thought Bert; "it would not do the least good now, and it would nearly kill him. I've done with those boys, though, and with such frolics as they are up to."

But it chanced that Bert was not to have his own way about this matter. That evening when he came home smarting under the mortification of failure in his lessons, and a sense of remorse and shame at his own folly, his father called him into his study. For the first time in his life Bert really dreaded an interview with his father, and when he saw upon a chair the hair-dresser's sign which he had helped to fasten upon Mrs. McPherson's cow, he was ready to sink with shame. His father talked to him quietly, telling him that for sometime the neighborhood had been annoyed by the mischievous and malicious tricks of a set of boys, until the residents had determined that they would discover them and make a public example of them.

"If it could have been done sooner it would have saved a great deal of suffering to an innocent boy, but perhaps some serious warning was needed for those who do not hesitate to sacrifice their best friends to what they call fun. This morning Dr. Parker called me into his garden, and after showing me the mischief done to his choice vines and plants, by some creature that had trampled over them, he told me that he found Mrs. McPherson's cow in the grounds with the sign tied to her horns. The gate had been taken from the hinges, and the animal had apparently been driven about to do as much damage as possible. It seemed almost incredible that any one would have the boldness to avow such a piece of villainy."

Bert sat with his eyes fixed upon the sign, unable to move or speak, but at that instant he saw, written in pencil at the top of the board: "Compliments of Bert Andrews."

"How mean," he exclaimed angrily; "that is some of Will Moore's work."

"My boy," exclaimed his father, looking as if an immense burden had been lifted from him, "I shall be the happiest man in town to know that you had no hand in this rascally business."

Then Bert's heart fell again. He thought he had only shared in the fun, but he suddenly realized that his companions had so contrived that he should also bear the disgrace and the blame for the unlooked-for results.

After all it was a relief to both father and son when the whole story was told. Bert was relieved at having made a full confession, and at feeling himself restored to his father's confidence, while his father was glad of the assurance that his boy had not been guilty of malicious mischief.

"Nothing more fortunate could have happened to you than that this very first adventure should bring you into trouble; for, remember my boy, that the acts themselves would have been just as disgraceful if things had not resulted as they did. The law does not trouble itself about intentions, but holds us responsible for the mischief which results, or which might be expected to result, from our acts."

"Father," said Bert presently, "I hate to have the boys think I told of them."

"They seem to have had no scruples about telling of you," said his father. "I shall certainly go to their fathers and do what I can to save them from certain ruin. As for you, Bert, I advise you to go and have a talk with Dr. Parker."

Bert never reported his conversation with the good old minister, but they shook hands very cordially as they parted, and the doctor was often heard to speak of Bert as a "fine, manly fellow."

Bert likes fun as well as ever, but he has a habit of looking very cautiously at a frolic, to be sure there are not two sides to it, before he ventures in—an excellent habit to form.—Church and Home.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Transmissibility of Human Rabies.

Whether hydrophobia can be transmitted from man to man, or from man to the lower animals, has long been a disputed question, with little scientific evidence on either side; some recent observations, however, by M. Raymond, in the Lariboisiere Hospital, in Paris, would seem sufficiently conclusive to put an end to all uncertainty on the subject. A man was brought to the hospital suffering from rabies, having been bitten by a dog on the lip forty days before. The wound was cauterized two hours after it was made, and no serious apprehensions were felt about the result until a few days before he entered the hospital, when the usual symptoms of hydrophobia appeared. The day before his death, in a quiet interval, he yielded with the best grace to experiments in inoculation, which were made with his blood and saliva. The result of inoculating a rabbit with his blood was negative (as in the great majority of previous cases of inoculation with the blood of animals under rabies). But with the saliva it was different. A rabbit inoculated in the ear and abdomen with the saliva on the 11th of October began to show symptoms of rabies on the 15th, being much excited and damaging the walls of its cage, while it uttered loud cries and slavered at the mouth. Then it fell into collapse and died the following night. The rabbit's body was dissected thirty-six hours after death, and further experiment was made by taking fragments of the right and left sub-maxillary glands and introducing them under the skin of two other rabbits respectively. These two rapidly succumbed, one on the fifth, the other on the sixth day (becoming visibly ill on the third); neither passed through a furious stage, however, and the predominant feature was paralysis. The important practical result is that human saliva, such as caused rabbies in the rabbit, is necessarily virulent, and would probably have corresponding effects on man; so that it should be dealt with cautiously, and that not only during the life of the person furnishing it, but in post mortem examinations.—Popular Science Monthly.

John Brown, of Haddington

For the "heroic" old man of Haddington, writes Dr. John Brown, author of "Rab and his Friends," my father had a peculiar reverence, as indeed we all have—as well we may. He was our king, the founder of our dynasty; we dated from him, and he was hedged accordingly by a certain sacredness of divinity. I well remember with what surprise and pride I found myself asked by a blacksmith's wife, in a remote hamlet among the hop gardens of Kent, if I was "the son of the Self-interpreting Bible." I possess, as an heirloom, the New Testament which my father fondly regarded as the one his grandfather, when a herd-laddie, got from the professor who heard him ask for it, and promised him it if he could read a verse; and he has, in his beautiful small hand, written what follows: He (John Brown, of Haddington,) had now acquired so much of Greek as encouraged him to hope that he might at length be prepared to reap the richest of all rewards which classical learning could confer on him, the capacity of reading in the original tongue the blessed New Testament of our Lord and Saviour. Full of this hope, he became anxious to possess a copy of the invaluable volume. One night, having committed the charge of his sheep to a companion, he set out on a midnight journey to St. Andrews, a distance of twenty-four miles. He reached his destination in the morning, and went to the bookseller's shop, asking for a copy of the Greek New Testament. The master of the shop, surprised at such a request from a shepherd boy, was disposed to make game of him. Some of the professors coming into the shop questioned the lad about his employment and studies. After hearing his tale, one of them desired the bookseller to bring the volume. He did so, and drawing it down, said: "Boy, read this and you shall have it for nothing." The boy did so, acquitted himself to the admiration of his judges, and carried off his Testament, and when the evening arrived, was studying it in the midst of his flock on the braes of Abernethy.

I doubt not my father regarded this little worn old book, the sword of the Spirit which his ancestor so nobly won, and wore, and warred with, with not less honest veneration and pride than does his dear friend James Douglas, of Cavers, the Percy pennon, borne away at Otterbourne. When I read his own simple story of his life—his loss of father and mother before he was eleven, his discovering (as true a discovery as Dr. Young's of the characters of the Rosetta stone, or Rawlingson's of the cuneiform letters) the Greek characters, his defence of himself against the astonishing and base charge of getting his learning from the devil (that shrewd personage would not have employed him on the Greek Testament), his eager indomitable study, his running miles to and back again to hear a sermon, after folding his sheep at noon, his keeping his family creditably on never more than £50, and for long on £40 a year, giving largely in charity, and never wanting, as he said, "lying money"—when I think of all this, I feel what a strong, independent, manly nature he must have had.

Singular Bequests.

The folly of tying up charitable bequests with close restrictions, has had many illustrations. The London School Board has brought to light a number of charities in which the benevolence of the givers was certainly very short-sighted. One of the parishes in that city has an endowment left for the purpose of paying for sermons on England's Deliverance from the Spanish Armada, and the Gunpowder Plot, and in Commemoration of Queen Elizabeth's Accession to the Throne. The parish of St. Pancras has a fund provided for paying for "two lanterns and four candles in Soper Lane, and the keeping clean of the preaching-place at St Paul's Cross." Of course in these days of gas and electric lights, such bequests are useless. A legacy was left to the parish of St. Dunstan, to provide the vicar, churchwardens, and as many ancient parishoners "as it could reasonably serve," with a dinner, of two courses only, once a year. The income from this trust amounted to one hundred and twenty-two pounds ten shillings last year, of which twenty pounds were expended for the dinner, and the rest was given to miscellaneous purposes. One Richard Budd left property valued at about £300 two hundred and fifty years ago, the income of which was to be spent in bribes of threepence each to such of the poor as would attend prayers on Friday mornings in the Church of St. Giles. The parish of St. Michael has a bequest of thirteen shillings and fourpence "to keep the parish pump in order." Thousands of pounds have been tied up in the hard knot of restrictions like these in that city, the object for which the original bequest was made being no longer desirable, if not obsolete. And at the same time the want and suffering in that great city continues to supplicate for the aid held in the clutch of these dead hands. There may be a charity, as well as a zeal which is not according to knowledge.—Exchange.

Silent Influence.

"I have no influence," said Elsie Lee to her friend, Miss Tomson. "Why, I am so timid when in company with others that I hardly dare raise my eyes or open my lips."

"That may be," replied the older lady, "and yet you are always exerting influence wherever you go. You cannot help yourself. An hour ago I bought a little bunch of violets from a German flower girl, and I set them on yonder shelf, beside my dear mother's picture. It is a very tiny bunch and a person entering the room would very likely not see them, for they do not challenge attention. But every nook and corner of the apartment feels their presence, for their fragrance is pervading the atmosphere. So it is with you, my dear. You love your Saviour, and you try to serve him. You think you cannot speak for him, but if you live for him, and with him, in gentleness, patience, and self denial, that is better than talking. It does more good. The other evening Jerry Halcomb, who is thoughtless and giddy, made a jest of a verse of Scripture in your hearing. You wished to protest against his act, and tried to do so, but the words would not come. Yet your pained look, your quick blush, your instinctive indignant gesture spoke for you, and the young man turned and said, 'I beg your pardon Miss Elsie.' Was not this a proof that he saw and felt your condemnation?'

Silent influence is stronger than we sometimes think for good and for evil. Let us not underestimate it.—Christian at Work.

Frederick the Great.

Plutarch and Shakespeare have shown great men in their nightcaps and slippers. I cannot show you his Prussian Majesty in his nightcap, for he never wears one; he acquired a habit in youth of sleeping bare-headed, in order to harden himself. Nor has he any slippers, for as soon as he leaves his bed he puts on his boots. It is known that he rises at 4, that he goes to bed at 9, that he procrastinates nothing, that he is fond of jesting, that he eats a great deal of fruit, that he plays on the flute every evening, that he passes most of his time at Sans-Souci in his old boots, and that he governs Europe. I asked the Swiss, "Which was the King's chamber?" "This." I expected a magnificent bed. There was a fine alcove at the end of the room, but no bed in it. "Where is the bed?' "There." Behind a little screen in a corner was a small bed, very narrow, with curtains of green silk; this was his. The carpet on which he steps when he gets out of bed is very coarse. And there are three or four tables covered with books and papers. Frederick was told one day that some one had spoken ill of him. He asked if that person had 100,000 men? He was answered, No. "Very well," said the king, "I can do nothing; if he had 100,000 men I could declare war against him."—Sherlock's Letters.

The Sick Soldier.

A Colporteur in Turkey relates that he visited a hospital and saw a poor Turk lying ill. He approached the man, who looked at his visitor with a frightful scowl, and uttered some words of imprecation. He asked the nurse about him, who said that he was a most awful man. "I give him his medicine," said she, "and attend to his wounds but he always curses me, and I quite fear to go near him." At last it occurred to the colporteur to show him a New Testament. He held it up to him, open; and when the Turk saw the type in his own language the scowl at once gave place to a smile of pleasure, though he did not know what the book was, and by signs asked for it, and was given it. The colporteur then left the place for some days; but on his return again visited the hospital and inquired for the sick soldier. "Sir," replied the nurse, "I never saw such a change in any man. His eye brightened, his manner softened, he took his medicine without uttering a curse, and seemed as if he could not show enough gratitude to me. As for the New Testament, he never let it out of his hand, and was constantly reading it till he died a few days ago.

A Happy Man.

Mr. Doddridge, in writing to an absent friend, says: "My days begin, and pass, and end in pleasure, and seem short because they are so delightful. I have more of the presence of God than I ever remember. He enables me to live for Him and to live with Him. When I awake in the morning I address myself to Him and converse with Him; and he meets me in my study, in secret, and in family devotions. It is pleasant to compose, pleasant to converse with my friends at home, pleasant to visit the sick, and the poor, pleasant to write letters of necessary business by which any good may be done, and pleasant to preach the Gospel to poor souls; pleasant in the week to think how near another Sabbath is, and O how much more pleasant to think how near eternity is, and that it is but a step from earth to heaven!"

SECULAR NEWS.

"H." the well-known correspondent of Hale's Weekly, writes to that paper: Mr. Elliot Dalngerfield, the young artist from Fayetteville, has sold, at his own price, the picture which was admitted into the Academy of Art Exhibiton, as well as another which he has painted since. This is encouraging.

Favorable responses have been received from the following gentlemen who were chosen to make speeches on the battlefield of Alamance on the 29th ult.: Judge Robert P. Dick, Col. T. M. Holt, Hon. John Manning, Judge D. G. Fowle, Hon. Kemp P. Battle and Hon. Henry K. Nash.—Alamance Gleaner.

W. H. Knight informs us that he has been compelled to have killed three fine hogs that were attacked with rabies from mad-dog bites. How many more will follow suit he can't tell. And we hear continually of sheep destroyed by worthless curs.—Tarboro Southerner.

The selection of Dr. William Burney as the professor of chemistry in the Agricultural College of South Carolina, is a feather in the cap of Davidson College. Dr. Burney is only 27 years old, and graduated at Davidson three or four years ago, taking the degree of Bachelor of Science. He subsequently attended the University of Heidelberg, where he obtained in two years the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, cum summa laude a distinction rarely attained by American students. After returning home last year he took a fellowship in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, where he now is. We understand that Dr. Burney has twice been offered the position of State Chemist of North Carolina, to succeed Prof. Ledoux, resigned, but declined the position, being desirous of becoming regularly engaged as a teacher. Dr. Burney is a native of this county, and is a descendent of a family, (the Hendersons) noted for their intellectual gifts.—Charlotte Observer.

The Recorder, Americus Ga., says: "Clerks, Senators, Representatives, Doctors, Lawyers, Citizens, in public and private life, are testifying by the thousands, and over their own signatures, that a remedy has been found for Bright's Disease of the Kidneys and for Diabetes; these are respectively known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure."

CHICAGO, ILL., Jan. 20, 1880.
H. H. WARNER & Co.—GENTLEMEN:—Have suffered long and severely with acute kidney disease, trying everything without success. Finally struck your great remedy; am taking it at present, with wonderful success. Use this as you please.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

A SUGGESTION.

A number of reasons have recently been given why our Church has not made more rapid progress Much that has been said on this subject has been well said, but not all.

I do not propose to enter the list of those who are inquiring what is the matter, or of those who are proposing remedies. I wish simply to make a suggestion, to be carried out while we are trying to agree as to the difficulty, and the means and mode of relief. My suggestion is this: that all our ministers apply themselves to their peculiar work with renewed zeal and prayer. By this I do not mean that they are to spend more time in their studies, read more books, preach profounder and more finished sermons, but that they are to go into the highways and hedges, and tell the "Old, Old Story," tell it simply, tell it often, tell earnestly, to the lame, the halt and the blind, to the less fortunate and poor of this world. Let them spend much time, not in making learned speeches, visiting city churches and churches along the railroads, which are easy of access, where the Gospel is already preached till it is not appreciated by many, and where there is much in the way of good society to attract, but in visiting our feeble and destitute churches and out-of-the-way places, where the Gospel is seldom or never heard. Let the zeal of God's house eat up our ministers awhile.

Let me say again, I would not be understood as hinting that anything is the matter, or, if there is anything, what it is. I simply wish, in my humble way, to make the above suggestion for the consideration of those who, as instruments, have the prosperity of our Zion chiefly in their hands, and in whom I have great confidence.

If my suggestion is fully put into practice for one year, by that time, possibly, it may appear what is the matter; but if this is not the case we feel sure that a great amount of good will be done. IVANHOE.

May 19, 1880.

For the N. C. Presbyterian

WHAT IS THE MATTER?

Having read a number of articles in your paper on the subject, and seeing various remedies suggested; some advocating lowering the standard of our ministry, and allowing partially educated laymen to preach without compensation, and others the necessity of making our people love the Church, I feel constrained to make a few remarks.

First, as to lowering the standard of education. Having for the past ten years lived in Tennessee among the Cumberland Presbyterians, who left the old Church, because the seminaries did not turn out graduates fast enough to supply the rapidly growing western branches and who received laymen to preach, having been raised in the valley of Virginia, that stronghold of Presbyterianism) I am prepared by observation and experience to look on this picture and then on that, and to note the good or evil of either system. The Cumberlands after leaving the parent Church deteriorated rapidly. They employed a partially educated ministry teaching Calvinism, until unless informed of the fact, that you were worshipping with Presbyterians, you would not be aware of it. The writer was sent to a Presbyterian Church once, (they call themselves Presbyterian without the prefix where there is no Presbyterian organization), and during the protracted services conducted in a very Methodistic manner he returned to the boneland informed the landlord that he had "this way and gone to the Methodist Church.

The Cumberlands have proved valuable as feeders of Presbyterian material to the Methodist Church. Now they are trying to elevate their standard and are doing so, and as they approach our standard they prove feeders to the Presbyterian Church. They are in a strait betwixt the two, and in the last few years have been agitating consolidation with the mother Church. It is to be hoped for, that the day is not far distant when the erring daughter will return, and aid the old, not to say feeble mother, in her arduous labors—arduous because of the prevalence of ignorance "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." NOT PROVEN.

I can accord to the scientist nearly all he can claim without in the slightest degree affecting the foundations of my faith. Does he tell me this universe was created millions of years ago, I do not deny it, for my Bible tells me it "was in the beginning," which may have been long before the millions of ages which he claims. Does he tell me that the laws which are in operation to-day have been in operation for millions of years, I admit; and only add that the great Law-giver existed before these laws. Does he tell me of the boundlessness of space, of the infinitude of worlds, I rejoice the more, for all are the work of my Father's hand. Does he tell me that the laws of evolution show a development from the less to the greater, I accept all that; for under the gospel, from a sinner I became a saint, and from a saint, I shall be exalted above the angels, and shall sit down with the Saviour on His throne. I believe in the survival of the fittest, for the Christian shall survive "the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds." Does he tell me that this evolution dispenses with the Creator, I say not so. There are many things which are claimed in evolution to which I must give the verdict of the Scotch jury, "Not proven." Yet, were I to admit them all, they would not affect my faith in the wisdom and skill and power of the great Father.—President Jackson.

CHANGING ONE'S FAITH.

The reason why a great many people seem to be always changing their faith, is that they never really have any faith. They have indeed what they call a faith, and are often very positive about it. They have gathered together a number of opinions and fancies, often very ill considered, which they say that they believe, using the deep and sacred word for a very superficial and frivolous action of their wills. They no more have a faith than a vagrant has a home who sleeps upon a different door-step every night. And yet he does sleep somewhere every night, and so these wanderers among the creeds, at each given moment are believing something, although that something is forever altering. We do not properly believe what we only think. A thousand speculations come into our heads and our minds dwell upon them, which are not, therefore, to be put into our creed however possible they seem. Our creed, our credo, anything which we call by such a sacred name, is not what we have thought, but what our Lord has told us.—Banner.

DOUBTFUL REPENTANCE.

Some of the religious press have of late not only condemned the utterances of murderers on the scaffold, but, not being content to stop there, have intimated that a man cannot lead a life of crime and then expect to be made ripe for heaven during the last few moments of his life. The story of the thief on the cross is a true story. The man very likely had been a criminal all his life. He had not had the services of a priest at the last, and when he made his confession he was a dying man—hanging and dying on the cross. But Christ's message to him, "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," was all he needed. He died a saved man; not the man he would have been had he never committed his crimes, but a saved, regenerated man. And the mercy that the dying thief found, the dying murderer can find. On the other hand, where a murderer is truly repentant and is forgiven, we believe his chief emotion will be that of remorse and sorrow, with true penitence. This was the feeling that David had after he had murdered Uriah, though it was a year before it came to him. When a murderer on the scaffold shouts and dances for joy, and forgets his crime in the joy he feels that he is "going to glory," we say it may be a striking result of psychological processes, but it is not religion, it is not forgiveness, it is not penitence. Christ closes the door of no one who seeks forgiveness for the blackest crime: but without real repentance and godly sorrow there is no forgiveness. It is to be feared many a man has shouted "glory" on the scaffold only to join in the wail of the lost as he passed from time to eternity.—Christian at Work.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Dean Ryle, Bishop-elect of Liverpool, withdraws from the English Church Association, and announces that he becomes a bishop of the Church and not of any sect or party.

The Japanese edition of the Book of Common Prayer is said to be nearly completed. It is being prepared under the supervision of a mixed committee of English and American missionary societies.

France has voted two hundred millions of francs ($40,000,000) to establish high-schools for girls. "No greater victory than this," says a writer, "has been gained by the Republic over 'the Church' since the great struggle between them began."

The Abbe Thiot, cure at Moutiers (Oise), has announced his intention to leave the Romish Church, and has begun delivering evangelical lectures in Moutiers and the neighborhood. The cure in an important town in the next department has taken the same step, and is about to commence his studies for the ministry under a Protestant faculty.

The Rev. J. C. Gregson, a well-known missionary, is engaged in a temperance missionary tour throughout India, in the course of which he will visit every garrison and military station. He reports a total of more than 8,000 abstainers in the Indian Army, and societies are being also rapidly formed among the various classes of the Civil service, railway employees, &c.

Miss Maria West is doing a novel work at her "Rest and Coffee Room" in Smyrna. About thirty shoe-blacks, mostly Jewish lads, are in the habit of coming every day, when their "shining" is done, to study the Scriptures. Bibles have been called for in eight languages, and many wish to purchase. Preaching services are conducted for an hour each Sunday evening.

The Rev. Mr. Fuller, a missionary at Cameroons, West Africa, writes home that the reign of cruelty and terror which has prevailed there for ages has come to an end. It had been supposed for sometime that the people had put away all their old superstitions, as they professed to, but it was found that one, and that the worst one, had been retained. It was the Mungi, so called, being the name of a powerful secret order, ages old, and into whose mysteries no one had dared to enter. These Mungi, it seems, had certain groves in which they cultivated a poison herb which they gave to such as they wished to kill and eat. The chief, a Christian, named Green, encouraged by Mr. Fuller, becoming satisfied that this evil still existed, called all the people together by a drum-beat, and had all the head Mungi seized and tied up. The truth was now brought out, and the poison herbs were produced and basket loads of them thrown into the river; confessions were made, one man giving the names of twenty-seven persons whom he had killed by this poison, two of them being native teachers, whom Dr. Fuller had placed at one of his stations. The groves were destroyed, and the head men of Mungi condemned to transportation, and so, Mr. Fuller believes, this last terrible practice has been rooted out.

The death is announced of the Rev. Alfred Saker, for many years a missionary of the Baptist Society in the Cameroons, and the pioneer of missionary enterprise on the West Coast of Africa. Mr. Saker was originally employed in the dockyard of Chatham. He sailed some thirty years ago in the Baptist Missionary Society's vessel, the Dove, for Western Africa, to whose best interests he has sacrificed his life. He labored with his own hands in shewing the people how to erect houses and other buildings, and how to manufacture clothes and other articles of wearing apparel, until, becoming interested in these things, as an obvious path to comfort and prosperity they were drawn to Mr. Saker as their true benefactor and friend, and were ever ready to afford him opportunities for imparting that spiritual instruction to which he ever made all things subservient. He reduced the Dualla language into writing, and issued the first book ever printed in that tongue. He returned to England two or three years since in broken health, but continued to labor. His age was sixty-five.

Proceedings of the General Assembly.

[From the Charleston News & Courier.]

FOURTH DAY.

MONDAY, May 24, 1880.

The Assembly met at half-past 9 o'clock a. m., and was opened with devotional exercises. The minutes of Saturday were read and approved.

The following letter to the General Assembly from the Rev. W. C. Dana, D. D., pastor of the Central Presbyterian church of this city, was read by the Clerk and referred to the Committee on Correspondence:

To the Rev. Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States:

REV. AND DEAR SIR—As it cannot escape the notice of the General Assembly that Presbyterianism in this city is not perfectly united, the undersigned, with the concurrence of the elders of the Central Presbyterian church, respectfully solicits attention to a very brief statement, which may remove erroneous impressions, and, perhaps, tend to good results:

The Central Presbyterian church of Charleston, dedicated in 1850, was built by the personal friends of the present pastor at a time when he and they and the Presbytery with which the church was connected were, and had been for more than ten years, excluded from the Synod (from difference of opinion as to the acts of '37 and '38).

The General Assembly of 1852, meeting in this city, restored our rights. The two presbyteries here were united. This union lasted till 1869. Then, at a small meeting of Presbytery at Beech Island, where a full attendance would have cost nearly $400, it was ordered that four of our pastors be notified that they could not consistently be pastors of churches not under rule of Presbytery. (Two of these churches were among the oldest Presbyterian churches in the State, one being an offshoot of the Church of Scotland.)

The Synod, meeting soon after, approved this, and also adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That, in the judgment of the Synod, the Presbyteries should make diligent and faithful inquiry into the profitableness of established pastoral relations within their bounds, and interpose their counsel and authority to secure the dissolution of such as are manifestly injurious to the cause of Christ."—(Minutes of Synod, 1869.)

It was plain that no pastor or church, differing from the majority, could be safe under this unprecedented ruling. This led to the reorganization of the Charleston Union Presbytery, December 6th, 1869.

Two questions arise here: 1. Is it unlawful for a minister in your connection to be pastor of an Independent Presbyterian church? Can a presbytery, by simple vote of the majority, displace a pastor against the will of both pastor and congregation?

An authoritative decision of these questions by the General Assembly may be of great importance to Presbyterianism in this city. To be coerced into connection with a presbytery by the thought that otherwise they shall not have a pastor, and to have "established pastoral relations" liable at any time to be dissolved by the mere will of a casual majority in the presbytery, are novelties exceedingly distasteful to old-time Presbyterians, who find no warrant in the New Testament or in the Presbyterian standards for such invasion of the rights of Christian Churches.

We greatly desire such Presbyterian union as may subsist without sacrifice of principle or danger of collision. Something of this has been happily begun by our united sacramental and other services. We have felt that "like precious faith" was a stronger and more sacred bond than any ecclesiastical ligature; and that, if unity of organization be desirable, it should be preceded by unity of spirit.

That the Synod has no equitable claim on the Central church is obvious to every honorable mind. That it has no legal hold upon it our records show. But we have no wish to render permanent any need less discussion.

The writer of this letter, now in the forty-fifth year of his pastorate, feels that his time is short. Believing that peaceful unity (of spirit at least) is essential to the well-being of Presbyterianism in this city, he is not without hope that some utterance of the General Assembly may be helpful to this happy result. With great respect, W. C. DANA,
Pastor of Central Presbyterian Church.

The report of the Committee on the Sabbath, which was read on Saturday and made the order of the day for 10 o'clock on Monday, was, on motion, referred to a special committee consisting of the Rev. S. M. Neel, J. Woodbridge and C. Hammond.

The Committee on Overtures reported on the overture from the Presbytery of Memphis asking the General Assembly to interpret Article 5, Section of the Form of Government. The Committee recommend that the provision of the Chapter and Section in question is intended as an additional safeguard to the purity and efficiency of the ministry, and the phrase "are admitted to membership" is to be interpreted in its most comprehensive sense as regards the ministry, and applied not only to those admitted by ordination and those received from other denominations, but also to those received by letter of dismission from one Presbytery to another of our own Church.

The Committee on Overtures reported on the overture from the Synod of Texas asking the deliverance of the General Assembly upon the question of women preaching. This overture came up through the Synod of Texas from the Presbytery of Dallas, the Synod having already negatived the right of women to preach, and declared any one who should introduce a woman into the pulpit guilty of an offence.

The report of Committee is as follows: Inasmuch as the public preaching of the gospel is a branch of the ministerial office to the authorization of which ordination or licensure is essential, and inasmuch as inspired scripture, as interpreted by our standards, nowhere, in the case of women, sanctions such a solemnity, but, on the contrary, seems clearly to prohibit it, this Assembly does therefore declare the assumption of this sacred office by women to be opposed to the advancement of true piety and to the promotion of the peace of the Church, and this to such an extent as to make the introduction of women into our pulpits for the purpose of publicly expounding God's Word an irregularity not to be tolerated.

A motion was made to adopt the report of the committee, which brought out a very earnest discussion, in which many of the most eloquent and forcible speakers of the Assembly participated.

Dr. Leyburn, of Baltimore, thought that a much milder answer for the committee on overtures to make would be that the women preaching is without the sanction of the Scriptures.

Judge White, of Nashville, Tenn., objected to the adoption of the report with much warmth, and claimed that every Christian had the right to preach, and it would be an unheard of hardship to close the lips of any who were calculated in many ways to extend the knowledge of Christ. The Bible sanctions the view of the subject, for it makes it the broad duty of every true professor of religion to spread the knowledge of salvation. He was in favor of striking out all of the first part of the committee's report. He urged that the adoption of this report would not only exclude women from the pulpit, but would also curtail and prevent the young men of the theological seminaries from trying their gifts of argument and oratory. The training and experience the young minister would receive in this field would be worth more than all the practical knowledge of the real duties of his office he would be able to derive from the theological lectures of learned professors. It has been the history of the past that the young men of the Church, after years spent in the study of their books, have gone out to take up their real ministry only to discover themselves unprepared for the task, and without any adequate conception of the magnitude of their mission. Send them out during the period of their scholastic education, and allow them to familiarize themselves with the necessities of the world, popular thoughts and popular ideas, and then when their work is finished in the seminaries they will enter upon their ministry in the full exercise of all their faculties.

The Rev. P. T. Penick moved to amend by striking out the word "seems" in the report of the Committee, and inserting the word "does."

The Rev. J. D. West thought that preaching, in a certain sense, belongs to every member of the Church, but the overture refers to official preaching. A woman can preach by her example and her life, but it is against the policy of the Church and the teachings of the Scriptures to allow any one to discharge the duties of the ministerial office without licensure and ordination. An Elder can preach, but the administration of the Sacraments of the Church belongs to the ordained ministry.

Dr. Woodrow said that the Constitution and the Church had already settled the matter. The standard had already been established, and to attempt to modify or change the doctrines of the Church was altogether foreign to the subject under discussion. He said that the 158th question in the Larger Catechism was explicit upon this very point, and settles it beyond all controversy. The question is: "By whom is the Word of God to be preached?" And the answer reads as follows: "The word of God is to be preached only by such as are sufficiently gifted, and also duly approved and called to that office:"

The Rev. Jahleel Woodbridge thought that the Church of God should set its foot down upon any innovation upon the office of the ministry.

The following substitute was offered by Mr. W. S. Primrose.

"It is the judgment of this General Assembly that the official preaching by women is not sustained by the Word of God, and should not be countenanced by any church holding connection with this General Assembly."

Dr. J. R. Wilson referred to the tendency of the times in the direction of lay preaching, and hoped the substitute would not receive the support of the Assembly. No harm could come from the adoption of the report of the committee; there could be no misconception of its meaning. Dr. Woodrow had anticipated him in defining the technical use of the word preaching. No one denies the right of any one to exhort, but no anordained person has the right to "preach."

Dr. Kirkpatrick made the point of order that the substitute was in the nature of an amendment and could not be entertained.

The Moderator ruled the substitute out of order.

Mr. Primrose appealed from the ruling of the Moderator, who was sustained by the Assembly.

The Rev. Edward Martin insisted that it was exceedingly important that the Church should issue no uncertain sound upon this subject, because in various parts of the country we are overwhelmed by self-constituted preachers of the gospel. Even so distinguished a man as Dr. Bonneman holds that the only distinction between Independency and Presbyterianism is that the Independents claim that every man has the inherent right to preach the gospel. Lay preachers are coming upon the country like a flood, and he hoped the report would be adopted.

Dr. Girardeau moved to amend the report by inserting the words "and official" so as to read "public and official preaching." He thought this would meet all the necessities of the case.

Dr. Woodrow said that the Assembly at Knoxville had refused its sanction to unauthorized preaching. It is a common thing for not simply so-called evangelists, but for theological students totally unfit for the work of the ministry, to preach. There can be only one kind of preaching, and the Assembly can recognize no other. If it says public official preaching, it will in effect give its consent that other preaching is authorized than that approved by the Church and authorized in the Scriptures. It is of the last degree of importance whether the preaching of the Gospel is to be carried on, not by a constituted ministry, but by "good men." If this plan is to be set up the Assembly should say so, but so long as the Church has a constitution and catechism it should stand by them, and not by introducing a new element into the ministry, bear down the walls and say that the Church has no constitution.

Dr. Leyburn said that the very matter of difficulty would be remedied by changing the report so as to read "inasmuch as the public preaching of women is not sanctioned by the Word of God and the standards of the Church, it is not to be countenanced."

Mr. J. E. Wilson moved that the whole matter be referred back to the committee for further consideration.

The Rev. A. W. Clisby said the course of the discussion showed the great importance of adopting the report pure and simple. The objection is raised that brethren do not want to have the preaching of theological students stopped; this would not prevent them from exhorting. But preaching is the authoritative exposition of the Word of God, and it belongs to that man who has learned to know what God's Word is. It should be done only by the recognized officers of the Church set apart for this work.

The motion to recommit was lost.

Mr. Walsh moved to lay the amendments on the table. Carried.

Dr. Girardeau said if the Assembly adopted the report of the committee it would prevent the public appearance of theological students. He thought the matter ought to be left to the Presbyteries. There is a broad distinction between public exhortation and official preaching. He was decidedly opposed to the restriction of Christian effort. There should be some limitation, and this might be fixed by the General Assembly declaring that no public or official preaching shall be done by any but regularly ordained ministers of the Church.

The Rev. J. M. Chaney thought the addition of the word "official" would discountenance the labor of those who never could labor "officially."

Dr. J. R. Wilson said the Assembly should avoid anything like surplusage, and the word "public" in the report applies to everything that is called preaching. An official preacher is one on whom the office of preaching has been laid. If an official woman preacher had been licensed and ordained according to the standards of her own Church, she would be officially authorized. The word "public" includes the whole matter.

Dr. Kirkpatrick asked whether the addition of the word "official" would exclude a woman who had been ordained in some other Church, recognized by the Presbyterian as fraternal, for there are other Churches in correspondence with this Church who recognize women preachers.

Dr. Girardeau argued that the word "official" would not take away from the theological students the right to exhort.

The Rev. R. C. Reed said that it is, perhaps, more necessary for young ministers to be instructed than old ones. The question is, whether woman-preaching is an offence, and he would like the addition of the expression that it is an offence.

Mr. Primrose again offered his substitute.

Col. Waddell moved to lay the substitute on the table. Carried.

The Rev. Mr. Woodbridge moved to consider the report in sections.

The motion to divide the report was laid on the table by a vote of 76 to 34.

The Rev. Mr. Penick renewed his motion to amend by substituting the word "does" for the word "seems," and the report as thus amended was adopted.

Dr. Girardeau stated that the Committee on the Diaconate, appointed by the last General Assembly, was not ready to report, and asked for further time. The indulgence was granted, and the committee continued to report at the next meeting of the General Assembly.

Dr. Adger, from the Committee on the Revised Directory for worship, reported that the committee had not been able to meet, but by conference by letter had agreed upon the following plan: The Revised Directory of worship is recommitted; that 1,500 copies of it may be published at the Assembly's expense, and one copy of the same be sent to each minister, and two copies to the stated clerk of each Presbytery, with a view to a thorough examination and criticism of the work in all our Presbyteries, the result of such examination and criticism to be reported to the next Assembly by every Presbytery.

The report was made the special order for 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Committee on Overtures reported on the overture from the Presbytery of Roanoke to amend Chapter 4, Section 1, Article 2, Form of Government, so that only male members in the full communion of the Church shall be eligible to membership in the Presbyteries. The committee recommend that this Assembly declines to submit to the Presbyteries the proposed amendment to the Form of Government, on the ground that the Book of Church Order is sufficiently plain on the subject named in the overture, and does now limit the eligibility of the officers named to male members of the Church.

The Committee on Overtures recommended that the General Assembly decline to submit to the Presbyteries for their action the overture from the Presbytery of Roanoke providing for an amendment to the Form of Government that a Presbytery shall not be required to meet twice a year. A rising vote was taken; and the report of the committee adopted by 68 ayes to 34 noes.

Rev. Charles E. Scott, D. D., special commissioner from the Reformed Church of America, was introduced, and the usual formalities of fraternal greeting were interchanged.

Accounts of the treasurer and of the secretary of Education were reported and approved.

The report of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform was then taken up.

The Rev. Mr. Penick moved that the consideration of the two reports of this committee be postponed until the next meeting of the General Assembly, and that the reports be printed for distribution among the clergy.

The Rev. S. M. Neel objected, and did not see why the matter should be postponed.

Mr. Inglis asked whether the consideration could be postponed.

Dr. Hooper wanted to know what reason there could be for postponement.

Mr. Penick withdrew his motion.

Mr. Morris moved that the majority report of the committee be adopted.

Dr. J. R. Wilson moved that a special committee of five be appointed to bring in some substantive act for the consideration of the Assembly.

An amendment was moved that the committee consist of one member from each Synod. The amendment was accepted and the motion as amended was adopted.

In accordance with this motion the Moderator appointed the following: Synod of Kentucky, G. W. Morris; Synod of South Carolina, F. L. Leeper; Synod of North Carolina, G. D. Parks; Synod of Missouri, O. W. Gauss; Synod of Mississippi, W. C. Dunlop; Synod of Virginia, L. C. Inglis; Synod of Georgia, A. W. Clisby; Synod of Nashville, J. A. Wallace; Synod of Memphis, J. D. West; Synod of Arkansas, J. M. Brown; Synod of Texas, J. S. Moore; Synod of Alabama, W. H. Fellows; Synod of Georgia, A. B. Curry.

An overture from the Presbytery of Athens was read, asking the Assembly to make a more full and explicit deliverance upon the subject of dancing and worldly amusements.

Covington, Ky., having received 67 votes, was chosen as the place of next meeting of the Assembly; Staunton, Va., received 65 votes.

Adjourned with prayer to meet at half-past 9 on Tuesday morning.

FIFTH DAY.

TUESDAY, May 25, 1880.

The Assembly met at the appointed hour and was duly opened.

The Rev. Jahleel Woodbridge offered the following resolution to avoid misconception of the tenor of the debate on Monday:

Inasmuch as on a motion for the adoption of the Committee of Bills and Overtures on overture No. 9, respecting the public preaching of women, a long discussion occurred on a collateral issue, which discussion may be misunderstood as referring to said preaching of women, it is distinctly affirmed that on that subject there is no difference of opinion in the Assembly, it being unanimously forbidden and condemned.

The Assembly declined to reconsider.

The following dispatch from the General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly was received:

MADISON, WIS., May 24, 1880.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in session at Charleston:

The General Assembly in session at Madison, Wisconsin, extend fraternal salutations to the General Assembly at Charleston, South Carolina, and prays that grace, mercy and peace from God, the Father; and our Lord Jesus Christ may be multiplied abundantly to all its members.

WILLIAM M. PAXTON, Moderator.

Referred to the Committee on Foreign Correspondence for immediate answer, after they have reported to the General Assembly.

The Rev. J. D. West thought it was of the greatest importance to have the revised Directory published and circulated among the ministers for their information and instruction.

The Moderator said it was in accordance with parliamentary usage to print the reports of all committees.

Mr. D. C. Collins of Kentucky moved the following substitute:

Resolved, That the report of the committee on the revision of the Directory of Worship be accepted and recommitted to the same committee, with permission to have a sufficient number of copies printed at the expense of the General Assembly, and a copy of the same be forwarded to each minister of this Church and two copies to each session; also two copies to each stated clerk of presbyteries, with a request that the same be critically examined by each presbytery, and the result of such examination and criticism be forwarded to the chairman of said Committee on Revision for their use in making a report to the next General Assembly.

The consideration of the substitute was postponed.

An overture was presented from the Rev. M. W. Woodworth, that hereafter the stated clerk publish in the minutes, a full list of all reports, both regular and special, that the stated clerks are required to transmit to the next Assembly; also that church sessions shall not be required to make a separate report on systematic beneficence as unnecessary, expensive and confusing.

On the overture from the Presbytery of Florida, sent up through the Synod of Georgia, asking an answer to the following question: "Can the office of ruling elder, or deacon, as that of a minister be demitted?"

The Committee reports:

First, that the word "demit" does not occur in our standards, and its use produces confusion. A minister of the Gospel cannot demit his office; he can be divested of his office only by act of Presbytery. Second, the rules for divesting a minister of his office without censure do not, in all cases, apply to the ruling elder and deacon. For instance, the provision of Rules of Discipline, Chapter 12, Section 3 has application only to a minister of the Gospel, and the provisions of Form of Government, Chapter 6, Sections 3, 4 and 6 and Rules of Discipline, Chapter 8, Sections 6 and 10, while applying to the elder and deacon, are expressively restricted to the case where the officer is unacceptable to the church.

The Rev. H. R. Raymond said it was the design of the overture to get an answer to the question whether a ruling elder or a deacon could be relieved of his ordination vows. A man can be allowed to cease from his official labors, but if he should take up the office again, would he have to be re-ordained? He thought the report of the committee did not answer the real question at issue.

Mr. Collins was convinced the committee had given the question involved the most careful consideration, and that their report concluded that a minister can lay down his office, but an elder or deacon cannot.

Mr. Raymond asked whether a session could relieve an elder or deacon without regular judicial process.

Mr. Collins was of opinion that a session had no right to exercise such authority.

The Rev. Mr. Doak thought the report of the committee fully covered the case, and that its adoption would settle the whole question.

The Rev. R. C. Reed said that the Roanoke Presbytery of Virginia, famous among the churches for its orthodoxy in all matters of church doctrine and government, had declared that an elder could be "demitted." The judgment of that Presbytery is that ordination means the same thing in the case of the elder or deacon as in that of the minister, and that they can be divested of their offices just as the minister.

The Rev. Mr. Rawlings said there was no provision in the Book of Discipline by which the rule as applied to ministers could be applied to elders and deacons. He quoted the following from the Rules of Discipline, chapter 12, section 3:

"A minister of the Gospel against whom there are no charges, if fully satisfied in his own conscience that God has not called him to the ministry, or if he has satisfactory evidence of his inability to serve the church with acceptance, may report these facts at a stated meeting. At the next stated meeting, if after full deliberation the Presbytery shall concur with him in judgment, it may divest him of his office without censure, and shall assign him membership in some particular church."

The Rev. S. M. Neel knew of an elder who could not agree upon all points with the Confession of Faith, and asked how such a case as this could be reached.

The Moderator said the question turned upon the interpretation of the book and the old matter of the spirit and the letter of the law.

Dr. Wilson said the committee thought at first that if a minister could be divested of his office an elder could in like manner be divested, but the question came up, can a law, the letter of which has to be observed, be interpreted according to analogy.

The Rev. Henry Quigg thought chapter 8, section 10, of the Rules of Discipline, effectually settled the whole, which reads as follows:

Whenever a minister of the Gospel shall habitually fail to be engaged in the regular discharge of his official functions, it shall be the duty of the Presbytery at a stated meeting to inquire into the cause of such dereliction, and if necessary institute judicial proceedings against him for breach of his covenant engagement. If it shall appear that his neglect proceeds only from his want of acceptance to the Church, the Presbytery may, upon the same principle upon which it withdraws license from a probationer for want of evidence of the Divine call, divest him of his office without censure, even against his will, a majority of two-thirds being necessary for this purpose. In such a case the clerk shall under the order of the Presbytery forthwith deliver to the individual concerned a written notice that at the next stated meeting the question of his being so dealt with is to be considered. This notice shall distinctly state the grounds for this proceeding. The party thus notified shall be heard in his own defence, and if the decison pass against him he may appeal as if he had been tried by the usual forms. This principle may apply, mutatis mutandis, to ruling elders and deacons.

Rev. Joseph Evans did not see why heresy should be tolerated in an elder more than in a minister.

Dr. Kirkpatrick thought the passage read by Mr. Quigg was decisive. Under the old constitution a minister could retire without censure on the ground that he was not acceptable to the congregation, and the same principle should and does apply to elders and deacons. The same principle applied to all the ordained officers of the Church, and he hoped that the book would be saved from the absurdity of making ordination more binding on ministers than on the ruling elders and deacons of the Church. A literal interpretation of the authority of the Church upon this subject would divest the elders and deacons of their offices, just as in the case of the clergy.

Dr. Moore said there were two cases in the book in which a minister could be divested of his office—when he habitually fails to engage in the work of the ministry, and when he fails to prove acceptable to his people. The question is, can Presbytery for the same reasons divert elders and deacons of their rights under ordination. The principle in the two cases is the same, and all the church has to do is to enforce it.

The Rev. Mr. Martin said there was another case in point, Rules of Discipline, chapter 12, section 3. The only difference between the ministers and the elders is that the ministers are ordained by the Classical Presbytery and the elders and deacons by the Session or Parochial Presbytery.

Mr. Chaney moved that the reports be recommitted, and the committee instructed to bring in an affirmative answer.

Mr. Collins thought the subject demanded specific legislation, and that the question should not be settled upon the principle of analogy.

The Rev. Mr. Stratton said that it had been the custom of the Church for fifty years to divest elders and deacons of their office.

Dr. Wilson hoped the report would not be recommitted as it answered the case.

The Rev. Mr. Walsh quoted from chapter 6, section 7, paragraph 3, to prove that an elder or deacon cannot be divested of his office but by deposition after regular trial, except in cases where they "may become unacceptable in his official character to a majority of the church in which he serves." In such case it is competent for the session on complaint and after investigation to dissolve the relation.

Mr. J. M. Kirkpatrick hoped the report would not be recommitted, because it would bring up an endless debate, and the "Assembly would never be able to reach that word 'finally.'"

Dr. Girardeau thought the best way to amend the matter would be to amend the law. He dissented from the doctrine of analogy in this case, and thought the principle would not obtain.

Mr. Scott thought the analogy between the offices of elder and deacon and preacher in this case was clear.

The Rev. Mr. Penick considered the law already very clear upon the subject, and that sessions could proceed in the same way as the Presbyteries.

The motion to recommit was put to the General Assembly, and was lost by a heavy vote.

The Rev. J. M. Chaney moved that the word "not" in the report of the committee be stricken out, and thought the principle of divestiture should apply to all the ordained officers of the Church.

Mr. Dance made the point of order that this motion would raise the same question as that just decided.

The motion to amend by striking out "not" was lost.

The vote was then taken on the report of the committee, which was adopted by a large majority.

Dr. Hooper, of the Committee on Correspondence, to which the telegram from the Northern Assembly was referred, reported the following reply:

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 25, 1880.

To the Moderator of the General Assembly, Madison, Wisconsin:

The General Assembly in session at Charleston, S. C., receive with pleasure the fraternal salutations of their brethren assembled at Madison, Wisconsin, and cordially pray that the richest blessings of Father, Son and Holy Ghost may abide with you while in session, may accompany you to your homes and rest upon your families and the whole Church you represent. THOMAS A. HOYT, Moderator.

The report was adopted, and the dispatch was forwarded.

The report of the Committee on the Directory of Worship was read and adopted.

The substitute of Mr. Collins was then taken up and adopted.

The Committee on Bills and Overtures on the overture from the Synod of Alabama asking the Assembly to revise the appointment of delegates to the Presbyterian Alliance, with a view to a more equal distribution of ministerial delegates among the various Synods, reported that "it is deemed inadvisable by this Assembly to revise the appointment already made of delegates to the General Presbyterian Council, but it is considered desirable that when such appointments shall again be made due attention should be paid to the representatives of all sections of the Church."

The report was adopted.

Notice was given that Dr. Peck and Dr. Farris had sent in their resignations as delegates to the Evangelical Alliance, and, on motion, the matter was referred to the Committee on Correspondence.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters or this column.

BUFFALO CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR:—Notwithstanding you are crowded with the important news from the General Assembly, you must squeeze into some corner this little note about our delightful services at Buffalo church, on the occasion of its dedication. We have been occupying the house since last August, but our session wisely decided that it should not be given to God, until it was paid for. And so the dedicatory services were delayed until Saturday, 15th May.

A brief note about the house may not be out of place. This is the fourth house of worship built on nearly the same spot. The first was a log house which was torn away in 1817, (we have no data to show when erected) to give place to a frame house, which in turn was replaced (the same material however being used) by a larger house built about 1848. This was the third, and having been in use more than thirty years, and much of the material more than sixty years, sadly needed repairs or renewal. So with great unanimity our people resolved less than two years ago to "arise and build," and with energetic devotion and real sacrifice have completed a very convenient and comfortable, and in my judgment comely house of worship. It was dedicated without a cent of indebtedness resting upon it, though there is much yet to be done to furnish it completely. The children of the Sabbath school by their voluntary contributions secured the pulpit. The house was built with great economy, and fortunately when material and labor were lowest, the total cost being about $2,500, the whole of which except about $100 being given by Buffalo congregation.

The house is frame, with an auditorium, 39x60 feet, and 23 feet pitch, and arched roof, with a gallery around three sides; a vestibule 12x12, and two lobbies for stairways, 10x14 each; a tower and belfry 67 feet high; and a session room in rear, opening into the church, 10x32 feet. The seating capacity is on the floor 360, galleries 340. But the generous space in aisles and platform and rooms adjacent, affords extra seating capacity of 300.

The architect was Mr. J. J. Minor, of Fayetteville, and the plans as carefully drawn by him reflect great credit on his taste and skill. The contractor was Mr. J. B. Masemoore of Cameron. His work speaks for itself, and every one who sees it admires it. The church is neatly and becomingly painted, and in the deep old oak grove and in the spot sacred for nearly a century to the worship of God, presents a most attractive place. You must sometime come and see for yourself.

The session unanimously invited Rev. Evander McNair, D. D., late of Arkansas, now in Robeson county, to preach the dedication sermon. The ministers of neighboring churches were also invited; and especially those who had been the pastors and supplies in former years, to be present. On Saturday a vast assembly of expectant worshipers waited in the courts of the Lord. I think not less than 700 people were present. Dr. McNair preached from 1 Kings, viii.:29, having read that memorable description of the dedication of the temple of Solomon. Tall, erect, commanding in manner and tone, venerable from years, honors and long experience, who can forget his stately and majestic eloquence, the deep solemnity of his manner, the chaste and elevated style, and the weighty matter of his discourse, and pervading all, the serious earnestness and melting tenderness that made this sermon and all that he preached for us so memorable and impressive? It was a day and a scene to be remembered. The old hung with rapt and tearful attention on his lips, who in earlier years so enchanted them, rejoiced to find the old fervor and power, though mellowed by years and enriched by experience, still abiding and more effective. The young listened with eager ears to one of whom voices now pushed in death had so often spoken, no longer wondering at the love with which his name was mentioned. Many and many a time when camp-meetings used to be held at Buffalo, and in the earlier ruder houses of worship, hallowed in association, had Dr. McNair preached to these people and their parents, and the satisfaction of all was intense, that he was present to offer in their behalf this house of worship to the glory of God—(this being the third church in which he has preached at Buffalo.)

Sunday the crowd was still larger—at least a thousand people being within the walls, and many not finding entrance. During the solemn services the attention was profound. The whole occasion was one of rare spiritual delight. Doubtless some attended for the last time, for the old, the very old came once more. The communion was administered to about four hundred people. With undiminished numbers and unwearying interest, the vast multitude waited through the protracted services, and then slowly, solemnly, reverently retired.

The weather was deliciously cool, both Saturday and Sunday, and from beginning to end the services were thoroughly enjoyed. Dr. McNair tells me that he has seen the grove thronged with worshipers, and vocal with prayer and praise, and that the crowd in attendance Sunday, and their deep feeling, reminded him of the good old days. We all heartily echoed his prayer that the glory of this latter house may even exceed that of the former days.

What a delight it was to have him with us—"the old man eloquent." He is as straight as an arrow, his step as elastic and firm as a man of forty, rich in varied experience and spiritual wisdom, sympathetic in feeling and manner, and with as young a heart as ever, and with unabated mental vigor and power, it has been a great refreshment to me to have had such a guest, and to us all to have had such a season of spiritual nourishment. And fortunate will that charge be to whom he may be called to minister. May his bow long abide in strength.

THE CALLED MEETING OF WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

In obedience to the call of the Moderator, the Presbytery of Wilmington met at Burgaw on the 29th of May, at 9 o'clock a. m., to consider a call from South River Chapel for the pastoral service of Rev. A. McFadyen for one-fourth of his time.

Ministers present: Rev. G. W. McMillan, Moderator, Rev. B. F. Marable, A. McFadyen, Kenneth McDonald, J. S. Black and H. B. Garriss. Ruling Elders: W. H. G. Beatty, of South River Chapel, W. T. Bannerman, of Burgaw, T. B. Hyman, of Goldsboro, R. W. Moore, of Keith and W. J. Boney, of Rockfish.

W. H. G. Beatty appeared in Presbytery as commissioner from South River Chapel, prosecuting the call.

A motion was made to place the call from South River Chapel in the hands of Rev. A. McFadyen, and after some discussion, was amended as follows: That the call be placed in his hands and he be requested to state to the five congregations to which he preaches that Presbytery desires them to take the proper steps for circumscribing his field of labor as soon as possible.

Rev. A. McFadyen accepted the call, and, on motion, the Moderator was requested to appoint the usual committee to conduct the installation. The following appointment was made: Rev. C. Shaw to preach, preside and propose the constitutional questions; Rev. Kenneth McDonald to charge the people, and Rev. James Kelly to charge the pastor. The time for installation is the second Sabbath in July next at 11 o'clock a. m.

On motion Presbytery adjourned.

Closed with prayer.

W. T. BANNERMAN, Clerk, pro tem.

INSTALLATION AT ROCKY MOUNT, N. C.

Sabbath, 30th May, was a precious day in the history of the Rocky Mount Presbyterian church. Rev. L. C. Vass, of Newbern, by the order of Orange Presbytery, installed Rev. L. H. Baldwin, on the Sabbath, as pastor of this church. He had previously been installed as pastor of Tarboro church, where he preaches two Sabbaths in each month. For sometime our prospects here have looked rather gloomy, because of frequent changes of the preachers on the field, and consequent difficulties about plans and leadership. Money had been collected nearly sufficient for a building, and a beautiful lot had been given by Mr. Geo. Allen, of Newbern, for the site. But no contract for erection had been made. Mr. Baldwin came on the ground in January last, and has been moving with commendable energy, and inspired confidence in the membership. The church building was at once put under contract, and is now used for worship, though not plastered, or painted. They have nearly enough money to complete it, and will then have a very pretty and comfortable house. The congregation is hopeful, and intend to complete the work in a few weeks. The Lord's Supper was administered at night, and three gentlemen, one of them the head of a family, were received into the church; two of them on profession of faith, one of whom was baptized. Two others had been previously received. Delay here has been hurtful, but now under God's blessing a bright day is dawning. Bro. Baldwin is active and popular, and we hope will remain long with the people. They want soon to secure his services for two Sabbaths. A flourishing Sabbath School has been inaugurated, and was addressed by Mr. Vass on Sabbath afternoon. Rocky Mount has a noble band of female working members, and will have to elect two deaconesses like Phœbe, if the male members do not look sharply around and step up very quickly.

The work in Tarboro is progressing very cheeringly, and six members have been received since Mr. Baldwin's residence there; five of them on profession of their faith. The church at Scotland Neck has also been organized with ten members, (six on profession.) Thus this portion of our evangelistic field is now yielding rich fruit after many year's labor by several faithful brethren; and better things seem to be ahead of us now.

Rev. D. A. McRae writes to us from San Augustine, Texas,—which for the present is his postoffice—under date of May 19th:

At present I am in this town. Rev. S. F. Tenney and myself have been out on an evangelistic tour for about two weeks, passing through parts of at least six counties and preaching at different points in each county. At Wood's in Panola county, we preached two days and nights, organized a church with fourteen members. Two persons were received the next day on examination and six children were baptized. A large part of the community is made up of North Carolinians who left the State many years ago. Many of them belong to the Baptist church but they treated us with every kindness—both the members, and Rev. Mr. Maxwell, their minister, who is a warm hearted christian gentleman. We left that point on Monday morning last, and came on to Center, the county site of Shelby, which is a growing little town of about two hundred or three hundred inhabitants. There Bro. Tenney and I parted. Brother T. went on that evening to Shelbyville expecting to preach there that night, but owing to the knowledge of his appointment not reaching the congregation in time for them to make it known they had no preaching. I stopped in Centre and preached that night in the Methodist church; was very kindly received there by all the denominations, and earnestly requested to come back again. I found there two or three Old School Presbyterians, several Cumberlands, and a few Lutherans. The prospect there for a Presbyterian church is very good, with preaching and prudent management. Leaving Centre, I rejoined Brother Tenney yesterday, and we reached San Augustine last evening. Preached here last night and will continue preaching through this week.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

The final examination of the Senior Class ended on Friday, May 28th: The exercises of commencement week will begin with the Baccalaureate Sermon, on Sunday, June 13. The address before the Philanthropic and Eumenean Literary Societies will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. W. E. Boggs, of Atlanta, Ga., on Wednesday, June 16th, at 11 o'clock a. m. The address before the Alumni Association will be delivered on the same day, at 8 p. m., by the Rev. W. S. Lacy, of Jonesboro, N. C. The Anniversary of the Literary Societies will be celebrated on Wednesday, June 15th, at 8 p. m. The exercises of Commencement Day will be held on Thursday, June 17th. The exercises will begin at 9:30 a. m.

Arrangements will be made with the railroads to secure reduced rates to visitors.

Dear Brother McLaurin: A late writer in the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN alludes to the ladies of the Salisbury church as having done something for Brother Davis' Chapel in Soochow, and suggests that it would be well to let the amounts raised for that purpose be made known to the public. By the courtesy of the treasurer of the Presbytery of Concord, I am allowed to extract from his records the following statement of contributions:

Collected by the Ladies' Association of Salisbury church, $50; sent by Mr. Edwin Shaver, of Salisbury church, $25; Back Creek church, $21 32; Thyatira, $7; a lady of Concord, $1; Rocky River Ladies Association, $10; Rev. J. C. Kennedy (the blind preacher), $10; Rev. J. A. Ramsay, $3 85; two ladies and three children (from Charlotte), $4; Taylorsville church, $10 10; Mooresville church, $8; individuals in Morganton (many of them children of the Sabbath school, through Rev. R. B. A), $17. Total, $167 27.

The Presbytery of Concord commended this cause to all its churches, and I suppose many others will yet send in contributions.

Yours truly, J. RUMPLE.

Salisbury, May 27.

ORGANIZATION OF NAHALAH CHURCH.

Editor N. C. Presbyterian: By order of Orange Presbytery the undersigned, as Evangelist, organized Nahalah church, on Saturday, the 22d of May. Ten communicant members were received into the new church—six males and four females. Four families are represented, and three of the gentlemen are unmarried. This is the fourth church which the subscriber has organized in the Presbytery's Eastern Mission field. It is a country church, in the county of Halifax, fifteen miles east of Enfield, a station on the W. & W. R. R., and six miles south of Scotland Neck. It is located in the heart of an "Old Side," or Primitive Baptist community, and great opposition was encountered by the Evangelist when he first opened the work. The field was subsequently cultivated by Rev. Messrs. Allison and Rankin, and is now supplied by Rev. Mr. Baldwin, pastor of the Church at Tarboro. The Rev. D. E. Jordan, by occasional visits, rendered most acceptable and efficient service in recommending the doctrines and polity of the Church. It is now the most promising missionary field within the bounds of the Presbytery. Besides those received in the organization of the church there are some six or eight other applicants for admission.

The church building with two acres of land is the gift of Dr. M. T. Savage, to whose untiring energy and zeal success is largely due. It is a very neat house, not quite completed, in gothic style and 28x48 feet. With the exception of Dr. Savage himself and one gentleman received by certificate from the Methodist Protestant church, the rest were the fruits of the field itself, for the two others received by certificate from Tarboro were baptized on confession in the early days of the mission. This is the second church Dr. Savage has put up at his own cost, the first having been fired by an incendiary. The present building is much neater and is insured.

There was preaching on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday Brother Baldwin baptized four children. The church was organized and Dr. M. T. Savage and Mr. W. T. Whitehead elected elders. On Sunday morning, in the presence of a crowded house, these were ordained and two adults were baptized. In the afternoon the Lord's Supper was administered. We were glad to see a good representation from Tarboro church.

The church was called Nahalah, a Hebrew word used to designate Israel as the Lord's inheritance—his ecclesia, church or chosen and cherished people. By this name the first church building was known. Other Hebrew words were offered, as Rutramiah, i. e. having obtained mercy, and Beth-hanan, the house of grace, but the first had obtained currency.

By the way couldn't our brethren at Barbecue, etc., etc., be induced to adopt names similar to the above, which are at once, smooth, scriptural, significant, and not so common as other scriptural names like Zion, Hebron, &c.

JOHN W. PRIMROSE.

We had hoped to have proceedings of the Committee of Sustentation of Wilmington Presbytery, during their meeting on the 29th ult. at Burgaw. We learn that various changes were made in the ministerial supplies to vacant churches. Preaching services were held every day and night during the meetings of the committee. On Sabbath last a mass meeting of Sabbath schools was held. Addresses were made by Revs. Marable, McFadyen and Garriss. The people of Burgaw greatly appreciated these meetings, and the future prospect of the church is hopeful.

Rev. L. C. Vass writes from Wilson, N. C., May 28th, ult.:

I preached here Wednesday and Thursday nights, and got to Rocky Mount this morning. I am appointed to instal Bro. Baldwin on Sunday and expect to preach there tonight, &c. Will get him to send you an account of the exercises. This is a beautiful and thriving village. We have a beautiful lot purchased for a church building. Our little band of Presbyterians here have been most hospitably entertained by the Missionary Baptists, who for a long time have given them free use of their neat church, which they are now putting in "apple-pie" order. But our members are very anxious to have a church of their own, which will greatly promote their growth. Bro. Primrose is deservedly very popular here with everybody. It is rumored that he has been called to Oxford, and these people do not want to give him up. Friends to Christ's cause ought to send contributions to this church. A few hundred dollars will now put them all right, and enable them to build. They must have this over all they can themselves raise. Mr. John Hutchinson, a ruling elder of the Newbern church, is the popular cashier of the First National Bank in Wilson, and will gladly receive and acknowledge any gifts to this good work. Just let two hundred Presbyterians in the State write him a short "love letter" with a greenback in it to prove their statement. Nobody knows how happy that sort of thing will make that good man. I hope they will try it.

The churches of Rev. E. M. Munroe, Camden and Mt. Holly, Ark., in Ouachita Presbytery, have given him six weeks vacation, and he is now probably with his friends and relatives in North Carolina. Mr. Munroe is a son of Fayetteville Presbytery, of whom she is justly proud, and a warm welcome will be his. At present Mr. Munroe's postoffice address is Fayetteville, N. C.

Proceedings of the General Assembly.

[From the Charleston News & Courier.]

SIXTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, May 26.

The Assembly was opened in usual form.

Dr. Kirkpatrick, of the Committee on Theological Seminaries, reported that they found nothing in the condition of the Union Theological Seminary calling for special action. The committee recommend the adoption of the following minute:

The General Assembly acknowledges the courtesy of the trustees in laying their report before the body, and heartily unites in the tribute of thanksgiving to the Great Head of the Church for His continued favor to the beloved Institution over which they preside.

The report was adopted.

In reporting on overture of Tuskaloosa Presbytery to consider the question, and, if possible to so arrange that theological students can be employed during the term of study in serving destitute churches or neighborhoods, the committee recommend that the General Assembly decline to express any opinion. The first, namely, the terms of study in our theological seminaries, it would seem most judicious to leave to the experience and sound discretion of the directors of these institutions. The second, namely, the employment of students of theology during their vacations, "in supplying vacant churches," properly belongs to the presbyteries.

The Committee on Theological Seminaries report the Tuskaloosa Institute as in an encouraging condition. Economy specially notable has been exercised. During the past year the Institute received $2,378 09, and expended $1,149 65, leaving a balance in the treasury of $2,114 17, which amount will be necessary for the running expenses of the present year. The Institute is growing in the confidence of the churches. The committee recommend as soon as practicable that a teacher in the lower branches be secured and suitable buildings be provided.

The Rev. C. A. Stillman, D. D., Dr. J. T. Searcy and H. M. Somerville, Esq., of Tuscaloosa, the Rev. D. D. Sanderson and W. P. Webb, Esq., of Eutaw, the Rev. T. W. Hooper, D. D., and Joseph Hardie, Esq., of Selma, constitute the executive committee for the next year, Dr. Stillman being also the corresponding secretary. The executive committee are authorized as soon as the necessary means shall be obtained to meet the expenses, without incurring debt, to employ an assistant teacher, and also to provide suitable buildings for the institute of the kind described in their report to the present General Assembly. They are also empowered to employ a soliciting agent if necessary.

The Rev. Edward Martin moved that the whole subject of the resolutions of the committee, as matter that would come up in another form in the discussion of the report of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, be postponed or docketed.

The report of the committee was accordingly docketed.

On the overture from the Presbytery of Athens, asking the Assembly to make a more full and explicit deliverance on the subject of dancing and worldly amusements, the committee on bills and overtures made the following report:

This Assembly declines attempting any such deliverance—

1st. Because the deliverances of former Assemblies on this subject are as full and specific as the nature of the case allows.

2d. Because the evils referred to are to be met, not by resort to deliverances of the Assembly, but rather by care on the part of the courts of original jurisdiction.

The report of the committee was adopted. The following overture then came up from the Synod of South Carolina on the report of the Committee on Bills and Overtures:

The Synod of South Carolina hereby overtures the General Assembly, respectfully praying that it will consider and repeal, or at least seriously modify, so much of the deliverance of the late Assembly, at Louisville, in relation to Worldly Amusements, as declares that all deliverances of the General Assembly, and by necessary implication, of the other courts of the Church, which are not made by them in a strictly judicial capacity, but are deliverances in thesi can be considered as only didactic, advisory and monitory. (Printed Minutes, 1879, p. 24). The Synod admits—

1. That the General Assembly cannot add to the Constitution or make any constitutional rule.
2. That it has no power to commence process against individuals.
3. That in the exercise of the constitutional power of review and control, it can reach directly only the court below, and the other courts only mediately through it.
4. That it is precluded from deliverances in thesi which may prejudice a judicial case likely to come before it.
5. That some deliverances of the Assembly and of the other courts of the Church are only advisory, recommendatory and monitory.

The repeal or modification of so much of the said deliverance as has been herein specified is asked on the following grounds:

1. Because it makes judicial decisions, as contradistinguished from didactic decisions something different from and more than didactic; which is the same thing as to make them different from and more than declarative decisions, and so the constitution is contradicted, which represents all church power as simply ministerial and declarative. There is, it is conceded, a difference between judicial and deliberative decisions growing out of the different circumstances which condition them; but to make a distinction between judicial and didactic decisions is to assign the judicial something more than a declarative enforcement upon the conscience of the law of God. Either it is held that didactic and judicial decisions are the same, or it is held that they are different. If it be held that they are the same, the deduction in this deliverance is utterly illogical, and ought to be corrected. If it be held that they are different, we affirm the unconstitutionality of the discrimination.

2. Because it reduces the General Assembly and the other courts of our Church, so far as they are deliberative bodies, to the status of Congregationalist Associations, possessed only of advisory powers, is contrary to the genius of the Presbyterian system and that historic doctrine of our Church as to the binding force of such deliberative decisions as are expository of constitutional law, and tends to degrade the authority and lessen the influence of the Assembly.

3. Because said deliverance takes away the key of doctrine from the General Assembly and the other courts of the Church, and retains in their hands the key of discipline alone.

4. Because it contravenes the great principle laid down in the Confession of Faith, consecrated by the blood of our martyred ancestors, and until now well-nigh universally recognized among us; that good and necessary consequences from the doctrines and precepts of the Divine Word, or from the Constitution of our Church, are of equal authority with the Word and the Constitution; and when declared by the church court in any capacity, whether judicial or deliberative, must bind the conscience and can no more be regarded as simply advisory and monitory than are the word itself and our Constitution. They have legal authority because they are law.

5. Because it opposes the doctrine of our standards, long practically acted on in our Church, that the church courts are appointed by Christ to be authoritative expounders of His law contained in the Scriptures, and, as we believe, reflected on our constitution. It is admitted that they have no original power to make law, but they can declare it, and it cannot, consistently with our standards, be held that the only office of exposition by which the courts ministerially declare Christ's law is discharged by them when sitting in a strictly judicial capacity. But if the courts act by Christ's appointment when they, in their deliberative capacity, solemnly declare His law, they are entitled, in the discharge of that function, not only to be respected as advisers, but to be obeyed as authoritative expounders of law. Their deliberative decisions, so far as they furnish the right construction of the law, exert a legal force upon the conscience.

6. Because it makes it necessary, in order that an authoritative decision upon any point, either of doctrine or of morals, may be obtained from the General Assembly, or any other court, that judicial process in the Courts of first resort be instituted, involving the case whose resolution is desired; and so a tendency to general litigation would be engendered in our churches. For it is not to be supposed that, having been accustomed to Presbyterian usages, they would be satisfied with Congregationalist advice. The action will in all probability issue in breeding contentions and multiplying judicial cases.

7. Because it is inconsistent with the following express provisions of our constitution: "It belongs to synods and councils ministerially to determine controversies of faith and cases of conscience; to set down rules and directions for the better ordering of the public worship of God, and government of His Church * * * which decrees and determinations, together with those which are judicial and just mentioned if consonant to the Word of God, are to be received with reverence and submission, not only for their agreement with the Word, but also for the power whereby they are made, as being an ordination of God, appointed thereby by His Word." (Confession of Faith, chapter 32, section 2.) "They (church courts) may frame symbols of faith, bear testimony against error in doctrine and immorality in practice, injuriously affecting the Church; to decide in all controversies respecting doctrine and discipline." (Form of Government, chapter 5, section 6, Article 5.)

To this overture the Committee on Bills and Overtures made the following report:

This Assembly interprets the language complained of in the overture as by no means declaring that all deliverances in thesi uttered by a General Assembly are to be considered as merely "dicactic, advisory and minority," but only as assuming that when any in thesi deliverance bears upon the law of offences and the administration of discipline it is not to be regarded as furnishing a sufficient ground for judicial process by the court of original jurisdiction which has the power of interpreting for itself the law of offences as laid down in the constitution of the Church.

2. This Assembly therefore declines to repeal or modify the deliverance referred to, as thus interpreted, of the last Assembly.

A minority report was offered by the Rev. L. H. Blanton, which advises that the Assembly simply declare:

We recommend that this request be declined, believing that that answer in this respect is a correct interpretation of the constitution.

Dr. Girardeau asked the chairman of the committee the exact meaning of the first part of the report—if he meant to say all deliverances of church courts were simply didactic, advisory and monitory.

Dr. Wilson said that the committee had simply gone into an interpretation of the answer of the last General Assembly.

The Rev. Mr. Penick, in order to bring the matter properly before the Assembly, moved the adoption of the majority report.

The Rev. S. M. Neel rose to oppose the adoption of the majority report, and to favor the acceptance of the minority report. He would not enter into the argument, but believed the minority report brought the matter most clearly before the Assembly. It re-affirms the action of the Assembly of 1879, and makes a clear and simple issue of the matter. The speaker, therefore, moved that the minority be substituted for the majority report.

The Rev. Mr. Penick asked for a particular case in thesi in which the deliverance of the church courts can be other than advisory, didactic and monitory.

Dr. Wilson then made a very clear explanation of the reasons leading the committee to the conclusions contained in the majority report. It was a matter of simple interpretation of the action of the Assembly, differing from the language of the overture from the Synod of South Carolina, and does not need any explanation, modification or interpretation.

The Rev. F. L. Leeper said that the Synod of South Carolina does not care in what form the answer is reached.

Dr. Girardeau then rose and said that if the General Assembly was unwilling to go into a thorough consideration of the subject he would prefer not to say anything.

It did not matter which report was before the Assembly—they both belonged to the same family. The question was whether the General Assembly would reaffirm the action of the Louisville Assembly, to which the Synod of South Carolina finds exceptions. It was not presumption to oppose the authority of any church court not planted on the organic law of the Church. The speaker would bow with profound submission to the authority of any church court fulfilling all the legal conditions, but it is the right of a Presbyterian freeman to except to any deliverance against constitutional law. The action of the Louisville Assembly can be reversed, and there are cases in the recent history of the Church to establish this conclusion. In 1874 the Assembly at Columbus, Ga., denounced the principle underlying the formation of the Pan-Presbyterian Council, and the Assembly of 1875 took up the subject for discussion, and swept in the Council just as the Columbus Assembly had swept it out. The Assembly at Louisville made a new departure from the old path of Presbyterian following. Since the action of the Church on the union question there has been no such issue. The one related to outside organization, but the other to the very bottom principles of Presbyterianism. The Synod of South Carolina affirms that no court of the Presbyterian Church has the right to make laws except in the dialectic sphere. Jesus Christ is the only origin and fountain of church law. The General Assembly has no right either to originate or declare law. The Church has the power to make ecclesiastical constitutions and canons; they do not bind the consciences of Christians, but the practice of the Church.

Dr. Girardeau, after discussing the construction of the last Assembly's deliverance, reduced it into the following syllogystic form:

All deliverances in thesi are destitute of legal authority; these deliverances are in thesi, therefore they are destitute of legal authority. The conclusion depends on the major premise which is not sustained by law or evidence. He maintained that some in thesi deliverances are legally authoritative—when they are identical with the utterances of God's Word they are of legal authority—by express words, by necessary inferences. They are also of legal authority when they are identical with the Constitution of the Church which is based upon the Word of God by express words or by necessary inferences. It has been the old uniform doctrine of the Presbyterian Church to regard such deliverances as of binding legal force. The objection that the Word and Constitution have legal authority but the deliverence of church courts none, cannot be sustained. The two things cannot be disjoined or the consequence will be a denial of God's authority. church courts are made infallible when they correspond in word and practice with the authority of the Scriptures.

The speaker then drew an analogy between civil and ecclesiastical courts. The Constitution of the Church is a digest of in thesi decisions. The whole authority of the church courts is declarative. The tendency of the deliverance by last year's Assembly is to drive the Church into Congregationalism. The in thesi deliverances of the church courts are an authoritative exposition. The tendency of the deliverance in dispute will be to multiply judicial cases. It is inconsistent with the express words of the standards of the Church.

A recess of twenty minutes was taken at this point, after which Dr. Girardeau resumed his argument.

He laid down as his second general proposition that whenever, and only when, in thesi deliverances of a church court exactly coincide with the law of God as embodied in our standards, touching offences, they impose an obligation upon the court of first resort to institute judicial process, in cases which may come under such law. The preceding argument necessitates this conclusion. If that argument be valid, the in thesi deliverances of church courts are an authoritative declaration of law. Law has an imperative function, categorical and penal, and church courts have the power to discharge this function. The occasions for its discharge are:

1. Ignorance of sessions and members.
2. Negligence in applying known law.
3. Request from lower courts to higher to interpret the law.
4. Superior wisdom and knowledge of higher courts, especially of the Supreme Court.
5. Division of opinion in lower courts, especially sessions.

Misconstruction of this position should be guarded. The explicative power of church courts is admitted by all in deciding judicial cases. There is no difference in principle. The deliverances in question are authoritative, deliberative and judicial, because they are of the authority of Christ's law.

Sessions are entitled to the authoritative supports of the higher courts, especially of the Supreme Court, in their attempts to apply constitutional law to offences.

Uniformity of opinion and action can only be effectually secured by authoritative in thesi deliverances of higher courts, especially of the General Assembly, as sustaining a broad and catholic relation to the interests of the whole Church. The deliverance of the last Assembly is out of harmony with the current of precedents in the Old School Presbyterian Church of this land.

Dr. Girardeau consumed nearly two hours in the delivery of his speech, which was one of the most powerful efforts of his life. Dr. Woodrow will follow in reply this morning, and Dr. Wilson on the same side.

On motion of the Rev. A. W. Clisby the General Assembly will hereafter devote fifteen minutes to devotional exercises before the hour of adjournment every day.

The Rev. Mr. Penick offered the report of the Committee on the Narrative, which was adopted.

Dr. Leyburn submitted the report of the Committee on Publication, which was made the special order of the day, for half-past 10 o'clock this morning. Under the management of the present secretary and treasurer, Dr. Hazen, the debt of the Publishing House has been reduced to less than $10,000. Three years ago the debt amounted to about $59,000, and it is hoped in a short time and with the increasing prosperity of the country the debt will soon be altogether wiped out.

Rev. G. H. Rout, of Kentucky, was elected to represent the Assembly in the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America, with the Rev. Dr. Theodorick Pryor, of Virginia, as alternate.

At 8 o'clock the Assembly held a meeting in behalf of Home Missions. After which the Assembly adjourned to meet at half-past 9 o'clock Thursday morning.

SEVENTH DAY.

THURSDAY, May 27.

The Assembly met at the usual hour and after prayer proceeded to business.

The following changes were made in the delegation to the Presbyterian Alliance: The Rev. Allen Wright, of the Choctaw Nation instead of Dr. Peck, declined; the Rev. W. K. Marshall, D. D., of Texas, instead of the Rev. R. T. Farris, D. D., alternate, declined; the Rev. W. J McCormick, of Florida, in place of alternate W. E. Boggs, D. D., who takes the place of the Rev. H. C. Alexander, D. D., as principal.

The Committee on Correspondence reported the following answers to the questions propounded in the letter of the Rev. W. C. Dana, D. D., of the Central Presbyterian Church of this city:

1. "Is it unlawful for a minister in your connection to be pastor of an Independent Presbyterian Church?"

There is nothing in our Book of Church Order to prevent a minister in our connection from preaching the Gospel at any church where he has the consent of his own Presbytery.

2. "Can a Presbytery, by simple vote of the majority, displace a pastor against the will of both pastor and congregation?"

The Presbytery has power to establish the pastoral relation and to dissolve it at the request of one or both of the parties, or where the interests of religion imperatively demand it. (Form of Government, Chapter 5, Section 4, paragraph 6.)

While the Presbytery clearly has such power, this Assembly decides that a Presbytery taking such action should be thoroughly convinced that the interests of religion imperatively demand it.

The Committee on Overtures recommended that the overture of Orange Presbytery relative to a burial service be referred to the committee of revision of the Directory of Worship. The report of the committee was adopted.

On the overtures from the Rev. Mr. Woodworth asking for full lists of all reports from stated clerks of Presbyteries, and that church sessions be required to send up separate reports on Systematic Benevolence—the Committee on Overtures recommended that the first petition be granted, and the second petition refused. The report was adopted.

On the overture from the Synod of South Carolina regarding the Columbia Theological Seminary, the committee recommended that, as the exercises of the Seminary have been suspended since the adoption of the overture of the Synod, it is unnecessary for the Assembly to take any action in the matter.

On the overture from the Presbytery of Dallas asking the General Assembly to adopt some plan to equalize the expense of commissioners to the General Assembly meetings, the committee on overtures reported with reasons for report, that it is inexpedient, in the judgment of this Assembly, that any changes be made in the present plan.

After some discussion the report was docketed.

The Committee on Sabbath Schools to whom was referred the overture from Enoree Presbytery asking the insertion of the word "scholars" instead of "children" in the Sabbath School statistics, recommended that as the General Assembly of 1878 had already made a ruling upon this subject, no further legislation is necessary. The report of the committee on this overture was docketed for further action.

The Committee on Sabbath Schools gave the number of Presbyteries reporting in 1880, 59; number of schools reporting 909; number of teachers, 8,699; number of scholars, 69,890; number of teachers added to the Church in 1880, 271; number of scholars added, 1,707; total contributions of schools, $25,-643; number of colored schools, 12. ——the schools are under the control of the session, and are using the Church publications more than ever before. In view of the fact that fewer Presbyteries have reported than last year and in order to more thoroughly and systematically organizing of Sabbath school works the committee recommend that the Presbyteries appoint a superintendent of Sabbath schools, or a permanent committee with the special duty of promoting Sabbath school work; that all Presbyterian Sabbath schools be conducted under control of the session, and thus cultivate the idea that the Sabbath school is not something apart from the Church; that the sessions institute teachers' meetings and normal classes for the more thorough training of teachers; that the schools use the Church's own publications as the text books of the schools, so that so-called helps, whose doctrines are often false, and for which no one is responsible, may be shut out; that measures be taken to increase the attendance in the schools and encourage systematic giving to all the objects of benevolence in the Church; that stated clerks be more careful in sending up full and accurate Sunday school statistics, with concise answers to the questions propounded in the sessional reports.

In reply to four overtures praying for the removal of educational headquarters from Memphis to Nashville, the Committee on Overtures state their conclusion that "the best interests of the cause of education will be subserved by a transfer of the committee of education from the city of Memphis to the city of Nashville."

A minority report will be presented.

On an overture from the Synod of North Carolina, touching the union of the Education and Publication Committees under one secretary, the Committee on Bills and Overtures recommend that the Assembly do not grant the petition. The report was docketed.

On the overtures from the Presbyteries of Missouri, St. Louis, and Dallas, asking the removal of the office of the committee on Domestic Missions to St. Louis, Mo., the Committee on Bills and Overtures recommend that the request be granted, and that the Executive Committee of Home Missions, with the Rev. Richard McIlwaine, D. D., as Secretary, be transferred from Baltimore to St. Louis, the tranfer to take place not later than the first of next October. These overtures and the report of the committee were made the second special order for to-day.

The Auditing Committee reported that they had made a careful examination of the books and report of the General Assembly and found them well kept and correct, with a balance in the treasury of $23.17. The committee recommend the election of Dr. E. H. Harding, of Charlotte, to fill the vacancy on the board caused by the death of the Rev. John Douglas, and the election of Gen. R. D. Johnson, of Charlotte, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Hon. J. J. Gresham. The re-election of John L. Brown and John E. Brown is also recommended. The committee recommended that the securities belonging to the Relief Fund be placed in the custody of the Executive Committee of Home Missions. The report was docketed.

By the report of the Treasurer of the Board of Trustees of the General Assembly the amount of funds belonging to the Relief Fund in his hands May, 1879, was $30,000. During the past year the total fund increased to $34,125.

The report of the Committee on Publication which was offered on Monday, was taken up and adopted by a vote of 65 to 46.

The unfinished business of Wednesday, the consideration of the debate on the authority of church courts, then came up. It may be well just here for the information of the public to say that a deliverance in thesi is a declaration of an ecclesiastical court concerning a matter of doctrine or discipline upon which its judgment has been asked, which is only didactic (teaching) or declarative in its nature, and has no reference to a particular case. The discussion was opened by the Rev. James Woodrow, D. D., in reply to Dr. Girardeau. Dr. Woodrow agreed with much that had been so eloquently said by Dr. Girardeau—the importance of the question, the interpretation of the meaning of the last deliverance, the supremacy of God over the conscience, the power of the Church to give to utterances of truth the force of law, the dogmatic power of the Church, not of the General Assembly, and the administrative power of the Church and the church courts. Dr. Girardeau explained the meaning of the deliverance of 1879 just as he understood it. It is of the last degree of importance, not as to the question of the Church to bind the conscience, but as to the power of the General Assembly to give to in thesi deliverances the authority of law that may be enforced by judicial process. There is no direct reference to the conscience, but the whole matter has to do with discipline, which is not to effect the conscience, but the relation of the subject to the visible Church. It does not matter whether the law is right or wrong, it is the duty of the Presbytery to enforce the law whether it rests upon the conscience as a truth or not. The decision of the Church court when confirmed by the highest authority (the Word of God) is final.

In thesi deliverances of the General Assembly form a class to which, it is asserted, specified deliverances belong; they partake of properties of class. No in thesi deliverance of the General Assembly or other court under the constitution can be accepted and enforced. It is not asked whether an in thesi deliverance could even be framed that should by anybody be so accepted.

The power of the Church without the constitution was commented on, reference being made to the Confession of Faith, page 159. In civil government the people have sovereignty. They meet by their representatives, who adopt a constitution which, when it is adopted by the people, becomes a law of the land. It cannot be overturned by the Legislature, which is also composed of the representatives of the people, and yet it is true that the people are sovereign. The constitution cannot be altered except in the legal way. The question before the General Assembly was not a discussion of the general power of the Church. All insist upon the possession of the powers set forth in the Confession of Faith which are all ministerial and declarative. It is not a question as to the power to bind the conscience. No such thing exists as freedom of conscience towards God. On the other hand none but God can bind the conscience, because He is the Lord of the conscience and His word is binding upon it. It does this by whomsoever uttered, Church, minister, church court or child. This is seen by reference to Confession of Faith, page 159: "For the power by which they are made." But the agreement of utterance with the Word must be determined by the private judgment—otherwise conscience is not bound. This judgment, however, is exercised at one's peril, but the duty to exercise it connot be escaped or evaded. Discipline terminates upon relation to the visible Church, which is absolutely fixed thereby. So far as the disciplinary utterances coincide with the Word, expressed or implied, they bind the conscience, but of this conscienc each one must judge for himself. Judicial decisions bind absolutely as to relation to the visible Church, conditionally as to conscience. When applying truth as judge, it binds whether right or wrong; when setting forth truth as teacher, it binds only if recognized as God's. It is never enough to learn what the Church synods or ministers have said; altogether cannot bind the conscience. We all maintain the fallibility of synods and councils, and therefore maintain that there may be error in Church laws and in applying the same. If the law is not good and the application is erroneous, ought conscience to be bound, and who is the judge?

The discussion does not involve the contents of deliverances. The question is what authority belongs to the deliverance as delivered, not as containing truth or error. Deliverances in thesi, such as are contained in the catechisms and standards of the Church, are to be enforced by law by us whether right or wrong. It is not our business to consider anything but what is law. We are inquiring, can legal authority be given to any utterance by making it a deliverance in thesi? We say no. The question as to the power of judicial decisions does not come into this discussion.

Dr. Woodrow entered into a detailed review of the propositions laid down in the overture from the Synod of South Carolina, which he pronounced utterly illogical and unconstitutional. He did not hold that because John Calvin was right in some things he was right in all, for Calvin had not thought it sin to play nine-pins on Sunday afternoon, and Gillespie held to the doctrine that the decisions of ecclesiastical courts should be enforced by the civil authorities, and Martin Luther had declared that "Copernicus was a fool." He thought the "authority" of these grand men was not to be followed, but the teaching of God's Word as explained by the Constitution of the Church.

Dr. Woodrow stopped during the delivery of his argument for recess.

A motion was made to limit discussion of the subject on the part of any member to ten minutes, except in the case of Dr. Girardeau, the chairman of the Committee on Overtures, and the author of the minority report. After some discussion the motion prevailed.

Dr. H. M. Smith then proceeded to discuss the question.

On motion his time was extended indefinitely, or until, as Dr. White expressed it, the Assembly got tired of hearing him.

During the delivery of Dr. Smith's speech the hour for adjournment arrived, and on motion the Assembly took a recess until half-past 8 o'clock.

The Assembly met at half-past 8 o'clock. The special committee appointed to review the majority and minority reports of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform reported that they were unable to recommend unanimously the adoption of either of the reports as a whole, and recommend that the Executive Committee of Education be discontinued, and the matter of educating candidates for the ministry be referred to their respective Presbyteries: that the Presbyteries be requested to send any surplus of funds for the cause of education, if any, that may remain after providing for the support of their own candidates, to the secretary of the Executive Committee of Publication, who shall receive the same and disburse it to needy Presbyteries, upon their formal requisition, in proportion to the number of candidates under their charge respectively, which requisition shall certify that such Presbytery has come to the full measure of its ability in the support of its own candidates; that the presbyteries and sessions make a frequent, systematic and rigid inspection of the accounts of their respective diaconal officers, with a view to the economical and efficient administration of their affairs; that the Executive Committee of Home Missions correspond with parties holding vested interests in the Relief Fund, with the view of securing their consent to winding up this scheme on equitable principles, so that the Church will be relieved from all connection with the scheme. The committee finally recommend that, in view of the magnitude of the interests involved, the majority report of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform be referred to the chairman of that committee, and that the minority report be referred to the Rev. S. Taylor Martin, by whom the minority report was presented, so that abstracts of both papers may be published for circulation among the ministers of the Church, to the end that the commissioners to the next General Assembly may have ample means of information of the opposing views on this vital question of the economical administration of the benevolent schemes of the Church.

The report of the committee was docketed.

The Assembly took up the unfinished business, and Dr. Smith proceeded to the discussion of the overture on church deliverances. He objected that if in thesi deliverances are to be regarded as of equal authority with constitutional law and to be enforced by judicial process, we now witness a body of law growing up outside the constitution and independent of it. He objected also that the power which makes the law being manifestly above the law, the Assembly becomes in all such cases above the constitution which created it. It is unrestricted in these points and defines the limits of its own jurisdiction, which is a feature of the Papacy. He objected that if in thesi deliverances are law it is not possible to secure a coherent system of law. The speaker thought the deliverance of the Assembly under discussion would be less objectionable if the word "didactic" had been left out. Dr. Smith closed with an impassioned peroration.

The Rev. Henry Quigg, of the Presbytery of Atlanta, then spoke. He thought the Church was in peril. He came from the Presbytery in which the question under discussion first arose. In Atlanta, since the deliverance of the Louisville Assembly, the world says that the Presbyterians have no law, and for fifty miles around church members are dancing and horse-racing at will, whether they make any money at it or not. The greater part of the present discussion was like Paddy's coat, mostly made up of fresh air. Seriously, he trembled for the safety of the Church in her present peril.

The Rev. Mr. Milner, of Georgia then made a speech in which he expressed his views with much emphasis. Rev. Mr. Raymond moved that the Assembly should not adjourn until the subject under discussion was finished. This motion was very promptly voted down.

Mr. Estes and the Rev. J. M. Chaney made very forcible speeches.

The Assembly adjourned, after the usual devotional exercises, to meet at half-past 9 o'clock Friday morning.

EIGHTH DAY.

FRIDAY, May 28.

The General Assembly met this morning, and was opened with prayer.

Dr. Smith made the report of the Standing Committee on Foreign Missions, approving the diligence, wisdom and fidelity with which the necessary labors in the foreign field have been prosecuted during the past year. There has been a reduction of the indebtedness of $6,832 which was incurred in pushing forward the work. The contributions of the churches have amounted to an increase of nearly five per cent. over those of the previous year, and the general condition of the work was never so encouraging. In Europe, Asia and America the missions have been prosperous. Many young men have applied for employment in the mission field; which on account of the limited resources of the executive committee have either been postponed or declined. It is recommended that the whole matter of the Campinas Institute and the settlement of all its financial difficulties be referred to the Executive Committee on Missions for equitable and final settlement. The committee also recommend that the Executive Committee on Foreign Missions for the ensuing year shall consist of J. Leighton Wilson, D. D., secretary; Richard McIlwaine, D. D., co-ordinate secretary and treasurer; J. A. Lefevre, D. D., John Leyburn, D. D., J. J. Bullock, D. D., W. M. Murkland, D. D., Hon. Isaac D. Jones, J. L. Weeks, J. T. Anderson, G. Ober, C. T. McCoy, LL.D.

Adopted, with exception of appointments on new executive committee, which was docketed.

Dr. Adger, of the special Committee on the Office of the Evangelist, made a report asking for further time and the continuance of the same committee, with the addition of Drs. Palmer, Woodrow and Stuart Robinson, and the appointment of Dr. Palmer as chairman, instead of Dr. Lefevre, whose feeble health is not sufficient for the hard duties of this position.

The Committee on Theological Seminaries made their report on the annual report of the board of directors of the Columbia Theological Seminary.

They recommend that the directors be instructed with as little delay as possible, to proceed to the election of professors to the vacant chairs, or to such as are indispensably necessary; that with all prudent expedition, they set in operation the most efficient means they can employ for raising funds for the current expenses of the seminary and for its permanent endowment.

They also recommend that the Assembly express an earnest desire for the resumption by Dr. Girardeau of the Chair of Didactic and Polemic Theology.

Believing that it is the wish of the Synod of South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama that Columbia Seminary should be restored to its former relations to these Synods, and a meeting of the Alumni, held in Charleston on Friday, (20th May), advising this restoration, the committee recommend that the General Assembly inform those Synods of its readiness to restore the seminary to their ownership and control whenever they, the Synods above named, shall indicate their desire to receive.

The Rev. J. B. Mack, D. D., the Rev. W. E. Boggs, D. D., Col. J. J. Gresham, L. H. Muller, Esq., are nominated to the General Assembly as directors for the three years from this time.

A letter from Rev. Dr. W. S. Plumer, was read asking that in connection with affairs of Columbia Seminary he might be heard in relation to matters personal to himself in connection with the Seminary.

Rev. L. B. Johnston presented a minority report, in which he denied the constitutional right of the Board to translate Dr. Plumer, without his consent, from an active to an honorary connection with the seminary.

The reports of the committee and the letter of Dr. Plumer were docketed.

The debate on the question of Church deliverances was then resumed, Dr. Girardeau having the floor in reply to the argument of Dr. Woodrow. He maintained the positions advanced in his first argument, which has already been reported.

After a recess of twenty minutes, Dr. Woodrow was heard in reply to Dr. Girardeau. He did not make a speech, but said that the points of difference, after all, were so unimportant that after the long and profitable discussion of the subject, if the minority report was withdrawn he would offer a substitute reconciling all the differences of opinion that would be satisfactory to the Assembly and the Church.

The Rev. Mr. Blanton withdrew the minority report and Dr. Woodrow offered the following substitute, which was promptly seconded by Dr. Girardeau:

The Assembly met in Charleston, in virtue of its power to give authoritative interpretations of the Word, declares—

1. That nothing is law to be enforced by judicial prosecution, but that which is contained in the Word as interpreted in our standards.

2. The judicial decisions of our courts differ from their in thesi deliverances in that the former determine, and when proceeding from our highest court conclude a particular case; but both these kinds of decisions are alike interpretations of the Word by a church constitution, and both not only deserve high considerations but must be submitted to, unless contrary to the constitution and the Word of which there is a right of private judgment belonging to every church court and also every individual church member.

Dr. Joseph R. Wilson, chairman of the Committee on Bills and Overtures which brought in the majority report discussed, objected to the substitute, on the ground that it does not answer the overture from the Synod of South Carolina; that the only direct answer to the specific question proposed by the Synod is that contained in the majority report of the Committee on Bills and Overtures; that this answer replies to the overture by recognizing and signalizing the fact that there are deliverances in thesi that are more than "didactic and advisory." He said that the substitute was a good enough paper, but it does not answer the Synod nor say anything every one does not already know.

The Rev. Mr. Reed did not believe in making any compromise upon the subject in dispute, and wanted a clear and emphatic answer to the overture from the Synod.

Dr. Kirkpatrick moved the question, and the vote was taken on the substitute, which was adopted.

Dr. Leyburn moved to take up the immediate consideration of all that part of the report of the Committee on Domestic Missions relating to the removal of the office of home missions from Baltimore to St. Louis. This motion passed, and the subject was taken up.

Dr. Leyburn moved that the recommendation of the removal be refused. In support of his motion, he said that the operations of the committee were never more prosperous, and that the labors of the past year were rewarded with a greater degree of success than ever before in the life of the Church. It has been the habit for many years for the General Assembly to interfere with the work of its executive committees. The proposed removal will do much to cripple the energies of the Church and paralize missionary work in the home field. It cannot be advocated on the ground of economy or policy. It will not bring the operations of the Church nearer together in these days of fast mail facilities and telegraphic communication; it will cost a great deal of money to make the transfer, it will take away the committee from a money centre instead of to that part of the Church from which she gets her largest moneyed support. The transfer will require the separation of the two committees in missions now so satisfactorily operated together, and the rent of two offices, besides the services of extra help.

The Rev. Mr. Martin made a very earnest appeal for the removal of the office, because the request comes from those Presbyteries acting without concert but for the good of the Church. The expense of the transfer will be not much more than the simple cost of transportation. Office rent will be as cheap in St. Louis as in Baltimore; living will be lower; St. Louis is more convenient to the field of missionary labor which it commands in every way. The tide of emigration to the West makes it the best field for work. The transfer will strengthen the Church and save it from the proselyting efforts of the Northern Presbyterian Church, which is doing everything in its power to break up or bury over the Churches connected with the Southern Assembly. In Missouri a standing offer of $500 a year has been made to every Southern Church that will go over to the Northern Assembly and a bargain had been proposed to at least one pastor of a salary of $1,500, if he would go into the Northern Church, and take his congregation with him. By some such hocuspocus the church at Hot Springs, Arkansas, was won over to the Northern Church, and if the Southern Church intends to hold on to this field it is time for her to master events while they are within her control. The proposed transfer would add to the strength of the Southern Church and do nothing whatever to her detriment. Unless it is made the Church is bound to suffer in her most vital interests. In the matter of contributions the Synod of Missouri gave $7,500 last year to the cause of Home Missions, within $150 of the amount given by the great Synod of North Carolina.

Mr. Collins moved that Dr. Scott be officially informed that the General Assembly meant no discourtesy to him in moving to the Globe Street church Tuesday night, notwithstanding a preaching appointment before the Assembly had previously been made for him.

Dr. Scott said he was satisfied with the action of the body.

In order to prevent any further misunderstanding Dr. Woodrow moved that the majority report of the Committee on Bills and Overtures relative to the in thesi deliverances of church courts, as amended by the Woodrow substitute, be adopted by the General Assembly. Adopted.

The report on systematic benevolence was adopted.

On motion of the Rev. L. H. Blanton, and for the best interests of the Church, the selection of Covington, Ky., for the next meeting of the Assembly was reconsidered, and Staunton, Va., was chosen by acclamation for the next place of meeting.

Dr. Woodrow, from the Judicial Committee, reported on the case of the Rev. J. E. White, of Chester, recommending that he be reinstated in the rights which he had at the beginning of the last Assembly, and that he be heard.

The discussion on the removal of the Home Mission headquarters to St. Louis then came up, and was opened by Mr. Morris, who objected to the transfer on account of the increased expense it would involve. The argument that St. Louis is a central point should have no weight in settling the matter.

Dr Leyburn opposed the transfer as inexpedient, unwise and unwarranted by any of the necessities of the Church. The committee has done splendid work at Baltimore. Its operations are conducted upon the most economical policy, and the present location of the board should not be changed.

Dr. Woodrow did not think the matter should be regarded as a prize to be let to the highest bidder; but that the good of the Church seemed to justify the proposed transfer. He thought it would remove friction in the work of the Church. He was afraid of centralizing the power of the Church; and for this reason the change ought to be made. The expense would not be increased one cent; as good a committee can be gathered in St. Louis as anywhere else; there should be no office rent, for in these days of retrenchment and reform the secretary should do his work without an office but in his study. There is no necessity for ground floors and fine parlors. A back room on the fourth floor would furnish ample accommodations and sufficiently pretentious quarters for the committee. There was no necessity for a clerk to help the officers do their work—they should do it themselves. There is a dangerous accumulation of power in the Northeastern part of the Church. The speaker concluded from the forcible reasons given by him that it would be best to make the transfer.

The Rev. Messrs. Gauss, Penick, Clisby, Woodbridge, Briggs, Dr. Moore and others engaged in the discussion and made some very excellent points.

The vote was then taken and the proposed transfer refused by a large majority.

The report on Retrenchment and Reform then came up for discussion.

Dr. Woodrow moved to indefinitely postpone the consideration of the matter.

The Rev. J. D. West said that the report was a most important matter and should be thoroughly discussed. An eminent banker had recently told him that no worldly system could stand the percentage it costs to run the different enterprises of the Church. Some say that the Church is not to be compared with the world, but the same principle, in a business point of view, should apply to both. Either one of two things will shortly happen—the enterprises of the Church will decline and continue to decline, or the Church will seriously have to turn her attention to retrenchment.

Dr. Girardeau moved as a substitute the recommendation contained in the last article of the report, (providing for the publication of abstracts from the two papers for circulation among the ministers of the Church and that the consideration of the whole matter be referred to the next Assembly.

The report of the Committee on Publication was then read and adopted.

After prayer the Assembly adjourned until half-past 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

NINTH DAY.

SATURDAY, May 29, 1880.

The General Assembly met at the usual hour.

Dr. Smith moved the adoption of the report of the Committee on Home and Foreign Missions as a whole. Carried.

The report of the committee on the Tuscaloosa Institute, for the education of colored ministers, was adopted by the substitution of J. N. Lapsley, of Selma, Ala., as trustee, instead of Joseph Hardie.

The report of the Committee on Education was taken up and read.

Mr. J. M. Kirkpatrick submitted a minority report dissenting from the recommendation of the majority report for the removal of the Board of Education from Memphis. He thought a change was unwise and dangerous to the best interests of the Church, and that the board should be kept at Memphis, where it has done such efficient work.

The Rev. Mr. McQuigg admitted that changes should not be entered into hastily or inadvisedly, but whenever the cause can be benefited by removal, it should be made without any question. For the past five years there has been a constant falling off in the contributions for education. In 1875 the collections amounted to $20,000; in 1876, $15,000; in 1877, $13,000; in 1878, $11,800; in 1879, $8,000; and in 1880, $11,000. Another danger of staying at Memphis is the almost absolute certainty of that city being visited by yellow fever. It has been declared that the city is doomed for fifty years to come. The past long warm winter will no doubt bring back the plague again the opening summer, and cripple anything like efficient effort. Nashville is a railroad and educational centre. He, therefore, thought the removal should be made.

A motion of limiting the speeches upon this subject to five minutes was made by Dr. Wilson and adopted by the Assembly.

The Rev. Messrs. Milner, Neel, West, Clisby, Frierson, Allen Wright, of the Choctaw Nation, and others made speeches, giving their views with much force.

The vote of the Assembly was taken and resulted in the defeat of the proposed transfer.

The majority report of the Committee on Education was then taken up and the different propositions contained in it voted upon seriatim.

The report of the committee was then adopted, and after a great many motions, alterations and amendments, recommends the approval of the committee for its past fidelity and dilligence: that no change for the present be made in the location of the Executive Committee of Education, and that the existing board be re-appointed; that there be no change in the plan of aiding students during the ensuing year; that the Church is expected to pray the Lord of the harvest to raise up and qualify men for the Gospel ministry, and that it is recommended to the Presbyteries to require that all candidates coming before Presbyteries shall have the certificates of their sessions, testifying to their physical, mental and spiritual qualifications; that the usual concert of prayer for young men be held on the last Thursday in February, and that the Executive Committee consist of the following members: Rev. E. M. Richardson, Secretary; G. W. McRae, Treasurer; Rev. A. H. Kerr, D. D., Rev. W. W. Houston, Rev. N. M. Long, Rev. R. R. Evans, Rev. Eugene Daniel, B. M. Estes, M. P. Jarnigan, James Elder and C. C. Graham.

Dr. Kirkpatrick introduced the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That a committee, consisting of the Moderator of the present Assembly, the Rev. J. L. Girardeau, D. D., and the Rev. William Brown, D. D., be appointed to prepare, in the name of, and on behalf of the General Assembly, an address to all our Churches setting forth and urging the claims of the cause of education for the ministry in their prayers and their pecuniary benefactions, and that the said address when prepared be published and put into circulation by the Executive Committee of Publication.

Resolved, That ministers having charge of churches be requested to read the said address from their pulpits.

The Rev. J. A. Scott, Jr., of Virginia, rose to a question of privilege and said that a pamphlet entitled "Discussions on Assembly Deliverances," had been laid on the table of the Secretary and distributed among the members of the Assembly during the preceeding day's debate, on the matter of Church deliverances, and he thought such conduct should be denounced by the Assembly. He offered a resolution, setting forth the grievance and condemning the action of the person tryingin this way to color the judgment of the Assembly. The Rev. Messrs. W. A. Scott, Milner and Neel pressed the passage of the resolution. Dr. Girardeau thought it should be general and not specific in its character. He moved the reference of the whole matter to a special committee. The Moderator accordingly appointed the following: The Rev. J. A. Scott, Dr. H. M. Smith, Dr. J. L. Kirkpatrick, and the Rev. W. G. White.

The report of the Committee on Home Missions was taken up and adopted.

At this point a recess of twenty minutes was taken, after which, on motion of the Rev. R. C. Reed, the report on the Columbia Theological Seminary was taken up.

Rev. L. B. Johnston moved that the minority report be adopted as a substitute for the majority. Mr. Johnston said that the Board of Trustees, in dismissing Dr. Plumer from an active to an emeritus professorship had acted without the slightest constitutional authority, and Dr. Plumer should have the right to answer to the Assembly the charges against him. He had been retired without a trial to a kind of ornamental position. He had not known that he had been dismissed by the Board of Trustees until the resolution was adopted. He had not been accorded a hearing, and the Church should not consent to such injustice towards one of her oldest, ablest and most efficient servants. The speaker hoped that no attempt would be made to smother the discussion, but that the aggrieved would be accorded a full and faithful hearing. The Assembly should not desire to do anything inconsistent with the highest right and justice.

The Rev. A. W. Clisby moved that Dr. Boggs be heard for the Trustees. This motion was accepted as an amendment by Mr. Johnston, whose motion then passed.

Dr. J. R. Wilson moved that the speakers be limited to a half hour each.

Mr. D. C. Collins moved to amend by giving them an hour. Passed.

Dr. Plumer said that he would rather not speak at all than be bound to stop in sixty minutes. His answer was compact and complete, but with all due respect to the Assembly, he would have to decline to speak at all if he was to be limited by the hour.

The Rev. J. H. Bryson thought Dr. Plumer should have a full hearing, and that he should be given enough time to make his statements complete.

The Rev. Mr Macgregor said Dr. Boggs could finish his remarks in thirty minutes, and Dr. Plumer should be allowed to go on.

Dr. Girardeau thought he ought to be entitled to as much time as necessary to make his answer.

Mr. Collins moved that Dr. Plumer be granted all the time required to state his case. Adopted.

Dr. Plumer then took the platform and seating himself began his defence. He said that he knew he came into the Assembly under some disadvantages and that much had been done to prejudice his case. It had been said that many years ago that he came to South Carolina to combat the doctrines of Dr. Thornwell. He had never done so. Dr. Thornwell and he lived in the most sacred confidence in matters of experimental religion, and he had no better friends in the world than the family of his 'dear friend.' It had been said that he promised to resign in one year. He had a letter from Dr. Lindsay, who was said to have made this remark, denying that he had ever said any such thing. He asked the clerk to read letters from Dr. Lefevre, Dr. J. Leighton Wilson and Dr. W. S. Boggs, explaining that his professorship had not been changed at the St. Louis Assembly in 1875 on account of his "infirmities," but because he had requested it. It was said at that time that the change then effected would settle the matter finally. He thought it was expedient for Christ's cause that there should be some end to strife. The seminary has two constitutions, under neither of which the board of trustees had the slightest authority to change his relations. He was chosen by the General Assembly, inaugurated by the General Assembly, and the General Assembly, and it alone, was his master. He had been made emeritus professor, which meant that his work was "ended" and he was "discharged." He would soon be out of the world, and would bother no one much longer, but he wanted the Assembly to set a pattern. In the recommendation of the trustees not one kind word was said for him, for his past fidelity and the hard work of a lifetime. He was simply "retired" on account of his age and infirmities. It was no sin to be old. Old age is commended of God. Last year he had traveled 12,500 miles for the board, in the interest of the seminary, at his own expense. He preached ninety-seven times. Since he entered the seminary he had delivered lectures a week, besides preaching on Sunday. He had filled a pulpit all the past winter, and during the last year had met his classes 328 times. He had attended thirty-one religious conferences, thirty-two speaking exercises, read and corrected sixty large manuscripts, and written twenty-nine religious tracts. This did not look like infirmity, and he did not think it was the business of church courts to persecute or prosecute a man because of his infirmities, which he is bearing as well as he can.

A recess was taken at this point until half-past 5 o'clock.

The Rev. Mr. Scott submitted the following resolution, which was adopted:

WHEREAS, A pamphlet entitled "Discussion on Assembly Deliverances," has been addressed to the Moderator and members of this body, and circulated among them, which pamphlet, moreover, contains a grossly personal assault on a member of this General Assembly. And

WHEREAS, It appears that other pamphlets bearing upon questions still pending, have been put in circulation among the members, the General Assembly hereby expresses its disapproval of this method of attempting to influence its decisions as disrespectful to this body and an infringement upon its prerogatives.

The overture from Dallas Presbytery to unite the education and publication interests of the Church was laid on the table; also, the overture from the same Presbytery to take some action to equalize the expenses of commissioners to the Assembly.

The report of the trustees of the General Assembly was adopled.

The Rev. Jahleel Woodbridge moved that the reports of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform be entered upon the minutes of the Assembly. Passed.

The overture of the Synod of North Carolina asking for the union of the boards of Education and Publication was on motion of Dr. Girardeau, referred to the next General Assembly.

The Committee on Bills and Overtures on the overture from the Presbytery of East Hanover asking for a deliverance from the General Assembly on dancing and worldly amusements, recommended that it is inexpedient to do so. The report was adopted.

The unfinished business then came up and Dr. Plumer went on with his speech which was interrupted by the recess. He said that he was not a burden, not a disgrace to the seminary and did not care to be so regarded. He had raised more money for the institution and saved more than he had ever received from it. There was an attempt making to ostracize a man who has done the Church service. "Why shouldn't I just sneak out? Because I am a man; I am one of Christ's freemen. There is a principle here—it is not quarrelsomeness. It is said I was opposed to the new book of Church Order. That is so. I was opposed to it, but I made my opposition like a man, and now that it is adopted no man goes by it better. There is no need of closing the Seminary. The funds are $20,000 better than they were twelve months ago. The Seminary cannot be closed. The directors have no right under the law to close the institution. Its suspension will destroy the design of its founders and shingle it all over with suits. If the Seminary is closed it will be a fraud upon every one who has contributed anything to its endowment. When an old sailor on the Bellerophon was asked how Napoleon looked, he said: "He has twelve campaigns in him yet," and so with the speaker. I have already served through thirteen campaigns, and the board of directors now say through "age and infirmities" you may go adrift. Not one kind word, not one. As long as that hand can drive a dray or drive a quill I will not beg my bread. I do not ask you to give me money, but I do ask you to give me my honor. Give me what I brought you, my energies, my love, my life—say a few kind words."

Dr. Boggs, in behalf of the Board of Directors, replied to Dr. Plumer, in a very forcible speech, justifying the action of the board, and giving the reasons for suspending the exercises of the seminary, insufficient funds, scarcity of students, unfair indebtedness, &c. He claimed that the board acted under the constitution and in exact accordance with the law of the Assembly. The committee and the Board of Directors had made a complete investigation of the whole matter, and had only acted from what they conceived to be the highest good of the Church. They had "retired" Dr. Plumer because they did not think him capacitated for a longer discharge of the duties of his professorship, and had given him a pension for his past services.

Mr. Collins moved the adoption of the report on the Columbia Seminary, and of the report as a whole. Adopted.

Mr. W. S. Primrose offered the following resolution to be appended to the report on the Columbia Seminary:

Resolved, That in view of the action of the Board of Directors, reported to this General Assembly, in making the Rev. W. S. Plumer, D. D., a professor emeritus, the General Assembly takes this opportunity of expressing to their venerable and respected brother their cordial and hearty appreciation of his connection with the Columbia Theological Seminary, and hereby convey to him their respect, veneration and kind Christian sentiments of regard, with the prayer that God's richest blessings may abide with him now and always.

The resolution was adopted, and after prayer by the Rev. S. M. Neel, the Assembly adjourned until half-past 9 o'clock Monday morning.

Sale Immense.

The "Wisconsin," Milwaukee, Wis., adds its testimony and says: "The sale of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, for Bright's Disease and other afflictions of Kidneys and Liver, as well as Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, for diseases of same name, is simply immense."

SLEEPLESSNESS almost invariably arises from a disordered state of the Stomach. Stimulate the organs of digestion, regulate the bowels and thereby produce sound and refreshing sleep. Narcotics and sedatives murder sleep, and such forced and unnatural stupor is soon followed by ill effects But Simmons Liver Regulator will remove the cause of restlessness and sleeplessness by regulating the stomach; thus, by improved digestion—by a regular habit of body—free alike from laxity or constipation—good health will be established, with its attendant blessing, sound sleep.

"I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and loss of sleep. As soon as I feel the least nervous, I take a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator, and sleep night. MRS. RUTHED BRYANT, Griswoldville, Ga.

The WOMAN'S FRIEND

Is the labor-saving invention of the day. It is NECESSARY in every house in the land, and no lady having once used it would ever be without one.

The Woman's Friend is the CHEAPEST and BEST

Washing Machine

IN THE WORLD. It is so SIMPLE in its construction and principles of action that even a child can learn its use in a few minutes, and it can be worked with ease without risk of injury to the most delicate hands.

It is the best, as it requires less labor and wear of clothes, while it washes cleaner and quicker than any other known. No wringer needed with our machine, as its action is two-fold, both washing and wringing.

It is made from the hardest and best seasoned timber and the finest rubber; the iron parts are covered with zinc to prevent rusting, and it is so strongly made that it cannot possibly get out of order.

By its use thousands of women's hearts have been gladdened, and the miseries of the wash-day promise to be a thing of the past.

It washes equally well the heaviest and most delecate fabrics.

No more sore knuckles, aching backs, broken nails and blistered hands. No further use for the chemicals and washing powders that rot and destroy the clothes.

To introduce this useful household machine we will place the machine in the hands of any lady who will forward with her application 75 Cents, which we estimate will about prepay expenses of delivery, etc., with the understanding that she will show its operation to at least six of her lady friends, and thus assist us in its general introduction.

This offer is only open for 30 days from date of this publication.

WHAT THE

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Did For a Kansas Woman.

Its Great Controlling Power over the Nervous System, the Digestive Organs and Uterine Affections.

Case of Mrs. B——, stated by Dr. L. M. Wood, Wyandotte county, Kansas.

Extract from a letter dated White Church, Wyandotte county, Kansas, February 1st, 1880:

"I first saw Mrs. B—— laboring under Hysterical Coma, from which she had not been sufficiently aroused to take nourishment for four days. She was of large frame, but in a condition of extreme emaciation. From her husband I obtained the following statement: She was thirty-six years of age, and when in health unusually robust, her average weight being one hundred and fifty pounds. She was accustomed to do all of her house work and to perform other labor when necessary. Several years before she had undergone an operation for a Tumor formed in the region of the right Acetabulum. Her general health remained good for some time. Afterwards, however, she became a great sufferer from a distressing form of Dyspepsia, there being at times almost total Atony of the digestive organs. There was also serious derangement of the Monthly Functions, with general prostration of the Nervous System resulting in attacks similar to that described, and she had been under the care, at different times, of several distinguished medical men without benefit. Under appropriate treatment she was aroused to a state of consciousness, took nourishment such as her stomach would retain, and her general condition improved to some extent. There was, however, a frequent recurrence of these attacks, and I saw but little if any hope of permanent benefit. Recollecting that I had seen the Buffalo Lithia Waters endorsed by men eminent in the profession, as a "Powerful Nerve Tonic," I determined as a last resort to make a trial of it in her case, and ordering it directly from the Springs, put her upon it. In a few weeks the beneficial result was unmistakable, in the increase of appetite—the invigoration of the organs of digestion, and most especially in the gradual restoration to a healthy condition of the exhausted Nervous System and a diminution both of the frequency and severity of the attacks referred to. She used the water for several months with continued and decided benefit. The Monthly Functions have been restored to a normal condition, and there has been a total cessation of the attacks of Hysterical Coma, and she has gained rapidly in flesh and strength, until she is now in robust, vigorous health, eating as much "Hog and Hominy," and doing as much hard work as any woman in this Western country, the credit for all of which, I give where it is certainly due, to these remarkable waters"

These Springs are opened for Visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE. The Waters in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, Five Dollars per case, at the Springs.

They are prescribed by Dr. J. Marion Sims, Dr. William A. Hammond and Dr. John T. Metcalf, of New York, as well as by a large number of leading medical men in all sections of the country. Spring pamphlet sent to any address.

Cheap.

BY SOPHY WINTHROP.

"Do you know what Sophia Clarke has bought for her parlor carpet?" asked Miss Abby of a select circle of friends and relatives of the last sewing society.

We are above gossip at Learnedville, but we feel a friendly concern in the affairs of our neighbors, and as Sophia is the minister's daughter, about to be married herself to a minister, everybody is naturally interested in her movements.

As nobody did know what she had bought for her parlor carpet, Miss Abby went on:

"I saw it myself or I wouldn't believe it; a Turkish rug!"

"Oh, one of those Smyrna-ingrain, Oriental two-ply, Nabob cotton-wool affairs," said Cousin Grace. "Well, I wish her joy of it!"

"No—a genuine, large, square elegant Turkish rug. I hope I'm above gossip, but she told me the price herself—ninety-five dollars."

A few needles paused in mid air and several glances were exchanged, but the well-bred silence was broken only by a gentle murmur from Aunt Sue, "Poor as they are, too."

"Yes," pursued Miss Abby, "Sophia told me herself that she had just six hundred and fifty dollars for outfit—saved from teaching, I suppose. Her father gives her her clothes, but she always dresses plainly, you know, so that doesn't amount to much. Well!—I trust I'm not given to prying into my neighbors' affairs, but I did feel some curiosity as to how she had laid out the rest of her money—after that rug—and she told me a little about it. She's got a good, strong, brown Brussels carpet for her hall and stairs, and for the rest of the house she has mattings. Her furniture is all very simple, I must confess. Some of it she and John have knocked up themselves out of boxes and boards. And she hasn't gone into the china mania as I was afraid she would—she's so fond of pretty things—but she's had four of her great handsome engravings framed and says John has as many more. 'Now she says, 'with our piano and book-cases we have all the big holes filled up. The little ones will fill up of themselves.'

"I asked her if she wasn't going to have some lace curtains for her parlor—this Nottingham lace is so cheap now—but she said, no, she couldn't afford it.

"Well,' said I—I really couldn't help it—'if I had been in your place, Sophia, I should have had curtains in my parlor, and got a nice, pretty ingrain carpet; ingrains are so cheap now!'

"'I don't agree with you, Miss Abby,' said Sophia. 'Mother has always had ingrains, always been having ingrains ever since I can remember. You know the wear and tear we've had in our parlor, the wear and tear everybody has who has much of a family or much company. Why, the piecings, and the "fixings," and the new parlor carpets we've had in all these years, you never would believe them unless you'd experienced them as I have. And I am certain if all the money mother has spent on her parlor carpet were given her to-day, in a lump, she could buy five or six of the nicest Turkish rugs with it.

"'Now just think of it, Miss Abby,' says she, clapping her hands, 'just think of it! I shall never need to give another thought to my parlor carpet if I live to be eighty. Wherever we move it will fit, and will always look nice. I think I've made a great bargain.' That's just what she said."

"Well, I only know that I should think it extravagant for me to buy such a rug," said Cousin Grace. "Two or three little ones, of course—everybody has those, now-a-days—but one of these large square ones I couldn't afford."

And as we all know that Cousin Grace's husband is what is called "a liberal provider," and that their house is just full of all sorts of expensive trifles, of course we all felt that this settled the question.

But Aunt Prudence now spoke up. Aunt Prudence, in her heavy black silk and nice lace carefully done up; who is now rich but has been poor; who is the acknowledged model of all the domestic virtues and whose word is law.

"Now, I think," said Aunt Prudence, "Sophia Clarke is right. In my opinion she's done an economical thing. It's just my principle exactly. In heavy, necessary, much-used articles get the very best. In smaller, perishable things you can afford to save money, or do without altogether. When I buy a black silk I get the best I can find. But when I get a muslin—something for occasional use and something that will wear out soon anyway, no matter how much I pay for it—I buy as cheap a one as is respectable. A good, heavy, genuine Eastern rug is a bargain—that is, if it's for use; not if it's to be shut up in a dark room and worshipped three or four times a year. The best English Brussels, too, is none too good for the constant wear of hall and stairs. As for mattings, they are among the few things that are so very cheap that they are cheap, and using them is, in fact, the nearest practicable approach to doing without.

"Yes, Sophia is right. Her parlor carpet will last her lifetime. It will fit in any kind of a room; so there's no waste in cutting or expense in piecing or bordering if she moves. It can be removed and shaken so often that there's no danger from moths or carpet bugs. Besides that, it is a thing of beauty and a joy forever, and for young people who will probably need a good serviceable floor-covering for many years, and whose position requires them to have always a nice pleasant parlor open to their friends, I think a Turkish rug is a wise purchase."

"Oh, well, Aunt Prudence," objected Cousin Jane, whose husband had always been unfortunate. "it'll do for you to talk. but for us poor folks"—

"That's just it Jane," interrupted Aunt Prudence. "You 'poor folks' are just the ones who need to practice my kind of economy. You're the ones who think cheap things don't cost anything. It's you who are always filling your houses with tidies and mats, and worsted inconveniences of all descriptions, with pictures and mottoes that have to be framed, and jugs and teacups that must be sent to be baked. You have no end of crochet shawls and head gear—'they are so cheap. and the girls make them'—and ruffles, and ribbons bought at the cheap counters. I heard a young lady groaning for a nice shawl the other day How many neck-ties and 'clouds,' and wall-pockets, and lambrequins at one dollar and a half or two dollars apiece would it take to buy one?"

Aunt Prudence spoke with some asperity, and gazed through rather sharp spectacles at cousin Jane and her two deeply-banged daughters.

But at the heavy triple sigh her tone softened. "I've learned all this by hard experience, you know," she said. "Your uncle gives me the credit of being a pretty good economist. The secret of it all is that I've learned how to do without. Do without cheap and unnecessary things and you'll soon save enough to buy nice things."

Tea came around just then and put a stop to Aunt Prudence's remarks. And one of the listening sisters thought that if their only effect should be to diminish the store of Learnedville bric-a-brac they would not be without their reward.—Christian Union.

Rubbish.

On the banks of the Thames, near London, are two large "dust yards." Possibly we should not have known what a curiosity they are if a kind-hearted woman had not been touched by the dreariness of the place, and out of pity for the workers in their filthy drudgery begun a systematic effort in their behalf. For very small pay they work under contractors, and many, if not most of them, are women.

Besides the coin—mostly small bits, although sovereigns and large bank notes are sometimes found amongst the rubbish, and other things of great value which, through accident, have found their way into the dust heap—the workers in these yards have all the bits of wood and their daily portion of cinders for perquisites.

The fine dust or "soil" makes a valuable manure, the vegetable refuse or "soft core" is also sent to the farmers for that purpose, brick-bats, broken crockery and such go towards filling up low places in the city, and the fine cinders go to the brick-yard. Then there are linen and cotton rags for the paper mill, and bottles and corks that go to do their work again, scraps of iron for ballast first and re-puddling—do you know what that is?—afterwards, across the sea, old shoes to be cobbled or made over into parts of others, and bones to be made into elegant fans, handles for knives and forks and tooth brushes, combs, chessmen and paper knives.

But the strangest of all are the useful things the chemist finds in this disgusting heap. He burns the bits of bones and with the result he refines sugar, or he gets from them the gelatine which is the principal part of the jelly which so many people enjoy; phosphorus for matches, smelling salts, blacking, stiffening to make the dress silks appear heavier, and a host of other things the chemist will bring out of the bones. He will make ink and potash salts from some of the old iron; and from old tin-ware tin, iron, ammonia, Prussian blue, stannate of sodium, steel, chloride of zinc and chloride of iron. A big caldron filled with boiling woolen rags, pearlash, horns, hoofs, blood, old iron and scraps of leather, produce the beautiful crystals of Prussiate of potassa, so important in medicine and chemistry. Glue, also, is a product of the rubbish heap; cork cuttings are used in making floor-cloths, and such portions of leather as have escaped other hands are turned into cement for iron tools. You might think all the heap was now exhausted; but no, there are still left some things of value. Enough have been mentioned, however, to show that care and skill can convert the most unpromising materials into things of use and beauty.—Christian Union.

The Decorating Spider Crab.

A. W. ROBERTS.

Society and occupation in the world of the sea are represented by masons, builders, marauders, usurpers and plunderers and all, have their distinguishing peculiarities. A fancy of the quaint spider crab, or "dandy crab," as he is sometimes called, is to decorate himself with algæ and sponges, and none but the most brilliant in color seem to please him; this, however, not for vain display, but, primarily at least, for personal protection. He moves about "slowly and solemn," and is deliberate in decision and determined in purpose; his hard, spiney shell, of sombre color, adds to the dignity of his appearance, and the methodical way in which he uses his claws and carries himself about, really impresses one with the idea that he is quite an important personage in the aquarium.

When wishing to array himself he finds a brilliant algæ or sponge, and pinches off piece after piece with his long, slender claws; these, when broken, are dipped in a glutinous fluid contained in the mouth, and are carried to the back and fastened securely. Sometimes after he has attached a particular fragment he reaches back his claw to satisfy himself that it is secure.

This practice is only indulged in when the crabs are young, and in the fall, and its object is to obscure the crab from hungry sturgeons and skates. When placed in a tank with many animals the crabs take the same precaution against possible enemies, and often cover themselves.

Full grown crabs are too large and hard to be swallowed, and are seldom seen fastening seaweeds to their backs, as they no longer have need of such protective covering. There is on Long Island an old mill race where many of these crabs have been carried among sponge-covered rocks whence they cannot return. Dainty bits of red and yellow sponges have been attached to their backs, which have grown so as to nearly cover them. When in motion the crabs look like moving sponges. Although much preferring brilliant algæ and sponges, the spider crab will, for lack of them, make use of other material. Not long ago a tank was cleaned in the aquarium, and a spider was confined in one corner with a pane of glass. I threw in sprays of sertularia and bits of the bases of anemones. These were eagerly seized by the crab and attached to his back. In course of time the bits of anemone developed into perfect animals, and remained on the shell till the crab reached its period of casting.

The spiders cast their shells like the rest of crabdom, but unlike other varieties have no attendant to protect them when soft. Two that were nearly ready to shed in one of the tanks at the aquarium suddenly broke loose from their shells on the tank's receiving a sudden jar. The crabs are less pugnacious than the hermit and other crabs, appearing to quarrel only over their food. They have keen appetites and good noses for scenting food. I have often amused visitors at the aquarium by holding a dead minnow in my hand. The crabs would assemble from all parts of the tank, and climb up my arm and cluster about my hand in numbers in search of the minnow, after having fierce contests with one another.

More curious than this is the fact that they will deliberately seat themselves on the largest anemone when feeding, and with their claws will deliberately take the food out of the stomach of the anemone.

I have often seen the spider crab attack a scallop in open shell. The scallop would close suddenly and hold the crab captive for several hours.

There is a specimen of the long armed spider crab of Japan in the cabinet of Rutgers College, N. J., which measures when the limbs are extended, eleven feet and six inches. This variety is the largest known.—Scientific American.

Ants and their Milch Cattle.

The instincts of the ant are, indisputably, more extraordinary than those of any other in the whole range of animated nature. The ancients magnified them into fabulous miracles. Pliny talks of an Indian ant as big as an Egyptian wolf, of the color of a cat, which entered the bowels of the earth in search of gold, of which they are said to have been plundered during the winter by the human inhabitants of those regions. But exaggeration and credulity apart, the real habits and proceedings of these insects are so extraordinary that they would stagger our belief if not confirmed by the past observations of such naturalists as Huber and Latreille, and those of Sir John Lubbock and others of our own day. One of the most singular traits in their manners and customs is, that of keeping and feeding certain other insects, from which they extract a sweet and nutritious liquid, in the same way as we obtain milk from cows. There are two kinds of insects from which the ant tribe abstract this juice—the aphides, or plant lice, and the gall insects. Linnæus, and after him other naturalists, have called these insects the milch cattle of the ants; and the term is not inapplicable. In the proper season, any person who will take the trouble to watch their proceedings may see, as Linnæus says, the ants ascending trees that they may milk their cows, the aphides. The substance which is here called milk is a thin saccharine fluid, which these insects secrete, it is scarcely inferior to honey in sweetness, and issues in limpid drops from the body of the insect, by two little tubes placed one on each side just above the abdomen. The aphides insert their suckers into the tender bark of a plant, and employ themselves incessantly in absorbing its sap, which, having passed through the digestive system of the insect, is discharged by the organs just mentioned. When no ants happen to be at hand to receive this treasure, the insects eject it to a distance by a jerking motion which at regular intervals they give their bodies. When the ants, however, are in attendance, they carefully watch the emission of the precious liquid, and immediately suck it down. The ants not only consume this fluid when voluntarily ejected by the aphides, but what is still more surprising, they know how to make them yield it at pleasure, or in other words, to milk them. On this occasion the antennæ of the ants discharge the same functions as the fingers of a milk-maid; with these organs, moved very rapidly, they stroke the abdomen of an aphis first on one side and then on the other, and immediately a little drop of the much coveted juice issues forth, which the ant eagerly conveys to its mouth. A single aphis has been known to give it drop by drop successively to a number of ants that were waiting anxiously to receive it.

These milch kine they remove from their native plants and domesticate in their habitations, affording as Huber observes, an example of almost human industry and sagacity. On turning up the nest of the yellow ant this naturalist one day saw a variety of aphides either wandering about in the different chambers or attached to roots of plants which penetrated into the interior. The ants appeared to be extremely jealous of their stock of cattle; they followed them about and caressed them, whenever they wished for the honeyed juice, which the aphis never refused to yield. On the slightest appearance of danger they took them up in their mouths and gently removed them to a more sheltered and more secure spot. They dispute with other ants for them, and, in short watch them as keenly as any pastoral people would guard the herds which form their wealth. Other species, which do not gather the aphides together in their own nest, still seem to look on them as private property; and, what is yet more extraordinary, they inclose them, as a farmer does his sheep, to preserve them not only from rival ants, but also from the natural enemies of the aphis. If the branch on which the aphides feed be conveniently situated the ants have recourse to a very effectual expedient to keep off all trespassers: they construct around the branch containing the aphides a tube of earth, or some other material, and in this enclosure, formed near the nest, and generally communicating with it, they secure their cattle against all interlopers. The brown ant has been observed by Huber to build a chamber around the stem of a thistle in such a way that the stalk passed through the centre, so that from their ant-hill they had only to climb the thistle stalk in order to enter this cattle-fold, which was suspended in mid-air. The interior, smooth and compact, was entirely formed of earth; it contained an extensive family of insect cows, sheltered from the inclemencies of the weather, and protected from their enemies.—Scientific American.

Poisonous Cigarettes.

Cigarette smoking is now a fashionable habit, and one which is increasing at an alarming rate among half-grown boys, and it is the opinion of well-known physicians that if this habit is not checked additions to our asylums will be in order. A physician, to satisfy himself that there was death in that form of tobacco, had a cigarette analyzed. The result was a startling one. The tobacco was found to be strongly impregnated with opium, while the wrapper, which was warranted to be rice paper, was proven to be the most ordinary quality of paper, whitened with arsenic, the two poisons combined being present in sufficient quantities to create in the smoker a habit of using opium without his being aware of it, and which craving can only be satisfied by an incessant consumption of cigarettes.—Franklin Repository.

Humorous.

Every position in life has its cheerful side. No man can go so far down the hill that the sun won't shine on some part of the valley for at least an hour in the day. Think of the poor organ grinder and take heart. "Ah," he said to himself, as he turned the awful crank of that unmelodious instrument, and heard the pennies drop on the sidewalk, "if I hadn't studied music when I was young I might now be a common beggar."

The ludicrous is always more intensely ludicrous when it presents itself in a sacred place. Witness the following incident in the Christ church, New York, on Easter Sunday. The clergyman announced that the offertory would be applied to reducing the debt on the church. During the singing of the music, while the collection was being taken up, the tenor, who was a German, had a solo in which occurred the words, "And the dead shall all be raised." He succeeded in electrifying the congregation by giving out at the top of his voice, "Und der debt shall be raised mit der twingling of an eye."

A famous judge came late to court,
One day in busy season;
Whereat his clerk, in great surprise,
Inquired of him the reason.
"A child was born," his honor said,
"And I'm the happy sire."
"An infant judge?" "Oh, no!" said he
"As yet he's but a crier."

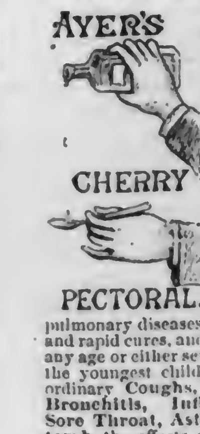
THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S



CHERRY

PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

Proceedings of the General Assembly.

[From the Charleston News & Courier.]

TENTH DAY.

MONDAY, May 31, 1880.

The Assembly met at half-past 9 o'clock a. m. Minutes were read and approved.

The Moderator read a telegram from the Rev. Stuart Robinson, D. D., of Louisville, Ky., offering his resignition as delegate to the Presbyterian Alliance. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Correspondence.

The Rev. J. H. Bryson rose to a question of privilege, and offered the following paper which, on motion of Dr. Wilson, was ordered to be spread upon the minutes of the Assembly:

The undersigned would respectfully ask to enter his dissent from so much of the action of the General Assembly touching the Theological Seminary at Columbia, South Carolina, as declares the Rev. W. S. Plumer, D. D., as incapacitated by age and infirmity to give adequate instruction in his Professorship, that of Pastoral and Historic Theology, and on this account removes him from his chair, when the same action of the General Assembly closes the Seminary for an indefinite period.

The Rev. Messrs. Briggs and Miller asked permission to sign their names to the paper, which was granted.

Dr. Kirkpatrick read a communication from Mr. L. B. Johnston, saying that he had been forced to go home on account of sickness in his family, and asking to have his minority report in the matter of the Columbia Theological Seminary and the "retirement" of Dr. Plumer entered as his protest upon the minutes against the action of the Assembly in adopting the report of the committee. Mr. Johnston's request was granted and his protest ordered to be entered.

The Rev. Jableel Woodbridge offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, 1. That the stated clerk cause to be published in the minutes the assessments on the respective Presbyteries for the expenses of the General Assembly, and which are found recorded in the minutes of 1872.

2. That the stated and permanent clerks, with the secretary of Home Missions, be a committee to revise said assessments, proposing such changes as may be found necessary or deemed expedient, and report to the next Assembly.

Dr. Woodrow introduced a resolution that the Rev. W. P. Jacobs, of Clinton, S. C., be appointed the official reporter of the General Assembly at a salary of $100 and his travelling expenses.

The resolution was adopted, and the Rev. Mr. Jacobs elected official reporte of the Assembly.

The Rev. J. M. Chaney offered the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Revision:

Resolved, That the Committe of Publication be directed to incorporate in our hymn book our Book of Church Order and Shorter Catechism.

The report of the Judical Committee on the case of the Rev. J. E. White, of Chester, was then taken up and the Assembly proceeded to the trial of the case in the manner and form prescribed by the constitution. The report of the committee was read and adopted, the recommendations of the committee being voted upon seriatim.

Dr. Smith, acting as Moderator, then proceeded to constitute the Assembly into a Court of Appeals, as provided by law, but was interrupted by the Rev. Jableel Woodbridge, who entered his protest against hasty and ill-considered action, and declared that the Assembly should know what it was expected to do before it went into the trial of a case, none of the merits of which were known. A motion to re-consider was made, and the case was more fully stated.

Mr. White then made a statement of his case, and said that the only question involved was a simple matter—has an appellant a right to be heard. He claimed a right of a hearing before the courts of the Church; only that and nothing more. He quoted the practice governing appeals in the civil courts, the doctrine of the Bible in this regard, the old Roman law and the usages of the church courts to sustain him in laying his grievances before the General Assembly, and in asking it to order the Synod of South Carolina to reverse its action and to hear his case upon its merits.

Mr. Collins thought it was wrong to give Mr. White a chance to argue the right of appeal as entirely irrelevant to the matter in hand.

The Moderator ruled that Mr. White had a right to state his case in his own way, and that interruptions were out of order.

The Rev. Mr. Woodbridge wanted to know exactly what was before the Assembly. A bag had been brought into the house with something tied up in it, and no one knew whether it was a cat or a pig. He wanted to know what kind of a case the court was trying.

A recess of twenty minutes was taken at this point, after which the Committee on Correspondence nominated Dr. J. B. Stratton, of Mississippi, as a delegate to the Presbyterian Alliance, instead of Dr. Robinson, resigned, with the Rev. Mr. Flynn, of Nashville, as alternate; Dr. Woodrow instead of Dr. Girardeau, resigned, with the Rev. H. H. Scudder, D. D., of Kentucky, as alternate. The nominations were confirmed and the report adopted.

Mr. White resumed his statement, saying that he had gone before the Presbytery of Bethel, which had refused to hear his case. He then appealed to the Synod, which dismissed the action on the ground that it was out of order. He asked the judgment of the General Assembly.

The Rev. J. B. Mack, D. D., appeared for the Synod of South Carolina. He said that the matter was not between the session of the Church and Mr. White. That had been decided. Not between Mr. White and Dr. Plumer, who had written a letter for him that was between them as private individuals. Nor was it with the Presbytery of Bethel, because the Presbytery had taken up the letter and given it a hearing, and from its decision in the case no appeal or complaint had been taken. He reviewed the action of the Presbytery from which there was no appeal, and could have been none. But the Presbytery voted to grant the appellant a hearing, although he had failed to conform to the law regulating such matters, and when the hearing was granted he dissented. The Synod of South Carolina refused to take up the matter. The appellant had not given the ten days' notice of appeal required by the laws of the Church. Even if there was ground of appeal, Mr. White had no right to appeal, having waived that right. Since his suspension by Presbytery he has been preaching, and has no right to continue his case or to be heard in the courts of the Church from the ministry of which he has been deposed. This matter has been going on for three years, and the Presbytery and the Church had been harrassed while the country had been flooded by documents from Mr. White bearing upon the case. The speaker thought it was time to put an end to the matter.

Dr. Adger also appeared for the Synod of South Carolina, and went over substantially the same ground as Dr. Mack. He said that the Presbyterian Church had always held to the strict construction of the law. The appellant in this case has forfeited all his rights under the law. At the meeting of the Presbytery, called to consider this matter, no motion had been made to take up the case, no action had been taken, nothing whatever had been done. He hoped the General Assembly would stop this matter. It has harrassed the Church for many years. Every attempt to restore Mr. White by extra constitutional means will retard the matter and prolong the disturbance. If the Assembly should send back the case it would keep up the fight for years. The proper way would be for Mr. White to go back to the Presbytery and profess penitence, and then if he should not be restored to his office he should bear his disappointment with resignation.

Mr. White, in reply, said he only asked for justice and a fair hearing, and that dishonor might not be placed upon a servant of the Lord. He then entered into a review of the case. He said he had not entered his appeal in writing before the Presbytery of Bethel, but he had made it orally in five minutes after the action of that body. He had not sent up his appeal to the Synod in the time prescribed by law, because he could not get an answer from the clerk as to the secret proceedings of the Presbytery, a part or which would constitute one ground of his appeal.

Dr. Mack said that Mr. White had not made his appeal for seventy-five days after the meeting of Presbytery. He did not do it then until after Judge Mackey had refused to issue a writ of prohibition against the Presbytery, the Judge declaring that he could do nothing but commit the Presbytery to jail.

The roll was then called and the vote was taken. The Assembly refused to sustain the appeal of Mr. White by a vote of 71 to 2 and so the motion for a new trial was refused.

The following resolutions were offered by Dr. Kirkpatrick and adopted:

Resolved, 1. That the Executive Committee of Home Missions be directed to report to the General Assembly, year by year, a compendious statement of the amounts of money contributed for the evangelization of the colored people, and of the amounts disbursed by the committee for the same.

Also, that the committee include in such reports the amounts contributed and expended on behalf of the same object by individuals and churches, other than the same passing through the hands of the committee, as far as those amounts can be ascertained; provided, however, that the committee shall not, by anything in this resolution, be restricted in their appropriations on behalf of the colored people to the funds received for their special and exclusive benefit.

2. That our Presbyteries be requested to furnish annually to the Executive Committee of Home Missions, in time for use in the preparation of the aforesaid reports and statements, as full and particular as may be, of the amounts expended for the spiritual welfare of the colored people within the bounds of the Presbyteries respectively.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. Collins, and unanimously adopted by the General Assembly:

Resolved, That the tender and hearty thanks of this General Assembly are hereby expressed and tendered to the people of "The City by the Sea," and all others who have contributed in any way to relieve the burdens of our Church and promote our individual comfort and enjoyment while thus collected together as a court of the Church of our blessed Master; we also hereby express the wish and the earnest desire, that our sojourn in the midst of this people, who have been so generous in their entertainment, may result in bringing us all to acknowledge our common humanity and deeply impress us with a sense of our glorious common brotherhood in Christ Jesus.

A motion was made that the General Assembly be dissolved, whereupon Dr. Brackett arose and made the following timely and eloquent address:

Mr. Moderator and Brethren: In behalf of the two churches who invited the General Assembly to Charleston, in behalf of the other Presbyterian bodies, and the various Christian denominations, who, with generous hospitality, and kind, Christian courtesy, have thrown open to us their homes and their pulpits, we desire to tell you, in this hour of parting, with what pleasure we have welcomed you to this ancient City by the Sea. It has been a question long debated, whether there be more pleasure in anticipation than in actual enjoyment. Were a deliverance in thesi to be made in answer to this question, doubtless the conclusion reached would not meet with universal acceptance. But in the concrete case now before us, I am sure there will not be a dissenting voice from the decision that the pleasing anticipations indulged during the past year have been more than realized during the past ten days.

It is due to you, Mr. Moderator, to say that no small part of this pleasure is owing to your patient, wise, and just rulings, which we have heard so often commended by those who have witnessed your deliberations. Exceedingly pleasant, also, has been the social intercourse between the brethren of this body and our families, who feel that in entertaining you they have themselves been most entertained.

We shall not soon forget, Mr. Moderator, your memorable sessions upon the "vasty deep," when you "went down to the sea in a ship to do business in the great waters;" nor your patient forbearance, waiving all parliamentary ceremony, amid the wild confusion of motions to "lay on the table." And we know not how to express the pleasure and profit we have derived from your pulpit ministrations. We can hardly hope ever again to enjoy so much good preaching in so short a space of time.

To pass to other matters. We have recently endeavored to instruct our people in regard to the organic life of the Church showing, that every Christian denomination has its own corporate life, history, character, influence and destiny. But during these favored days we have heard the actual throbbing of the great heart of our Church, and felt the warm currents of a common life coursing through our Presbyterian veins. We have reminded them, also, that while their highest veneration and their supreme regard is due to the old battle flag of the sacramental host—the banner of the cross—that they owed a deep reverence and a warm devotion to that Presbyterian banner you have raised in our midst, and I trust we shall hold with a firmer grasp, and regard with a more patriotic feeling, our regimental colors, and feel more profoundly than ever that a "banner has been given us to be displayed because of the truth." And we have sometimes warned our people against attaching undue importance to mere considerations of birth and blood. But as the brethren who are gathered here from all parts of our land return to this City of the Hugenots, we may safely "stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance" of their noble and exalted Presbyterian ancestry.

Not to detain you longer, allow me, in conclusion, as we stand holding your hand, with our bosom against yours heaving with sad and regretful emotion as we part, perhaps never to meet again on earth, to invoke upon you the richest of heaven's blessings, praying that you may have a "prosperous journey by the will of God," that you be returned to your homes in safety and peace, and to your respective fields of labor "in the fullness of the blesing of the Gospel of Christ," bearing away with you as fragrant memories as those you leave behind.

The Moderator made a touching response to this address; the minutes of the day were read and approved; the Moderator read the formal act of dissolution, a hymn was sung, a feeling prayer was offered by the Moderator, and the General Assembly of 1880 passed into history.

EDUCATION IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. Editor: You will not except to calling attention to the leading editorial in the PRESBYTERIAN of the 21st of April, on "Education in North Carolina," and to the communication of "Howe" in your number of May 12th. Absence from home caused me to read them both, at this late date, at the same time, and they should be thus read to be duly appreciated.

I wish to endorse and strengthen, if possible, what has been so well written by "Howe," of whom I have no knowledge, and yet would like so much to know, as well as to make a little more prominent the exceptional part of the editorial in question. I am sure you will soften or modify the hard words written, "of our dear old mother" and her honored sons. It is hard to say "the practice of our State in relation to Public Instruction has been little more than veriest trifling." And that the patriotism and heroism of her sons who have labored long, faithfully and successfully in the cause, "are only the more prominent because of the futility of their efforts." Hard words that represent a "deadly apathy" pervading our State on the subject of education. An apathy that can only be dispelled by some "champion calling the people together throughout the length and breadth of the State and haranguing them faithfully." Is it forgotten that North Carolina, anterior to the war, in educational progress, was styled "the Banner State of the South?" Her system of schools was honored and landed all over the South, commended at the North and copied by both. Her citizens were encouraged and strengthened in their efforts to maintain schools, in many parts of the State, through the entire year, by the annual distribution of more than $300,000 secured by special tax and the interest of the school fund amounting to $2,000,000. This system was in vigorous and successful operation at the commencement of the late revolution, lived through that fiery ordeal, and at its close. The public schools of the State were still in operation when the university, the colleges and high schools were closed, and all schools generally in the South had been long suspended. This was all under the administration of the first Superintendent, who had no precedent in this or adjoining States to guide him. He was not supported, as now, by a fixed public opinion, by the press and by examples and countenance in sister States. His office was in fact, for years, on trial. Both people and children had to be educated and won to the system. By a remarkable consecration to his work, by faithful, patient and assiduous effort, confidence was secured in the family and in the school, at home and abroad. All the leading denominations of Christians gave the system their countenance and cordial support. The Synod of North Carolina more than once, commended it to the Presbyterian population of the State. The presiding officers of both Houses of the Legislature honored the Superintendent with the designation of the Committees on Education, and all legislation in every department of education, was submitted to his review.

The honored successor of the first Superintendent, did all that could have been done under the circumstances. His manly defence of the South, and specially of North Carolina, in reference to her educational policy, in the National Education Convention, against the aspersions of Dr. McCosh, commanded the respect of all parties, was commended by the press North and South, and entitles him to our profound regard.

From the report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction we learn that there are 425,000 children and youth in the State entitled to the benefit of the school fund, that 238,000 attended school last year; that there are 3,500 school houses, that 5,600 schools were taught during the year, that the teachers received a salary of about $22 per month, and were paid during the year $293,000, that the school fund for the year amounted to $348,000. There is no intimation that our people have not availed themselves of every facility provided for the education of their children. In one of the mountain counties, sparsely settled, where the means are offered, they are improved to the fullest extent: Of 2,921 whites between the ages of six and twenty-one, 2,822 were in school the last year. If the balance in the county treasury for school purposes, could be judiciously expended in giving additional advantages, many of the children who have not gone to school would attend.

Everyone must appreciate what is called the higher education of the State. Never before has there been in the State so many and such excellent classical academies, while our colleges are all in a most flourishing condition. The Presbyterians are all pleased with Davidson, the Baptists are proud of Wake Forest, the Methodists are delighted with Trinity, and the Episcopalians ought to be satisfied with Chapel Hill. It is believed that at no former period of her history could North Carolina boast of a larger number of her youth in a collegiate course of education.

Much more, might in truth, and ought in justice to the State and individuals, be said. But we submit, is there anything in the educational policy of the State, before the war, during the war, immediately after the war, or at the present time, to justify the ridicule attempted to be cast upon her by comparing her efforts in this direction to an attempt "to turn the tide of the river with a teaspoon," to "overturn a mountain with a tooth pick," or to "build a railroad a hundred miles long with a president or superintendent, half a dozen shovels and a keg of spikes."

It cannot be a matter of surprise that "Howe," and many others should be sensitive and mortified that the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN should be so forgetful of North Carolina's more prosperous educational era, totally ignore services that must have an honorable place in the history of the State and look forward to mere stump oratory for the relief and revival of our common schools.

All concede that the present school law is deficient, and that the salary of the Superintendent of Public Instruction is totally inadequate. "Harangue" the Legislature "faithfully" until these evils are corrected, and North Carolina can present scores of men who have sense enough to understand their duty, and have the moral courage to do it.

TRUST IN THE LORD.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

"I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul. O God the Lord, on Thee is my trust."—1 Sam. xxvii: 1; 1 Ps. cxli: 8.

I shall one day be forsaken,
Said I hasty, after all;
I shall one day, overtaken,
Perish by the hand of Saul:
But will God the Lord deceive me?
He has promised not to leave me,
And I know, though He bereave me,
He will never let me fall.

In myself I am but weakness,
But the Master knows the whole;
He has bid me still in meekness
Bring to Him my burdened soul;
He in dangers will defend me,
He in straits will succor send me,
He a helping hand will lend me,
When the billows round me roll.

I will trust in His protection
In my times of sorest need,
I will, under His direction,
Go wherever He may lead;
Though the world for it maligns me,
To the post, where He assigns me,
I will go, as He designs me,
For His aid is guaranteed.

In the place of greatest danger,
In the trench or at the front,
I will stand, nor be a stranger,
But as one to battle wont:
He has bid oppose resistance,
Not to foeman in the distance,
But contend as for existence,
And withstanding bear the burnt.

In the Lord Jehovah ever,
Then, will I implicit trust,
This shall be my one endeavor,
Till my body sleep in dust:
His is not the word to palter,
His is not the mind to alter,
His is not the arm to falter,
All His ways are wise and just.

LETTER FROM REV. DR. HOGE.

We give our readers the following from the Central Presbyterian:

JERUSALEM, April 15th, 1880.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—We were detained one more day in Jerusalem by a violent storm of wind and rain, and I improved the opportunity, thus unexpectedly afforded, of giving you the sequel of our journey down to the Dead sea and the Jordan. I say down to the sea, because Jerusalem is on a plateau 2,500 feet above the level of the Mediterranean, while the Dead Sea is 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. Therefore in going down from this city to that sea, one descends 3,800 feet, that is, to the lowest sheet of water on the surface of the globe, if indeed that can be said to be on the surface which is so far down toward the centre. Nor is this all, for the average depth of the Dead Sea is 1,080 feet, so that its bottom is 4,880 lower than Jerusalem. We returned from the Jordan by a different route from the one by which we went. Our course lay across the great plain of Jericho, one that was once famed for its exuberant fertility, and which might become so again. The Jordan might do for some parts of Palestine what the Nile does for Egypt, where the people do not depend altogether upon the annual overflow of the river for its enriching power, but by artificial means are pumping up its waters all the year round and conveying them by little canals over the whole face of the ground. Wherever the Nile water goes, there is life and beauty, while the lands untouched by its moisture are desert sands. The same is measurably true of the Jordan. In the far distance its course may be traced by the line of verdure on its banks, but the inhabitants are too poor or too indolent to construct the simple machinery by which its waters might be utilized. There is one body of some 40,000 acres of land, which we crossed over, that might be made as fertile as a Red River bottom by artificial irrigation.

As we pricked along over the plain we came to a clear, rapid little stream making its way merrily to the Jordan, and our guide rode back to tell us that this was the brook Cherith, which at once brought to us the memory of Elijah's hiding place and miraculous preservation. Soon we came to the wretched and revolting little Arabian village of Er-Riha, inhabited by a population among whom thievery is the least reprehensible of their vices. Er-Riha is believed to be the site of the ancient Gigal and of the Jericho of the time of the Crusaders. The ancient Jericho stood nearer the edge of the plain and at the foot of the lofty range of hills, one of which, the Quarintania, is the traditional mountain where our Lord was tempted. Now nothing remains of the old city except a ruined aqueduct and some dreary mounds. The country around is overrun with prickly shrubs and thorn bushes, the most common being the Zizyphus Spini Christi, of which it is believed the crown of thorns was made. One can scarcely conceive of a greater contrast than that presented by the locality now and its aspect in the olden time. Here once stood the walled city which Joshua besieged, and these grim cliffs once rang and re-echoed when the shrill blast of the trumpets smote their sides; here the kind-hearted Rahab hid the spies who found lodging under her roof; here grew the stately palms which shook their princely plumes in the morning air; here bloomed the pleasure gardens which Antony presented to Cleopatra; here Herod had his winter palace, where the fragrant "rose of Jericho" and a thousand flowers diffused their odors even when the slopes of Mt. Zion were white with snow. More interesting still is it to remember that here was the home of Zaccheus and of "Blind Bartimeus," and it was from Jericho that our Lord made His last journey to Jerusalem.

We encamped for the night on the plateau just above "Elisha's Spring," now called by the Arabs Ain es-Sultan, or the Sultan's Spring. About 9 o'clock we received a message from the friendly Bedouins of the neighborhood that they were coming to entertain us with one of their dances. We left our tents and went out to see the performance. They had built a fire of brush-wood on the ground and by its light we watched their wild antics. Their leader held a sword in his hand which he waived in lieu of a baton, and chanted a monotonous song to which the rest kept a slow and measured step. True to the ancient customs of the East, the men danced alone, and when they had finished, about a dozen girls of their company took their place—one of them holding the sword, uttering shrill, discordant cries, and directing the movements of the others. There was no grace or agility in their steps, but instead only a series of writhings and contortions, not at all pleasant to witness. The performance ended by the pas seul of a lithe young Arab, who held back his head and balanced a tea-cup on his forehead and there the cup remained without being shaken off by all the frantic leaps in which he indulged, keeping time all the while with a pair of castanets he held in each hand, while another Arab beat a tom-tom as an accompaniment.

A party of Englishmen who made the excursion after we did, told us that on their return from the Jordan they were overtaken by the rain as they passed a Bedouin village, and the Sheik invited them into his house, spread Persian carpets on the floor for them to sit on, and treated them to coffee and pipes. This is Bedouin hospitality to those who make the trip to the Jordan under the protection of a Sheik, but unless travellers go thus guarded they will in all probability be attacked and robbed. In addition to the Sheik who accompanied us, we had three or four guards employed by our dragoman, and most of the men of our own company, eight in number, were armed.

The next morning we made an early start, and after five hours ride, during which we passed the reputed house of the Good Samaritan, we hailed for rest and refreshment at a fountain called the Apostle's Spring. While there we saw hundreds of Russian pilgrims returning from the Jordan, where they had been to bathe previous to the solemnities of their Easter, which is yet to come, the Easter of the Greek Church being later in the year than that of the Latin.

Our route from the Apostle's Spring to Jerusalem led us by the village of Bethany, only two miles distant from the city. There is nothing inviting in the aspect of the place, though the situation is a very pleasant one—so near to Jerusalem, and yet so retired, shut in by hills, rising above on all sides by gentle slopes. One can well understand why this must have been a retreat dear to our Lord, remote from the turmoil of the city, and where He must ever have found such a ready welcome under the roof of the little family so dear to Him. Nothing can be more tender than the simple words—"Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister and Lazarus." Here it was that He proved not by words only but by tears of sympathy and compassion how truly He could be "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and how in our "afflictions he was afflicted." Here it was too that He uttered those ever memorable words which have comforted so many mourners since Mary wept at the tomb of her brother: "I am the resurrection and the life;" and it was near this spot that His disciples saw Him for the last time and received His final benediction, for "He led them out as to (over against) Bethany, and He lifted up his hands and blessed them, and it came to pass while He blessed them, He was parted from them, and carried up into Heaven."

To-night it is clear and cool; all Jerusalem lies hushed and still, bathed in the sof moonlight. Early to-morrow morning we expect to commence our journey to Beirut, and then we go to Damascus and Constantinople.

THE VIPER GNAWS THE FILE.

That prince of blasphemers, Robert Ingersoll, in his lecture in this city last week, though abusing Christianity in general with a tone and temper utterly unworthy of any one claiming to be a man, was particularly bitter, as we learn, in his denunciation of Presbyterianism.

Whilst this tirade of abuse is a disgrace to him whose foul and false mouth belched it forth, it is refreshing to know that such onslaughts on our faith do as little damage to it as would a wad from a pop-gun fired at the sun. Though they are designed to be curses, they are really compliments. It is the glory of Presbyterianism to be the scoff of the infidel, and the song of the drunkard. All vile men hate our Church. They abhor our recognition of the sovereignty of God, the infinite glory of God in Christ, and the spirituality of worship, severity of morals, and purity of life, to which such recognition leads. All licentious wits try their venom upon our church. All demagogues find something to say against it. All who are under the sway of sensual passion, instinctively pass by on the other side. It was the discipline of Presbyterianism that drove Calvin from Geneva, and periled Knox in Scotland. It is the morality of Presbyterianism that makes the young, the gay, the worldly, the self-indulgent, seek folds where entrance is easier, and no grim ruling elders demand a life in accordance with the literal principles of God's Word. Within other pales, the historic, the artistic, the enthusiastic, may each find their key-note struck. In Presbyterianism the element that holds all and controls all, is the moral.

A true Presbyterian, says one whose life illustrated his description, is reliable. They always belong to the heavy battalions. Like Wellington's squares, they can stand steadily not alone eight hours, but three-score and ten years, against the cavalry of the aliens. A colonel going to these wars should ask for a regiment of such men as fought at Bannockburn and defended Londonderry. A Presbyterian means what he says. His word is as good as his bond. If they unite in an enterprise with other men, they invariably bear the heaviest part of the burden, take on them the hardest part of the work, pay the heaviest part of the expense, and receive the least benefit of all the partners. Hence of all men they least need combination with others. Of all men, they are most capable of self-reliance, under God. Presbyterianism, pure and simple, unperverted by wordly policy, is the sincerest form of human life, the most transparent medium of human thought. If it has not the polish of other creeds, it can better be without it, than take with it the coldness of heart, and the deceit of soul which render that polish an offense to honest men.

Presbyterianism is intellectual. It is the uniform testimony of history, civil and ecclesiastical. The common schools of Scotland preceded those of New England by three-quarters of a century. They are the only efficient schools for the masses of the people that have ever existed in the British Isles. Given a Presbyterian church, and a school-house is sure, grant a Presbytery and an academy is somewhere under its shadow, create a Synod and a college follows. Every Presbyterian minister reads at least three languages, besides his own, and the grand fault of Presbyterian preaching is, that it is too scholastic for the million, and too intellectual for the lambs of the flock. Logic is the intellectual life of Presbyterianism, and its system of the universe is so grand and all-embracing, that no mind can receive it without growing into a moral greatness, no heart can rest in it without becoming a mirror of the Infinite. Its rude temples and humble manses are the homes of human thought, and from that training come forth the statesmen and the warriors of mankind. Its favorite form of human government is republicanism. It avoids, by natural instinct, democracy and monarchy. It is an organism based on constitutional freedom. Its testimonies in favor of civil freedom and liberty of conscience, are unequivocal. It confines its sympathies to no race of men. Believing that God has made of one blood all nations, it advocates freedom for all mankind.

All honor to the other noble branches of the Church of Jesus Christ, notwithstanding our points of divergence, but let no one wonder that when an infidel undertakes to walk about Zion, and demolish her towers and palaces, he counts it specially desirable that those which have "Presbyterian" engraved upon them should be shaken and shivered into a mass of ruins.—Presbyterian Journal.

ERRORS IN MARRIAGE.

Many of the errors of life admit of remedy. A loss in one business may be repaired by a gain in another; a miscalculation this year may be retrieved by special care the next; a bad partnership may be dissolved, an injury repaired, a wrong step retraced.

But an error in marriage goes to the very root and foundation of life. It has been said no man is utterly ruined until he has married a worthless wife; and so every woman has a future before her until she is chained, in a wedlock which is a padlock, to a wretched and unworthy man. The deed once done, cannot be recalled. The wine of life is wasted and the goblet is broken, and no tears or toils can bring back the precious draught. Let the young think of this, and let them walk carefully in a world of snares, and take heed to their steps lest in the most critical event of life they go fatally astray.

But here we must guard against another error. Many people think they have made a mistake in marriage, when the mistake is only in their own behaviour since they were married. Good husbands make good wives, and good wives make good husbands; and the scolding or intemperate, or slatternly partner often has but himself or herself to blame for the misery that clouds the life and desolates the home. Multitudes who feel that their marriage was a mistake, and who make their existence a lifelong misery, might, by a little self-denial, and forbearance, and gentleness, and old-time courtesy, make their home brighten like the gates of Eden, and bring back again the old love that blessed the happy golden days gone by.

Suppose the wife does not know quite so much as you do; well you showed your great judgment when you thought her the chief among ten thousand! Or, if your husband is not the most wonderful man in the world, it simply illustrates the wit and wisdom of the young woman who once thought he was, and could not be convinced of the contrary! So perhaps you are not so unevenly mated after all; and if one has had better opportunities since married, then of course that one should teach and cultivate, and encourage the other, and so both journey on together. But if one has grown worse and sunk lower than at the beginning perhaps even then patience and toil and sunshine may bring back the erring one to duty, lift up the fallen, rescue the perishing, and save the lost. How glorious for a wife to pluck her husband from the jaws of ruin and bring him safely to the heavenly home! how blessed for the husband to bring back to the gates of paradise the woman who, through weakness, had been led astray!

Then, hushed as is the land-breeze on the sea,
A gentle whisper, Jesus, came from Thee;
So I arose, and flung the casement wide,
To see whence swept the sweet, faint sounds, the light;
The Lord walked on the road, and loud I cried,
As He did pass my door into the night,
"Master, where dost Thou go? where wander still?"

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Record says it has received a letter from Rev. Mr. Christopher, of Oxford, stating that the chief cause of the change in the representation of that city is Mr. Gladstone's appointing a pervert to Romanism to be the representative of our Protestant Queen before 200,000,000 of her subjects, and also the appointment by Mr. Gladstone of another Romanist, Lord Kenmare, to be the Lord Chamberlain—the Minister in closest attendance on the Queen, and possessed of the chief influence in the selection of many members of Her Majesty's Household.

A correspondent says the latest step taken by Russia in its persecution of the Roman Catholics within its dominions has greatly startled and distressed the Vatican. A decree has been issued to the effect that all persons born of Roman Catholic parents, and themselves professing that faith, who shall have been born since 1836, shall be considered to belong to the Russian Orthodox Church, and that it shall be illegal for them to continue to believe in the doctrines of Romanism. His Holiness has sent a strongly-worded protest against so outrageous and cruelly-tyrannical a decree; which, in case it shall not be received by the Russian government, as is foreseen to be probable, will after the lapse of a short time be published.

M. De Lesseps, of Suez Canal celebrity, has recently made a communication to the French Academy of Science on the topic of the passage of the children of Israel through the Red Sea, to the following effect: About the time the Israelites, under the direction of Moses, left Egypt, the waves of the Red Sea broke at the base of the Serapeum, in the vicinity of Lake Timash—this Temple of Serapis being, after the capitol at Rome, the most beautiful building of Roman antiquity. The Bitter Lakes were filled with salt water, for not more than eleven hundred years ago they periodically received their water from the Red Sea. But, as in the course of time the waters of the Bitter Lakes received supplies only at the equinoctical seasons, or even at longer periods, the deposits of salt began to be made. Now the latter are seen to be composed of horizontal strata, whose thickness varies from two to ten inches, and whose separation is easily discernable by layers of sand occurring between. The whole deposit reaches a depth of thirty feet or more. All of which points to a previously existing marshy region in this locality, overflowed at times and difficult to cross. Indeed, even to the present day this condition remains, for on one occasion M. de Lesseps once riding on horseback in this quarter, became involved in a morass, and escaped with his life only by great exertion. Accordingly at the time of the exodus the head of the Red Sea stretched far toward the north—much farther than at the present time; and the Hebrews, in their passage, crossed not at the present head of the Red Sea, but at a point lying either north of the Bitter Lakes or, according to the researches and belief of M. Lecointre, at the very spot of these lakes. On this theory, Baal-zephon would be assigned to the sensil, or entrance of Serapeum, toward Ismailia.

The Rev. George Doane, the eldest son of the late Bishop Doane, of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, who joined the Roman Catholic Church some years ago, has just been elevated by Pope Leo XIII. to the dignity of "Domestic Prelate to his Holiness."

Last week the Rev. R. G. More, M. A., died at the age of eighty-four. He held, for over fifty years, the donative of St. James's, Shipton, which is of the annual value of £3, and is noted as being the poorest in all England.

ASSEMBLY OVERTURES.

We have given our readers a very full report of the proceedings of the late General Assembly, and will excuse ourselves and them from a recapitulation of its business. One or two notes, however, we wish to make in reference to replies made by the Assembly to sundry overtures.

An overture was sent up from the Presbytery of Florida, through the Synod of Georgia, asking, "Can the office of ruling elder, or deacon, as that of a minister, be demitted?"

The reply of the Assembly after some discussion was to the effect that neither the office of ruling elder nor that of deacon can be demitted—or, more clearly, that a ruling elder, or a deacon cannot be divested of his office under any circumstances, without censure.

In the discussion on this subject in the Assembly it became evident that the views of the Presbyteries on this subject are various, and that the practice has been far from uniform. There was evidently, too, among the commissioners a strong feeling that the spirit of the law might admit of a different interpretation from that which was adopted, but the majority held that the decision of the court must be in accord with the letter of the law, which law the court was not competent to change. The deliverance must be accepted as the mind of the Church, but it will, we fear, serve to broaden and deepen those erroneous impressions as to the eldership which are existent though not avowed among us.

In Presbyterianism there are two orders, viz: the eldership—or presbyterate—and the diaconate. The terms teaching and ruling, as applied to presbyters, however convenient they may be as designating the peculiar functions appertaining to individuals, are seriously misunderstood when they lend color to the inference that there is a third order in the Presbyterian Church.

A minister is simply a presbyter, and a ruling elder is the same. He who serves the Church in ministrations of the Gospel is not ordained as a pastor, or evangelist, popular language to the contrary notwithstanding, but as a presbyter; albeit, because of special fitness peculiar duties are assigned him. As a presbyter, only, he has a place in the Presbytery.

Demission from the ministry, as it is commonly called, is a divestiture of the eldership, which carries with it the duty and the right to exercise the functions pertaining to the pastorate, or the office of evangelist. If this be not so, demission from the ministry leaves intact the right to a place in the session or the presbytery, with corresponding duties and privileges. This would seem plain; indeed the Book of Church Order recognizes it in stating that, after divestiture, the Presbytery 'shall assign the person divested, membership in some particular church;' no reference whatever being made to any official position in such church.

It may be urged that ordination is not the same in the cases of a minister and of a ruling elder, as a ruling elder when inducted into the ministry is re-ordained. The objection amounts to the fact that the former is ordained by the classical presbytery and assigned special functions, while the latter is ordained by a parochial presbytery. In either case the ordination is simply and only to the presbyterate. To allow the significance supposed to be claimed for the difference in ordination above noted, would separate the minister from the presbyterial office and establish the ministry as a third order in the Church. For this we imagine few Presbyteries would claim a scriptural warrant. Some persons indeed hold that there should be distinct ordination (or setting apart) for any special work as pastor, evangelist or missionary, to which a minister may be assigned.

When the Book of Church Order was under discussion, previous to its adoption, the importance of placing the Church right in its position as to the parity of the eldership was urged. Had this been done the latent fallacy of a third order in Presbyterianism would have been extinguished, and we should have been spared the inconsistency of providing for the divestiture without censure of some presbyters, and neglecting that provision with regard to others.

The Assembly was overtured: "Can a Presbytery, by simple vote of the majority, displace a pastor against the will of both pastor and congregation?" and the reply was as follows:

"The Presbytery has power to establish the pastoral relation and to dissolve it at the request of one or both parties, or where the interests of religion imperatively demand it. (Form of Government, chapter 5, section 4, paragraph 6.)

"While the Presbytery clearly has such power, this Assembly decides that a Presbytery taking such action should be thoroughly convinced that the interests of religion imperatively demand it."

We take no exception to the decision of the Assembly, but would specially emphasize the expression "that the interests of religion imperatively demand it."

The elements of authority and right and power. The right of Presbytery to rule is unquestionable, because derived from the Word of God; the limits within which its power may be exerted are controlled in ordinary by the just consent of the people. In extraordinary cases, such as cannot be met within the ordinary exercise of the power with which it is lawfully invested, every government rightfully exerts sufficient force to preserve itself or secure the well-being of the governed. Undoubtedly, Presbytery may as in a case of heresy in a pastor who is supported and sustained by a congregation, interfere in the interests of religion—nay, it must do so. But the phrase "Presbytery is bishop," however suited for the conveyance of an idea in common usage, is inexact in defining a principle of Presbyterianism. Presbytery has authority and the people have liberties. Intelligent loyalty preserves and maintains the proper play between them. Presbyterianism is not to be confounded with Prelacy on the one hand nor Congregationalism on the other. It is neither monarchy nor democracy; its nearest type is that of republicanism, which recognizes the liberty which is defined as voluntary subjection to lawful authority.

THE NORTHERN ASSEMBLY.

Last week in our anxiety to get up the entire proceedings of our own General Assembly—in which, however, we did not succeed—along with the editorial and other valuables, we dispossessed our readers of all news from the General Assembly of the Northern Church.

It was indeed, as our exchanges say, quite a notable assembly in many respects. The largest, it is claimed, and certainly one of the ablest, since the Old and New School Churches came together. Five hundred and thirty-eight delegates, and including corresponding ministers, delegates from corresponding bodies and officials of the Assembly, 549 persons, total. Madison entertained all these royally; not only so, the Committee of Entertainment gave 100 cards to wives of commissioners.

We can't help rejoicing—and there's no reason we should—at the prosperity of our Northern brethren, albeit we can work much better, we heartily believe, apart from them.

From Dr. Gray's letter to the Christian at Work we give these points: "The most remarkable success in the work of the Church for the year is found in the tables of the Foreign Mission department. The Board began the year under depressing auspices. There was a debt of $62,532 hanging over it. The financial agents in Liverpool, who have been trusted with the funds of the Board for a quarter of a century, failed, and by their failure the Board lost $48,850. Here was the heavy sum of $111,382 to be provided for, and the vast work of the Board to be sustained. Having closed the year with a debt, the propect under such circumstances was nothing less than appalling to many of the anxious workers in the foreign fields. But the women came upon the scene, and, as at the battle of Bannockburn, snatched a grand victory from the jaws of defeat. They gathered the splendid sum of $176,096 88. The work abroad was sustained in unusual efficiency, and a balance remains in the treasury of $6,098 18. If the amount of legacies paid into the treasury were deducted the table would show that forty per cent. of the whole amount received into the treasury came from the hands of the women

There has been a rally all along the line of the Presbyterian forces. The Home Mission work has been successful. Starting with an indebtedness of $26,451 27, the Board gathered $345,809 56, and closed the year with an indebtedness of only $4,582 77. The missionaries employed number 1,151. They received 11,000 new members, built churches during the year at a cost of $237,343—this sum is not included in the Home Mission fund proper, above stated. They cancelled $144,173 of church debts, and ministered to a membership of 66,493, and to a Sunday School membership of 114,811."

The benevolent causes in general showed a fine increase—the total of improvement rolling up $225,206. The cause of education fell a few hundred dollars behind last year. For the Freedmen there was an increase of over $20,000. The Northern Church during the last year gave $20,450 for relief of sufferers by famine in Persia.

There seems to have been enough of fun among our Northern brethren, in Assembly convened, to impart a hearty smack of humanity, and enough of staid and solemn dignity to check all undue exuberance of feeling.

THE METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The General Conference did wisely concerning the Episcopacy. There were those who clamored for a colored bishop. Some of the colored delegates present pressed the matter with unseemly persistence. They demanded a bishop of their own color, who should be the equal of any of the white bishops, episcopally and socially; they proposed to make the man bishop because of his color and then disregard his color after he was instituted. It would have been unwise to elect a bishop in this way, and unkind to the man chosen, whose position would subject him to ten thousand annoyances and slights, which he would otherwise escape. Not less than two-thirds of the delegates were opposed to the proposition.

There is nothing of special interest to say of the other elections, except the editorship of the New York Christian Advocate, which, contrary to the desires and expectations of many, was not given to Dr. Curry, whose twelve years' service in that position, and his unquestioned ability, were urged as reasons for his return, particularly as he had been displaced in 1876 to make room for one of different calibre. But perhaps the Conference did wisely in selecting a younger man, Dr. Buckley, for whom everybody has the highest admiration and predicts a signal success. Dr. B, is not small or narrow; he is not dull, he is not abusive, he is not imprudent, and he does not lack either foresight or insight, nor will he mistake pedantry for scholarship. We give Dr. Buckley the right hand of editorial fellowship.

The actual legislation of the Conference amounts to almost nothing. No great reform measure has been adopted or even discussed. Those who hoped to see a full and free discussion of the important question of modifying the itinerant system were disappointed. All the debate there was on the subject was in committee, which did not propose any change. This is, many believe, the question now before the Church, and the experience of another four years will compel action of some sort. An unnecessary and unwise scheme for dividing the Conference into two houses, clerical and lay, secured, in some way, a favorable report by committee, but the Conference killed it. The Conference settled—we think it wisely settled—the question of the eligibility of women to ordination, adversely, by approving the adverse decision of Bishop Andrews. There is plenty of work in the M. E. Church for women to do without assuming the pastorate. Dorcases and Phœbes are still in demand. Some amendments were made in the ecclesiastical code, which is one of the most complete ever devised.

Few of the General Conferences in the history of the Church has done less in the way of legislation than this, yet there were more new men in it than usual, and there was fully as much agitation previously as at any similar time. New men are apt to be cautious. On the whole, the recent General Conference was a creditable, conservative body, attending with almost unprecedented strictness to the business in hand, and taking no action which the Church will feel disposed to criticise, although it has bequeathed the single matter of the itinerancy a legacy to a new Conference to dispose of eight years hence. That itinerancy, like Banquo's ghost, will not "down." —Christian at Work.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Our thanks for invitations to commencement exercises at Peace Institute and Thomasville Female College.

We acknowledge with special thanks the courtesy of an invitation, through Jordan Stone, Esq., to be present at the annual convention of the North Carolina Press Association at Asheville, N. C., on the 30th of June, prox.

We have received the following query:

"Doesn't it look a little inconsistent to see the City Hall in mourning for one of our Aldermen (lately deceased) and a dance in progress in the building at the same time for a church benefit?"

Mr. T. B. McDowell has retired from the editorship of the Southern Home published at Charlotte, N. C., and it will be hereafter conducted by M. D. H. Hill, Jr., whom the retiring editor refers to as "a young gentleman of talent, energy and fine advantages of education." Our best wishes to both parties.

The University of Chapel Hill has conferred the following honorary degrees: The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon the Revs. David McGilvary and Thos. G. Stow of Richmond, Rev. Joseph M. Atkinson of Raleigh, and Rev. Mr. Rondthaler of Salem. The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon the Hon. W. N. H. Smith, Chief Justice of North Carolina. The degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon Dr. W. H. Hall of New York, A. M. Boorse of Columbia. S. C., Dr. J. W. Harris of Chapel Hill, and Isaac W. Clarke of Texas.

While we do not propose retraction, apology or explanation of anything that appeared in our editorial of some weeks since entitled "Education in North Carolina," we are glad to explain as to what we did not say. It did not enter into the aim or scope of that article to review the entire history of education in this State, so as to do specific justice to those who have been prominent actors in the field of public instruction. We are glad to publish what we feel assured is no more than simple justice to Rev. C. H. Wiley. The communications have said, and well said, what was due, and our reference to the matter is necessary only to prevent any impression, which might arise from silence, that intentional injustice was intended by us.

The commencement exercises at Davidson College promise to be unusually interesting. The orator before the Societies is Rev. Dr. Boggs of Atlanta. He is an eloquent speaker and made a fine impression at the last General Assembly in Charleston. And there is scarcely any minister so beloved or so useful in the great valley of the Mississippi. The story of his life is a part of the history of Memphis in the two most memorable years of its existence.

It is the year too for many of the class reunions. It is thought that more than usual of the scattered sons of Davidson will return to her annual feast. Rev. Wm. S. Lacy of Jonesboro delivers the Alumni Address.

Reduced rates we learn will be afforded by the railroads.

We hope to have a full report of proceedings. Davidson College is dear to every North Carolinian, to every lover of sound learning and high scholarship, and dear too to every Presbyterian. The NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN hurrahs for Davidson.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

MEETING OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The Board of Trustees of Davidson College will meet on Tuesday, the 15th of June, at 11 o'clock a. m., in the old chapel.

L. McKINNON, Pres't.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters or this column.

The postoffice address of Rev. D. E. Jordan is changed from Oxford, N. C., to Henderson, N. C.

Licentiate E. Geddings Smith was ordained and installed pastor of Hopewell church, Presbytery of Harmony, on the 5th Sabbath in May.

Rev. J. H. Thornwell is heartily engaged in his work in Stanly county. Norwood church, although quite recently established has sixteen members and large congregations; also a good Sabbath school.

We regret to learn as we do through Mess. A. D. F. Randolph & Co., that "The Gospel in all Lands owing to the ill health of Mr. Simpson, the editor, proprietor and publisher, has ceased to be published."

This magazine bade fair to be a most potent auxiliary in the missionary cause.

Licentiate F. P. Harrell, of Fayettoville Presbytery, and a graduate of Union Theological Seminary, class of 1880, will minister to the churches of Prospect and Fifth Creek, in Concord Presbytery. The field is large and important, and we wish the young brother abundant success in his labors. His postoffice address is Mooresville, N. C.

BURGAW CHURCH, WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY,

Rev. B. F. Marable writes us from Burgaw, N. C., under date of June 7th: "We closed here last night a very interesting meeting of ten days; results not yet known; several persons profess hope in Christ. The meeting has given a new impetus to the church, all the surroundings of which seem greatly encouraging.

MY DEAR BROTHER McLAURIN:—You will be grieved to learn as will many friends all over the Synod, that our brother, Rev. George M. Gibbs has lost his beloved and accomplished wife. Mrs. Gibbs entered into rest, Friday morning, May 28, 1880, at four o'clock, and was buried on Saturday. A large concourse of people attested their sympathy by their presence and their tears.

Yours truly, WM. S. LACY.

Jonesboro, N C., Monday, May 31, '80

During the past few weeks a revival of religion has been proceeding in the First Baptist church of this city, of which Rev. J. B. Taylor is pastor. The meetings have been conducted by Rev. Dr. T. C. Teasdale and have been very interesting to all who attended. The morning Bible readings have been specially interesting. The meetings have closed. During their progress thirty-five persons united with the Church.

ORDINATIONS.

Rev. H. G. Hill writes from Fayetteville, N. C., 1st June inst.: My Church has suffered severely during the past year from death and removals. Our acting elders were reduced to four. On the fourth Sabbath of May we were encouraged by ordaining two new elders, Mr. E. T. McKethan and Capt. S. C. Rankin; and two deacons, Mr. Alexander Graham and Mr. Charles D. Gilchrist.

OLNEY CHURCH, MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

Rev. R. Z. Johnston writes: We had an interesting meeting at Olney church, in Gaston county, (Rev. W. B. Corbett, pastor) last Saturday and Sunday, May 29th and 30th. Very large congregations and good attention. Several additions to membership, and contribution for Foreign Missions.

Lincolnton, N. C., June 1, '80.

The session of the Columbia Theological Seminary closed on the 13th ulto. The graduating class consisted of fourteen members, as follows: S. E. Bishop, Darlington, S. C.; F. J. Brooke, Richmond, Va.; A. M. Frazer, Sumter, S. C.; D. E. Frierson, Anderson, S. C.; Baxter D. D. Greer, New Harmony, Ala.; J. L. D. Houston, Batesville, Ark.; J. A. McLees, Anderson, S. C.; J. T. Plunkett, Nashville, Tenn.; L. H. Robinson, Pineville, N. C.; A. M. Sale, Athens, Ga.; J. McL. Seabrook, Charleston, S. C.; C. M. Shepherd, Memphis, Tenn.; C. L. Stewart, Greenville, S. C.; R. A. Webb, Nashville, Tenn.—Southern Presbyterian.

Quite recently a very interesting series of meetings has been held at Mt. Horeb church in Bladen county. The spiritual state of this church is encouraging. Within eighteen months past some six or seven prominent persons in the community have united with Mt. Horeb church. The Sabbath school is very promising. It has a good library and several heads of families are connected with it. The repairs and improvement to the church and the grounds bespeak the interest of the congregation in all that concerns their house of worship. Very special care is taken of the grave yard in connection with the church.

FROM BALTIMORE.

A friend in Baltimore writes: Dr. Murkland, pastor of the Franklin Street Presbyterian church, and one of the youngest D. D's. in our denomination, is deservedly popular. Next Sabbath (16th) he will refer in his sermon to his pastorate of ten years, of which that day will be the anniversary. Recently his evening discourses on Sabbath have been expositions of the Lord's prayer.

Your correspondent had the pleasure of hearing an able sermon last Sunday night at the First Presbyterian church (Northern) by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Leftwitch, late of Atlanta.

FIFTH CREEK CHURCH, CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

A friend writes: "An interesting communion meeting has just closed at Fifth Creek church, embracing the 5th Sabbath of May. Rev. A. M. Watson of Lexington, by invitation, was present and conducted the services, preaching excellent sermons, earnest and pungent, to large congregations. The funeral of a very highly esteemed young married lady, Mrs. Nola Honpe, wife of Mr. E. E. Honpe, took place on Saturday at the church, Rev. F. F. Rockwell conducting a very impressive and solemn funeral service. Rev. F. P. Harrell, a licentiate of Fayetteville Presbytery, who has engaged to preach one-half of his time at this church, arrived Saturday evening. He preached his first sermon here on Sabbath evening to a large congregation. The sermon was very highly appreciated.

BURGAW, N. C., May 28.

The Home Mission Committee of Wilmington Presbytery met, and was constituted with prayer by Rev. K. McDonald. Present: Ministers B. F. Marable, D. B. Black, K. McDonald and A. McFadyen, and Ruling Elders T. B. Hyman and W. J. Boney.

On motion the appointment of an evangelist for the eastern portion of the Presbytery was deferred till to-morrow forenoon.

Rev. Colin Shaw reported that he is employed one Sabbath a month each at the following places, viz: Lebanon, Hungry Neck and Long Creek for the year 1880.

Saturday night was chosen as the time for a free discussion on the subject of ministerial support, and the committee adjourned to meet immediately after the adjournment of Presbytery to-morrow morning.

The committee met on Saturday at 2 p. m. and was constituted with prayer.

The committee arranged vacant churches of the Presbytery into groups as follows: Burgaw, Mount Williams and Topsail to be supplied by Rev. G. W. MacMillan, and that he be requested to reside in Burgaw if the way be clear; Rev. K. McDonald to visit the churches of White Hall, Cobb Mills and Richlands, and if the arrangement be acceptable to supply them; Rev. J. S. Black to take charge of Keith and Black River Chapel.

The Rev. H. B. Garriss was appointed an evangelist for the eastern portion of this Presbytery at a salary of six hundred dollars, he to raise what he can in the field and the remainder to be supplemented by the Presbytery.

Closed with prayer.

W. S. L., AT PEACE.

The last sweet days of May and the first of June, notwithstanding dust and heat, were very enjoyable and very memorable days at "Peace." The beginning of the commencement was on Saturday evening, May 29th, 1880, when the calisthenic exercises of the young ladies were exhibited to an invited company. Your knight of the quill (or pencil rather) could not be present, but he knows from all he has seen and heard since, that the evolutions were graceful and beautiful, and the evening a most delightful one. It has always been a feature of the Peace Institute, and is still, to give constant and careful attention to the health and physical development of the pupils, as well as the mental and moral training. I regret so much I could not witness the beauty and share the joy of the evening given to this department.

I was early on the scene of action, Monday, May 31st. Taking advantage of a quiet hour or two on Monday and Tuesday I examined the exhibition of drawings and paintings. Miss Wright, whose skill and success in teaching, illumined the walls in studio, chapel and reception rooms, is still in charge of the school of Drawing and Painting connected with Peace. The catalogue revealed 144 pieces on exhibition from twenty pupils. Among them were nearly sixty crayon drawings, about fifteen drawings from casts, more than thirty oil paintings and in addition nearly twenty paintings from nature. There were also specimens of art decoration, fifteen or twenty, and a few of outline drawing and art-embroidery. I am no connoisseur, and cannot speak critically. I see such pretty specimens year by year of the exquisite work of the young ladies, that I am learning more and more to appreciate this rare accomplishment that brings such enjoyment to the soul, in so noiseless and delicate a manner. It is the true poetry of the age. I admired most the paintings from nature and the art decorations, many of which were "perfectly lovely," and all of which reflected great credit on the fair artists and their accomplished teacher.

The Commencement proper took place on Monday night, and the literary and oratorical exercises were delightfully interspersed with choicest music. There was a recitation (in French) from Moliere by a daughter of a Presbyterian minister, uttered very fluently and vivaciously. There was another by a young lady from Florida, that won great and deserved applause, so natural, so full of life and humor, and so delightfully personated was it—entitled "A Courtship Under Difficulties." A third recitation was "The Man who Didn't Know Much;" not in the line of humor or playfulness, but full of power, pathos and tenderness. How well recited is attested by the rapt attention and the eloquent answer of silence and tears. I have heard many readers, and Mrs. Scott-Siddons among them, and I do not believe I ever heard a better. What a rare and delightful accomplishment is good reading! And how faithfully taught at Peace, the evening afforded a most interesting illustration. This department, as well as the calisthenic training, shows the eminent qualification of Miss Mattoon, by whose care such results have been attained.

The Annual Address was delivered by Capt. Chas. M. Cooke, of Louisburg, and was admirable. It was entirely devoid of gush and meretricious ornament—was indeed exceedingly simple in matter and manner, and was spoken modestly and earnestly, and as if the speaker had a message. He urged the importance of strong character in women, and especially the cultivation of the traits of firmness, candor and a becoming self-esteem. The speech was short and to the point—hardly rising to eloquence in the usual acceptation of the term, but weighty with truth, without being heavy, and full of earnest counsel, pointed and pleasant advice, and sensible and tender appeal.

Certificates of graduation in various schools were awarded. I shall not trespass on your space to give the lists, but will mention that the proficiency certificates in the "cooking school" were given with applause.

The following young ladies were the graduates in literature and science, having completed the full course prescribed: Miss Edwina K. Johnson, of Virginia; Miss Georgia Johnson, of Virginia; Miss Mary S Long, of North Carolina; Miss Ina McCall, of North Carolina; Miss Rosa A. Penick, of North Carolina.

The following in addition to the regular collegiate course have become proficient in several schools, thus entitling them to the honor of full graduates: Miss Fannie J. Baker, of Florida, modern languages, and drawing and painting; Miss Nannie H. Burwell, modern languages and vocal music; Miss Linda L. Rumple, modern languages, ancient languages and instrumental music; Miss Bettie K. Parker, modern languages and instrumental music.

Each member of the class was then presented with a Bible (the diplomas having been previously given by the Principal), E. R. Stamps, Esq., making the address, which was sensible and appropriate.

An unexpected and pleasant event (not on the programme) then occurred, to-wit: the presentation of a beautiful gold medal to Miss Linda Rumple, by Professor Baumann, for superior excellence and proficiency in instrumental music. Of the manner of the presentation it does not become me to speak, as the Professor selected your correspondent as his spokesman.

Then followed the few moments, long enjoyed in anticipation, of social intercourse. I have an idea that the realization (forgive that word) never reaches the expectation indulged. But everybody seemed very happy. And and with musical chatter and snowy and delicate-tinted plumage fluttered about and made merry, hall and passages and stairways and porches.

"The birds let loose flew everywhere,"

The Annual Concert is the musical event of the season. Mr. Baumann's concerts are always the wonder of every one. His painstaking care, and high accomplishments are seen in the work of his pupils. The marvellous precision with which four grand pianos (one a concert grand) and the pipe organ are played by nine performers, as if but one mind and will directed the whole, the delicacy and softness of expression, as well as perfect tune in the various changes of the tempo which are secured, are matters not of delight merely but of wonder. The programme was choice and varied. Gems from Wagner, Beethoven and Liszt, and such composers, were presented, I may say faultlessly. You couldn't allow me space to particularize or write any discriminating criticism. The vocal music was up to the usual high excellence, and the instrumental music was superior. It is not unjust to say that the "Grand Fantasie," Opus 7 by Bartlett, a new English composer and Professor in Oxford University, was specially admired. Those who have heard the "Mendolssohn Quintette Club" render Pleyel's Hymn, will pardon my enthusiasm and guess the beauty and majesty of this performance, and understand how magnificent it was, as I say it was only less than that. And considering that but one performer produced such effects, it was far superior. Nor less worthy of special comment and commendation was the Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 2, by Liszt—eight performers on four pianos—the closing piece of the concert.

It was a matter of gratification and delight that it was learned that Miss Rumple, whose playing and wonderful accomplishment won such universal admiration, is to be an Assistant to Professor Baumann in the school of music connected with Peace. Mr. Burwell is always prompt to secure the most efficient assistants and to do everything to make Peace Institute the power in the State and the Church that it is, to increase its influence and its usefulness.

And now, Mr. Editor, "the half has not been told." But I must leave that other half unsaid. Instead of saying "too long," "too long," and reaching for your clippers, thank me for saying so little when so much might be said. Come sometime yourself to "fair, delightful Peace" and see her "plans" and her results.

DISRESPECTFUL ATTEMPT TO INFLUENCE THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Such is the allegation of the Assembly touching the circulation of certain pamphlets among its members. With regard to the one which was singled out "Discussion on Assembly Deliverances," these things are to be said:

1. It is the supplement of a larger pamphlet, which had been forwarded to the commissioners and to others. (The numbering of the pages of the smaller pamphlets "101," "102," &c., shews, that it is a supplement.) The Supplement was, accordingly also sent to those who were not members, and to those who were; though from the lateness of the sending it was not supposed it would reach the members before the close of the debate.

2. Even though it was expected to reach them before the debate was over, there was no impropriety in sending the concluding part of the argument to those who had received the first and larger part. There would be as much ground to style the circulation of the large pamphlet among the commissioners a "disrespectful attempt to influence the assembly," as so to style the supplement; albeit, some churl would, probably, "denounce" the former as "an infringement upon his prerogatives."

3. The exposure of a wrong is pronounced an "assault upon one of its members." Thus, the "deliverance" of a writer—with which the Assembly had nothing to do,—is taken up by it, and virtually treated as a "judicial case!"—although the Assembly was not acting "in a strictly judicial capacity"—and judgment passed, without the inconvenience of a hearing given!

As this extraordinary "Court" having gone out of existence, non est inventus anymore, all that we can do is, to enter our "protest" before the christian public, against this "assault upon one of its members."

THE AUTHOR OF THE PAMPHLET.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

We have intelligence from Greece as late as the 17th of April. We were sorry to learn that Dr. Kalopothakes was still confined to his bed from severe sickness. He has been advised to leave Greece for a few months, in the hope of restoration by a change of climate and relaxation from work. A letter from Mrs. Kalopothakes, of the 17th ult., published in our present issue, gives an encouraging aspect to the missionary work in that part of the world.

From Brazil we have intelligence to the 1st of April from Campinas, from Moggy-Mirim of the 30th March, and from Pernambuco to the 7th of April. Mr. and Mrs. Boyle have been afflicted by the death, on the 24th of March, of their youngest child, Mary Venable, from congestive fever. At Campinas the mission families were all well, except that Mrs. Lane was in feeble health. It is thought by her physician that she will have to return to this country for relaxation. Our letters from Pernambuco are dated as late as the 7th of April. Mr. Thompson writes that "the attendance at church is very good, and there are many who are considering the question of applying for admission to the church."

Our China letters are dated from the 1st to the 19th March. Miss Safford writes that she has had more than two hundred visits from Chinese women within a few weeks past, some of whom seem to be diligently inquiring into the nature of the Christian doctrine. At Hangchow all the schools had been reopened with increasing numbers, which showed a very different state of feeling in the community generally from what it was a few years ago. Mention is made of the serious illness of Mr. Li, the teacher of the boys' boarding school; he is regarded as a very excellent man, and his loss would be most sensibly felt by the Mission. Mr. Davis will be greatly rejoiced to know that the money for the purchase of the lot of land, of which he has been writing for some time past, is coming into the treasury in a very encouraging way.—Missionary.

The tree will not only lie as it falls, but it will fall as it leans. And the great question everyone should bring home to himself, is, "What is the inclination of my soul? Does it, with all its affections and powers, lean toward God, or away from Him?"—Selected.

It is confidently expected that this amount will be materially increased. The remaining indebtedness can be easily carried, and hereafter the Central will be free and able, as pastor and people are not only willing but anxious, to do its full share for our Synod's interests and in the general work of the Church.

At Portsmouth, Va., May 26th, MAMIE SANTOS, infant daughter of Rev. John M. and Mamie S. Rose.

"He shall gather the lambs with His arm."

At Gulf, Chatham county, N. C., April 16th, 1880, ARTHUR MORRISON, infant son of John M. and Mrs. Mattie L. McIver.

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

"The baby wept;
The mother took it from the nurse's arms,
And hushed its fears and soothed its vain alarms,
And baby slept.

"Again it weeps;
And God doth take it from its mother's arms,
From present griefs and future unknown harms,
And baby sleeps."

Near Salisbury, May 14th, 1880, Mrs. ANN H. JOHNSTON, wife of Mr. Alfred L. Johnston, in the 49th year of her age.

Mrs. Johnston was a native of Salisbury, and carefully trained in the principles of our holy religion by a pious mother. At the age of sixteen she became a member of the Salisbury Presbyterian church. In 1852 she was united in marriage to Mr. A. L. Johnston. For the greater part of her married life she was in feeble health, and at the same time had the care of a large family of children, whom she strove to bring up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Her end came slowly and painfully, through the ravages of an insidious disease, but her faith in her Saviour failed not. The end was peace, and death was gain. J. R.

At his residence, in Moore county, N. C., March 5th, 1880, Mr. ADAM R. WADSWORTH, in the 67th year of his age.

His father was the late William Wadsworth, for many years sheriff of the county, and member of the State Legislature, and widely known and honored. The son inherited much of his father's character. He was a man of strong mind, of decided convictions and staunchest integrity, and served the county for four years as sheriff.

Mr. Wadsworth had been for many years a deacon in Euphronia church, and a most faithful and exemplary member. For eight years he had been confined to his bed with rheumatism; and much of the time his sufferings were intense. It was hard for one of such active powers of mind, and who had led so active and energetic a life, to be thrown helpless on a bed of pain, and to feel himself a burden to a dependent family. But his severe afflictions were sanctified to him. He grew in spiritual-mindedness. He was eminently a man of power, and was deeply interested in the welfare of Zion. With what eagerness he welcomed the visits of ministers, and what delight he took in their conversation! He is at rest, we fondly hope, where "there shall be no more death, neither shall there be any more pain." His end was unexpected, but peacefully, as a child sinks into slumber, he fell asleep in Jesus. A large concourse attested their regard for him, as the weary and wasted frame, so long racked with agony, now strangely still, was laid to rest in the graveyard of old Union church.

May God comfort the household. PASTOR.

On the 12th May, 1880, at her residence near Fayetteville, N. C., Mrs. CATHERINE EVANS, relict of the late Thomas Evans, and daughter of John and Sarah Dickson, aged 84 years, 1 month and 3 days.

Her father was one of the first elders of the Presbyterian church in Fayetteville, and of this church she was a consistent member for 57 years. Though a decided Presbyterian, she was liberal and affectionate towards all Christian denominations, and loved the image of her Saviour wherever reflected.

For more than half a century she lived a widow, devoting herself to her children, her servants and the interests of Christ's kingdom.

She was energetic in her disposition, active in her habits of life, and inclined to be helpful to others.

She was very familiar with the doctrines of her Church and diligent in the pious instruction of those dependent upon her. Her acquaintance with the Scriptures was remarkable, and her "delight was in the law of the Lord." Her closing days were marked by much weakness, affliction and sorrow, but she endured all these with a meekness, patience and resignation that only God's grace and truth can bestow. Her end was blessed with the sweet peace of the Gospel. PASTOR.

In Huntersville, Mecklenburg county, N. C., May 28, 1880, Mrs. MARY M. HUNTER, wife of Mr. H. A. Hunter, in the 36th year of her age.

Mrs. Hunter was the daughter of the late Mr. Wm. H. Mayhew, a distinguished teacher in Newbern, N.C. There she was born and there she lived until a short time before she was married. The family sought refuge from the storm of the late war in Graham; afterward she became acquainted with Mr. Hunter, from Davidson College. They were married July, 1864. Soon after her marriage she united with the Presbyterian church at Davidson College. She admired the doctrines and enjoyed the consolations of religion. She was for years a child of affliction, which she bore with a christian spirit, and under which she became fully ripe for a home in that country where the inhabitants never say we are sick. A few days before her death her pastor, Prof. J. F. Latimer, on his way to Europe, called to bid her farewell. After speaking some words of comfort, he said he hoped she had faith and trust in Christ. "Yes," she said, "I do not know what would become of me without this." While her motherless children and beloved husband feel deeply the loss which they have sustained, they are not left to mourn as those who have no hope. Their loss has been her gain, and while absent from the body she is present with the Lord, for the righteous have hope in their death. W. W. P.

YELLOW FEVER

That this terrible disease has for years held a despotic sway, at certain seasons of the year, in portions of our own fair land, and in other countries, is known by each and every one. As well known is it, that a cure, or even a preventive, has not been, heretofore discovered.

It is known to every intelligent man and woman, that the reason for this fearful scourge is neither more nor less than the malarial poison that emanates from low marshy lands—whether adjacent to salt or fresh water especially in certain stages of the drying process, under a hot sun; as well are these familiar with the fact, that uncleaned cess-pools, insufficient drainage, unremoved filth of any kind or character, are generators of this same death-dealing miasma. Observations of centuries has made every person, blessed with the least faculty of discernment, acquainted with the effect of this subtle malarial poison. Each and all know that Typhus and Intermittent Fevers are the lesser natural consequences of an inhalation of this poisonous exhalative, and that Yellow Fever is the greater.

After a careful reading of the late report of the National Board of Health, no other conclusion can be drawn, than that if the blood is kept in a healthy condition the birth, growth and spread of yellow fever is materially lessened, if not actually prevented. It is a matter understood by all and every one, that if the kidney and liver the organs that filter and cleanse the blood—are kept in a wholesome and sound condition, this same vital fluid will ever be clear from impurities. That these organs, the kidney and liver, can be kept free from disease, and at all times in a condition to well and faithfully perform their duties, is a matter beyond dispute, cavil or argument, and equally it is true, that a free use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills, will actually compel these same organs to perform their allotted functions.

Testimonials by the thousands are in the hands of the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure vouching for its curative qualities in all diseases of kidney and liver, and hence as a cleanser of the blood, and as well a preventive to yellow fever, we have no hesitation in offering it to the public.

The Press are Giving
WARNER'S
Kidney and Liver Cure.

The Stubborn Convinced.

In writing of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Bitters, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, the Sentinel, Weedsport, N. Y., has following: "That these possess all the remedial qualities claimed for them is a matter beyond dispute; bona fide testimonials by the thousand from well known citizens in public and private life are evidences strong enough to convince the most stubborn doubter, that they are the best medicines for the diseases for which recommended, ever yet known to the public or the physicians.

Game Played For.

The Republican, Omaha, Nebraska, says: "In the game of life the 'stake' played for is health, wealth and happiness. Each of these can be obtained by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, Warner's Safe Pills, Bitters, Nervine and Tonic"

Gratitude Lavished.

Is clipped from the columns of the Journal-Courier, New Haven, Conn., the following endorsement: "Gratitude of character strong, earnest and impetuous, is daily, in person and by letter, being lavished upon H. H. Warner & Co. for the introduction of, and the making so extensively known, their wonderful cure, named as Warner's Kidney and Liver Cure."

Mental Strain Relieved.

The Washington, D. C., Critic says: "It is intimated to us that numbers of the Senate and House are freely using Warner's Safe Nervine and relief of nervous prostration incident upon the severe strain upon their mental powers"

Not Open to Argument.

The testimony of the Sunday Herald, Rochester, N. Y., is taken from their columns and is to the effect "that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is a positive cure for disabilities for which it is a specific, there is no disputing; neither is there the 'ghost' of a chance to call into being a negative to so positive an opinion."

Honorable Men.

The Sunday Tribune, Rochester, N. Y., in one of issues prints the following: "The proprietors (of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies), each and all, are men born here, and here have lived the whole period of their stay on earth, and are men who have the unbounded confidence of all who know them."

Speedy and Sure.

The Journal of Commerce, Boston, says: "As a speedy and sure cure this (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure) remedy is 'Safe,' and the cases wherein it misses are those beyond the reach of human relief."

Faith and Confidence.

The following is clipped from the News, Marysville, Kansas: "In calling the attention of our readers to 'Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and other Safe Remedies,' we do so with a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good and said of them"

Good Advice.

The Daily Advertiser, St. Albans, Vt., has the following: "We feel sure that if such of our friends as are sufferers from diseases of Kidneys and Liver would but use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, they would be benefitted."

Quality Maintained.

The Rochester, N. Y., Express says: "So far as the standard of quality is concerned, parties can rest assured the same will be maintained up to the present high character. As a remedy for the speedy cure of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and all complaints of the Kidneys and Liver, no article of any kind or character can equal it (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure).

Wonderful to Contemplate.

From the columns of the Republican, Springfield Mass., is taken the following: "It is a settled fact that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are all they are represented to be by the proprietors, H. H. Warner & Co. The way they go into the habitations of those afflicted with disease for which recommended is truly wonderful to contemplate."

"Bona Fide."

The following is taken from the columns of the York Daily, York, Pa: "The testimonials in possession of H. H. Warner & Co, proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, are not manufactured to order, are bona fide, and have attached date, time, place and signiture of the writers thereof."

Dividend-Paying.

The following is found in the columns of the Standard, New Bedford, Mass.: "Parties, after using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, pronounce it the best dividend-paying (in health and happiness) property they ever handled.

Evidence Corroborated.

The Sun, Indianapolis, Ind., has the following: "Testimonials, not numbered by hundreds, but by thousands, are in hands of H. H. Warner & Co., all furnishing ample corroborative evidence that as curative, for specific diseases for which recommended, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies are unqualified and pronounced success."

Unbounded Confidence.

Peck's Sun, Milwaukee, Wis, in referring to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, has the following: "H. H. Warner & Co, Rochester, N. Y., are the sole proprietors, we have a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good, and said of them."

Surest and Best.

The Journal, Battle Creek, Mich, thus puts it: "The surest safest, best blood purifying medicine known is Warner's Safe Bitters, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills. Regular practitioners prescribe them as a remedy for impure poisoned blood."

Confident, Reliable.

"In writing of the Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, of which H. H. Warner & Co., are proprietors, the Evening Dispatch, York, Pa, says: "We say all this that is good of them as we have a perfect faith in the efficiency, the preparation, and unbounded faith in the truth of all that is said good of it."

Deserve a Monument.

The Standard, Syracuse, N. Y., is the journal from which the following extract is cut: "That the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are entitled to a monument is unmistakably true. It is an indisputable fact that these parties be and are looked upon as Good Samaritans."

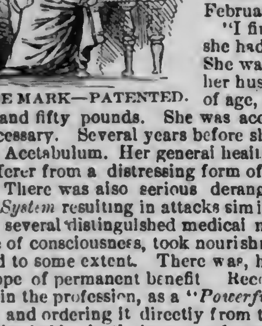
WHAT THE
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
Did For a Kansas Woman.



TRADE MARK—PATENTED.

Its Great Controlling Power over the Nervous System, the Digestive Organs and Uterine Affections.

Case of Mrs. B——, stated by Dr. L. M. Wood, Wyandotte county, Kansas.

Extract from a letter dated White Church, Wyandotte county, Kansas, February 1st, 1880:

"I first saw Mrs. B—— laboring under Hysterical Coma, from which she had not been sufficiently aroused to take nourishment for four days. She was of large frame, but in a condition of extreme emaciation. From her husband I obtained the following statement: She was thirty-six years of age, and when in health unusually robust, her average weight being one hundred and fifty pounds. She was accustomed to do all of her house work and to perform other labor when necessary. Several years before she had undergone an operation for a Tumor formed in the region of the right Acetabulum. Her general health remained good for some time. Afterwards, however, she became a great sufferer from a distressing form of Dyspepsia, there being at times almost total Atony of the digestive organs. There was also serious derangement of the Monthly Functions, with general prostration of the Nervous System resulting in attacks similar to that described, and she had been under the care, at different times, of several distinguished medical men without benefit. Under appropriate treatment she was aroused to a state of consciousness, took nourishment such as her stomach would retain, and her general condition improved to some extent. There was, however, a frequent recurrence of these attacks, and I saw but little if any hope of permanent benefit Recollecting that I had seen the Buffalo Lithia Waters endorsed by men eminent in the profession, as a "Powerful Nerve Tonic," I determined as a last resort to make a trial of it in her case, and ordering it directly from the Springs, put her upon it. In a few weeks the beneficial result was unmistakable, in the increase of appetite—the invigoration of the organs of digestion, and most especially in the gradual restoration to a healthy condition of the exhausted Nervous System and a diminution both of the frequency and severity of the attacks referred to. She used the water for several months with continued and decided benefit. The Monthly Functions have been restored to a normal condition, and there has been a total cessation of the attacks of Hysterical Coma, and she has gained rapidly in flesh and strength, until she is now in robust, vigorous health, eating as much "Hog and Hominy," and doing as much hard work as any woman in this Western country, the credit for all of which, I give where it is certainly due, to these remarkable waters"

These Springs are opened for Visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE. The Waters in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, Five Dollars per case, at the Springs.

They are prescribed by Dr. J. Marion Sims, Dr. William A. Hammond and Dr. John T. Metcalf, of New York, as well as by a large number of leading medical men in all sections of the country. Spring pamphlet sent to any address.

FOR THE FAMILY.

"He First Loved Us."

I sought the Lord, and afterward I knew
He moved my soul to it who sought for me;
It was not I that found, O Saviour true;
No, I was found of Thee.

Thou didst reach forth Thy hand and mine enfold;
I walked, and sank not on the storm-vexed sea;
But not so much that I on Thee took hold
As by Thy hold of me.

I find, I walk, I love, but ah, the whole
Of love is but my answer, Lord, to Thee;
Lord, Thou wert long beforehand with my soul—
Always Thou loved'st me.—Selected

The Bright Side.

Let me tell you a little sermon I had preached to me the other day. I had stopped for a moment's chat with a friend on the street, and as she turned away she said, with a beautiful smile illuminating her sad, patient face, "I am so glad I met you. It will be something pleasant to tell Bessie when I get home. 'There is always something pleasant,' Bessie says."

That smile, those cheerful words, looked at against the background of her darkened life, filled the heart with unspeakable reverence. As this is a true sketch I may not lay bare to you the story of her sorrows, enough that all the world could give her she had once enjoyed: all that the world could take from her she had lost—husband, health, beauty, station, wealth and friends; and even while in her only child her love found its one solace, it was a love made holier by tears, for not only was Bessie's early girlhood blighted by a painful spinal disease, but God had laid on her that sorest chastening of His hand—she was blind. Yet "there was always something pleasant," Bessie said.

Well, that was my text; and, to tell you the truth, my sermon began where our minister's usually leaves off, with a bit of application, and I told myself right heartily that it was a shame when Bessie was so easily pleased, and I could therefore, many a time, even with my limited capacity, give her little pleasures, I so seldom remembered to do it, and that it would be still more of a shame if, after this, I did not do better.

Just at first a great tide of pity swelled into my heart to think how barren of joy those lives must be in which such atoms of pleasure could be so eagerly picked up and made much of; yet it was not, I knew, the emptiness of their cups which had taught them so deeply to appreciate whatever drops of balm God let fall into them. The secret lies in the heart more than in the circumstances. If dear blind Bessie has the spiritual vision to see "something pleasant" in every day of her darkened life, I think you and I might almost envy her; at least we might learn of her. For it is so gloriously true, when one comes to think of it; there is "always something pleasant." I do not mean on those rare days of blessedness when "the cup runneth over," but on those we are apt to call dull, if not dreary. If, as we wake each day, we could take directly and fresh from God's hand the quick pulse of health with which we go forth to the day's labor, and the sight which revels in His wonderful blue sky and beautiful familiar daylight—in fact, every one of the common comforts of life, one by one, as they come to us, we would learn to feel that "His goodness is new every morning," while along the day's walk little blessings, like violets, will shed their sweetness on our way, and we will always meet their glad blue eyes when we stoop to look for them under the leaves. Even if the waking be one of pain, and languishing, and weariness, cannot you remember some time when

"An early flower, unasked, bestowed;
A light and cautious tread;
A voice to gentlest whispers hushed
To spare an aching head,"

has given you "something pleasant" to think about all day?

Once, after a very painful illness, I tried to note down the purely pleasant things of those weary days, and after filling three great pages, left off tired, not having told half; and another time I can remember being refreshed and helped through the slow watches of a fever-stricken night by just looking at a great white tea-rose glimmering in a tumbler in the windowsill, sent by a thoughtful friend. These are all little things, to be sure; but I think, if we oftener brought the magnifying-glass to bear upon our pleasures, and more seldom upon our trials, we would be happier, be and God would be more glorified. I very much doubt if any of us are as happy as we might be.

Even in lives left bare by some great desolation I think it is still true that there is "something pleasant." Do you not remember in the grand mountain, where riven rocks betrayed the footsteps of the storm, how the delicate ferns and pretty little wild flowers filled up the ghastly rents, and how tender mosses and lichens covered over the scars?

If God does not "shew forth His loving kindness in the day-time" then "He giveth songs in the night." "When God takes away the sunshine He giveth us the stars." The great secret is in being willing to be pleased with trifles when God has put the great joy out of our reach.

Yes, there is "always something pleasant," and God ever present in all, and through all, and above all, and the hope of heaven, like a day-star, giving us promise of a glorious dawn

One afternoon a teacher was returning, sick in heart and body, from a day of joyless work, and on her way she passed a little shop kept by an old negro woman, who was just then standing on the sidewalk arranging some of her wares, carrying on at the same time, in the easy, unembarrassed manner of her race, a religious conversation with some one inside. As the weary feet toiled slowly past, the aching heart caught just these homely words:

"De Massa mighty good to His suff'rin' people. Nebber min' honey, He'll gib you heben bymeby." But they healed the ache.—Exchange.

Going to Jesus.

"But I'm too little."

"Oh, no, because He says, 'Suffer little children to come unto Me.'"

"But that means when they die to come up to heaven."

"Oh, no; mamma says it means for us all to love Him, and pray to Him, and let Him see us love Him now."

"He's so far off maybe, He won't know anyhow."

"But it 'most frightens me to think of His looking away down from heaven every minute, and how can He hear when He is so far off?"

"God is not far off; He is ever near, taking care of us, putting pleasant thoughts in our minds, and helping us to do pleasant things."

"I am so little, I don't believe He sees me."

"Mamma says He sees the birds and fire-flies, and even watches over the flowers, and that He loves little children."

"I'm sure I don't know how to go to Him except by dying."

"Oh, no, you need not go out of this room, for He is here, and mamma says that going to Him is only giving ourselves to Him—giving Him our love."

Kitty's blue eyes were full of tears

"Jesus is so good and I am so bad."

"He loves you and me a great deal, and though He is so great, He is Jesus after all. He was a little child once, and had every kind of trouble, so that He can feel for little children."

"But, Florrie, I'm so bad; you don't know how bad I am sometimes, and aunt Harberger says, 'There is no place in the kingdom for such evil ones.' I upset her splatters yesterday night on the kitchen floor because I was careless and pouting, and let the tea-kettle go dry and crack, and swept the dirt into the corner instead of the dust-pan. I know I'm too bad and too small for Jesus to care about;" and Kitty's apron was held close to her eyes as she sobbed herself out of breath.

"Aunt Harberger is cross and cruel," thought Florrie, but she kept her thoughts to herself. "If I had aunt Harberger, instead of a dear mamma, who knows how bad I might be," and the thought made her sigh, wondering, as she did, if she had really gone to Jesus, or if she was only good because those around her were good.

"I'm always forgetting and upsetting; always making mistakes and making trouble; nothing but trouble have I brought to aunt Harberger. Do you thing that Jesus would ever care for me?"

"Mamma says He cares for the most wicked men and women in the world, and you are only a little girl trying to do right and getting wrong sometimes."

"If Jesus is close by and sees me every minute He knows how bad I am, and He can hear how often aunt Harberger tells about it. Oh, dear, if I could only find some place where Jesus did not come, but now He sees me all the time and what can he think?"

Florrie's face was very serious as she said, "Jesus came to save sinners; mamma says that knowing He sees us is the best thing in the world to help us to do right, because it stops us when we go to do wrong, and remember He is just close by."

"What are you crying for?" said aunt Harberger, popping her head in the door and thinking the little girl was complaining about her.

"Oh, nothing" said Florrie, blushing and looking down, "only we were talking about Jesus, and Kitty is crying because she cannot please you and Him better."

"Humph!" said aunt Harberger, hustling down stairs, the tears bubbling up in her eyes. "Humph!" and though it may seem odd, aunt Harberger, from that time, found no more "dirt in the corners," no more 'splatters spilled on purpose;' for the little girl, growing bigger and stronger every day to work, was also learning to remember that Jesus saw her, and that Jesus loved her through everything; and if aunt Harberger did not tell, as she had done before, fifty times a day, to the walls up stairs and down, and to the people in doors and out, what "a bad child that pesty Kitty Holcomb was," it was hard to say if it was altogether because she remembered the scene in the attic with Kitty crying over her bad ways, or altogether because Kitty without going further than her own trundle bed and her own little attic room, had found and given herself to Jesus.—Presbyterian Journal.

Foot-Lamps

Little Annie Waters sat thinking very deeply one Sunday afternoon, with an open Bible in her hand, from which she was studying her verse

"It is not hard, is it?" asked mamma, who had watched her for some time.

"Not hard to learn," replied Annie, "but I am wondering what it means." And she read the verse from the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "People don't have lamps to their feet do they, mother? I thought that lamps were always put up high, so that we can see better."

"Lamps guide the feet to walk in the right path, Annie. But I will tell you more about this at bedtime."

Annie dearly loved these little bedtime talks; and when her face and hands were washed and the little white night-dress was on, her mother lifted her up beside her at the open window, and said:

"Now look up, Annie, at the sky, and tell me what you see there."

"Why, I see the stars, mamma; O, so many of them! and so bright! And they look like lamps shining very far off."

"It would seem very strange to see stars shining and twinkling on the ground, would it not?"

"O yes, mamma! No one ever does see such a thing, do they?"

"They see what looks very much like it," replied Mrs. Waters; "and now I am going to tell you about the 'lamps to the feet.' In the Holy Land, where these words were written three thousand years ago, there is no gas in the streets, which are very dark and narrow; and the stranger in Jerusalem, who looks out of his lattice at night, will see what looks like little stars twinkling on the pavement; but they are really little lamps fastened to the feet of those who walk after dark; so that they may see where they are going. When the Psalmist makes use of this custom he speaks of walking in the way of God's commandments. And now, darling, I think you understand what the words mean?"

"Yes, mama," replied Annie in a satisfied tone, "I know now;" and she felt quite sure that she never would forget that verse.

Arsenic in the Household and School.

When somebody is accused of having dosed a fellow-mortal to death with arsenic, State authority and newspaper interest immediately vie with each other in their efforts for the protection of human life. Unfortunately, however, both are much less alive to other and far greater dangers arising from the reckless employment in the arts and manufactures, and the ignorant introduction into our households, of this same deadly poison. Its use in the preparation of pigments is very common, and the employment of these for coloring articles of attire and for the various styles of paper hangings is scarcely less so. Not only are those engaged in the manufacture of these coloring matters exposed to the deterious influence of the poison, but far larger numbers ignorantly purchase and use the articles containing it, and in a way that makes its action but little less virulent than the direct administration of the pure drug. Instances of this are constantly recurring in medical practice. Socks colored with compounds containing arsenic have produced disease of the feet; boots lined with flannel colored with Schnee's green have caused the death of their wearers; bright maroon-colored flannel worn next the skin, paper collars, neckties, hat-linings, gloves, artificial flowers, and even ladies' dresses, have all been the cause of disease from the presence of this poison. Its use for coloring wall paper, and especially the cheaper sorts, is almost universal; and while the greens are probably the worst of the lot, they are by no means the only ones containing arsenical pigments. A recent number of the Lancet gives an account of an aggravated case of poisoning due to a red paper on the walls of a sitting-room; and arsenic has also been found in white, gray, blue, mauve, and brown wall-paper in abundance. As an instance of the utter disregard of consequences shown by manufacturers in the use of these pigments, we may cite the statement published by Miss Osborne, of the Sydney Hospital New South Wales, that large quantities of poisonous pigments are consumed in that colony in coloring sweetmeats for children.—Popular Science Monthly.

Spanish Women.

I may here say that poets have pictured Seville belles as "dark-eyed angels." Like the proverb I quote above, there is more poetry than truth in this gushing expression. I never yet saw a dark-eyed angel portrayed by a painter, though there may be many of them ready to pose for that enviable position; and I have seen more beautiful women here with blue rather than black eyes. A sort of deep violet blue, with black fringes of lashes, are terribly fascinating eyes in Seville. You see the same type in parts of Ireland, and, by my troth, "beware, take care, there's danger there"—in those eyes. In the narrow streets here, you can look out the window and shake hands with your opposite neighbor without any undue physical effort, you see such eyes of unholy hue—deep, dark, and revengeful—that the poet prates about and calls the "carbon orbs"—fiery fellows! But the big streets, where you may jump across the trottoirs and get into the drawing room, stables and kitchen, all at one time and in one place, there are the violet-eyed belles with 'virgin smiles and sweetened soul"—whatever Byron means by that! Irregular, long, complicated, crooked and eel like streets here have eyes that the less said about the better. I mention these points in order to dispel the panegyrics of any poet who may have "on the stocks a gleaming, gushing brochure on Seville's silvery stream creamy streets, or dark-eyed belles." At Cadiz you are at once impressed with the smallness of the Cadiz ladies' feet, yet they are by no means as pretty or as expressive of grace and activity as those of the Baltimore belle. But the Cadiz charmer can beat us all hollow in smoking! How gracefully she handles and makes the cigarette, and how seductively she smokes it! The most radical anti-smoker would be converted here in less than an hour. The art and graces of 'uming are here charmingly studied "You smoke frequently?" I say to a "Weenus.' 'Oh, yes; always!" she archly replies, and puffs all the while. I find that before and after doing anything they resort to the balmy cigarette. It matters not whether it be pills or prayers, baptism or boluses, the smoke precedes or follows the ordeal. —Cor. Baltimore Sun.

Theories of Light and Color.

A good deal regarding light was known to the ancients. They knew the law of reflection and something of that of refraction, as shown by the reference of Seneca to the broken appearance of an oar when thrust into the water. Another phenomenon, that of the rainbow standing out in the sky as a sort of challenge to the human eye, could not escape detection. At one particular angle, as shown by Descartes, beams reflected by or emerging from a drop of rain were so welded together as to form a condensed sheath of rays, and it was in this condensed sheath that you saw the colors of the rainbow. Milton, in 1672, proved by the use of the prism, acted on by a beam of light thrown through an aperture in a window shutter into a dark room, that white light is not homogeneal, but is composed of various constituents more or less refrangible, of which red is the least and violet the most refrangible. This premised, Professor Tyndall, by a series of beautiful and interesting experiments from apparatus managed by his assistant, threw upon a white screen disks of several colors in order to prove the true effect of intermixture. Thus the ordinarily received theory that combination of yellow and blue produces green was shown to be erroneous, the true effect of the combination of those two colors being, as proved to ocular demonstration, white. By the same means the true complementary colors were displayed. Fixing the eye on a white disk until the lecturer counted twenty and the special illumination of the disk was withdrawn, the spectator saw remaining the filmy semblance of the complementary color, black. Blue left orange, red left green.—Prof. Tyndall at the Royal Institution.

Practical Science of the Spider.

A paragraph has been going the rounds of the papers that a spider recently suspended an unfortunate mouse—raising it up above the ground and leaving it to perish miserably between heaven and earth. Would-be philosophers have made great fun of this statement, and ridiculed it unmercifully. We know not how true it is, but we do know that it may be true. Some years ago, in the village of Havana, in the centre of this State, a spider entangled a mill snake in her threads and raised it some distance from the ground, and this too in spite of the struggles of the animal, which was alive. No doubt some wiseacres will deny the possibility of such a thing, and intimate that it has its foundation only in the mendacity of the relator, but it is true, nevertheless.

By what process of engineering does the comparatively small insect succeed in overcoming and lifting up, by mechanical means, the mouse or snake? The solution is easy enough if we only give the question a little thought.

The spider is furnished with one of the most efficient mechanical powers known to engineering, viz: a strong, elastic thread. That the thread is strong is well known. Indeed there are few substances which will support a greater strain than the silk of the silk-worm or the spider, careful experiment showing that for equal sizes the strength of these fibres exceeds that of common iron! But notwithstanding their strength, the spider's thread alone would be useless as a mechanical power if it were not for its elasticity. The spider has no blocks or pulleys, and therefore it cannot cause the thread to divide up and run in different directions, but the elasticity of the thread more than makes up for this, and renders possible the lifting of an animal much heavier than a mouse or a snake. This may require a little explanation.

Let us suppose a child who can lift a six pound weight one foot, and do this forty times a minute. Furnish him with 350 rubber bands, each capable of pulling six pounds through one foot when stretched. Let these bands be attached to a wooden platform on which stand a pair of horses weighing 2,100 lbs., or rather more than a ton. If now the child will go to work and stretch these rubber bands, singly, hooking each one up as it is stretched, in just ten minutes he will have raised the pair of horses one foot! In other words, the elasticity of the rubber bands enables the child to divide the weight of the horses into 350 pieces of six pounds each, and at the rate of a little less than one per second he lifts these separate pieces one foot!

Each spider's thread acts like the elastic rubber bands. Let us suppose that the mouse weighed half an ounce and that each thread is capable of supporting a grain and a half. The spider would have to connect the mouse with the point from which it was to be suspended with 150 threads, and if the little quadruped was once swung off his feet he would be powerless. By pulling successively on each thread and shortening it a little, the mouse or snake might be raised to any height within the capacity of the building or structure in which the work was done.—The Young Scientist.

The Sense of Space.

At a recent meeting of the French Society of Biology, M. Mathias Duval reported what he believed to be an important discovery in relation to the origin of the auditory nerve. He finds, in the course of his researches upon the origin of the cranial nerves, that the auditory nerve has two quite distinct roots, the posterior one proceeding from a nucleus, described by all authors, the other, anterior, proceeding from a nucleus for motor fibers. Some fibers of the anterior root turn back into the cerebellum Now, we know that the cerebellum is the centre for the co-ordination of movements. In associating this anatomical fact with the physiological researches of M De Cyon, upon the sense of space, and with some pathological facts, tending to prove that vertigo has for a cause a lesion of the semicircular canals, M. Duval concludes that the anterior root of the auditory nerve forms the nerve of space, of which the semicircular canals are the peripheric organs.—Scientific American

Prof. W. C. Kerr, Geologist, is in correspondence with a wealthy gentleman of Minneapolis, Minnesota, in regard to the grape and fruit culture in the Western part of the State. The party will visit the State soon, with the intention of making it his home. The Professor also has a letter from an eminent scientist of Philadelphia, asking him to make a tour of the mountains about the middle of June with a number of geologists and botanists.—Raleigh Observer.

Mr. W. A. Stanton, who recently succeeded Mr. Arthur Macy, as superintendent of the King's Mountain mine, was in the city yesterday afternoon, and brought with him 214 ounces of amalgam which is to be separated at the assay office. This was taken from a "cleaning up" after a run of 157 hours. The mine is now working 100 hands and is doing better than it has done for several years, a rich vein having recently been struck in the new works.—Charlotte Observer.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

ADDRESS OF HON. R. P. DICK.

DELIVERED AT THE COMMENCEMENT OF THOMASVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Hon. R. P. Dick is known to be one of the most learned and most impartial judges in our land. An accomplished scholar, an eloquent speaker, and without the slightest affectation, or any extravagance, he is a sincere Christian gentleman, who in social intercourse and in discharge of official duty, while perfectly easy and self-possessed, is kind and considerate towards others, and never departs from that true courtesy which springs from love of our fellow-beings. Those who were strangers to Judge Dick, expected from his reputation to hear an able and eloquent address, but the entertainment excelled all anticipation.

The speaker was very happily introdnced to the audience by President Reinhart, and began by expressing his regrets at the absence of Hon. A. M. Scales, who had been invited to deliver the address, but was detained by important duties in Congress.

He alluded to the advantages in our age and country, of such institutions, and, using a simile which he said had been employed by others, he described the Mississippi River, rising in or near British America, and flowing across our continent. First as a little stream, often with gathering strength, pouring its volume of waters through canons, and over falls and rapids, it spreads out as a vast channel of inland commerce, and after enriching alluvial plains, empties itself into the Gulf of Mexico and seems to be entirely lost. But it reappears between Florida and Cuba in the Gulf Stream, and sweeping northward moderates the climates of Labrador and Norway, benefits and blesses vast portions of the earth, and finally mingles with the waters of mighty ocean. In a similar manner he traced out the progress of man under the developments of intellect and improvements made from age to age, from the time when advantages were few, by successive steps, until it culminated in the civilization of Greece and Rome. He showed how progress had been checked and apparently lost in the obscurity of the dark ages, but later had reappeared with renewed force and power, under the improvement and culture of modern times, especially under the influences of Holy Scriptnre, freely circulated among the people until it reaches the developments enjoyed among ourselves, in the intelligence, civilization, refinement and piety with which mankind now are blessed.

THE BIBLE AS AN EDUCATOR OF THE RACE.

He spoke of the Bible as an educator, in matters which concern the health and safety of the physical life; also as an educator of the moral and spiritual life. After touching briefly but forcibly upon these topics, he said he would dwell chiefly npon the Bible as an Educator of the Mind.

The Bible, by a great many, was not regarded as a book to educate the mind. Many thought it was a great defect in the Bible that it was not a book of science, that the human mind in many departments of science was getting ahead of the Bible.

The learned speaker did not shrink from meeting objections fully and fairly. He drew the distinctions between science and art, and he showed how, according to the principles of induction, so ably defended by Bacon, from many experiments and much labor in the arts, love of the sciences had their origin. This was the case with the science of Metallurgy and others, which we could hardly expect to find developed in the Bible. That the Bible was not intended to set forth the Copernican system in astronomy; neither was it to be considered when using the simple language of ordinary speech, as arraying itself against the well-established truths of science. But he showed that the Bible was a great Book of Science. That any science for which, considering the purposes of Revelation, we have a right to look in it, would be found there in all due proportion.

Most eloquently he referred to the jurisprudence of the Bible and showed how the mighty science of law is indebted to the Bible, and was acknowledged so to be by profoundest jurists. It was to the Bible we must go for the sciences of ethnology and ethnography, and here he contended ably and eloquently for the unity of the human race. In the science of anthropology, he said, if we would have accurate information of the early ages, the Bible was the only book on which we could rely. The Bible was the foundation of ethics, and apart from the Bible there was no true moral science.

The grand science of Theology, the nature of Deity, and man's relation to God, was found no where but in the Bible, the source of all theology. He showed that the superiority of the Bible as history has manifested in its presenting the true characters of individuals, by bringing out minute incidents, and in withholding no information necessary to correct conclusions. That going back into periods when all else that claimed to be history was little more than fable tho Bible gave us an accurate history of the human race, and even briefly the history of creation.

He treated of the Bible as the source of hope. Nothing but the Bible taught man the future beyond the grave; without the Bible all was darkness there, but to the true believer hope founded on the Bible, presents a grand future of eternal love and holiness and joy. He compared the influences of Evolution with the teachings of Revelation, as to the past, the present, and the future of man. And contrasting the narrowness of the one with the richness of the other, he accompanied these details and the severe logic which the subjects required, with the very highest flights of eloquence. Passing to the richest science of geology, which he said, when rightly interpreted, gave its testimony to the truth of God's word, he gave a most graphic description of a terrific storm he had witnessed in our mountains, during which one of the grandest peaks, had for a while, been obscured, but when the storm abated, the same peak, as the sun shone forth again, stood out to view more grandly than before; so the storm by which some geologists were striving to obscure the Bible would pass away, and it would stand forth more sublimely than ever, the great Book of Books, the inspired Word of God.

This splendid oration of Judge Dick ought to be heard all over our land. Throughout it was sound in logic. It abounded in sublime imagery. The speaker caught inspiration from the highest human affections, from the scenes and the works of earth and of nature, from all that is lovely and grand, from flowers, and breezes, and streams, from starlight and sunshine, from mountains and oceans, from peace and war, from the transactions of Solomon the wisest man, from the flowing cadence of Isaiah, looking down into the future of the world and of the Church, and from the divine and holy life and labors of Him who stood alone on earth, God the Son and the Man Christ Jesus.

Amid exercises protracted though not tedious, Judge Dick spoke an hour and twenty-five minutes, carrying along with him the entire audience, almost breathless with attention, and leaving them with the conviction that it would be a happy time when any of them should listen to the like again. VISITOR.

THE MISSIONARY.

The General Assembly annually recommends that The Missionary be taken in every family. The Charleston injunction may be carried into execution if the ministers in North Carolina will on next Sabbath appoint certain parties to solicit subscriptions. Canvassers are needed. If anyone has not the money a friend can advance one dollar for four new subscribers. The officers who "rule well" or those who "serve tables" might lend efficient aid. How many ladies exclaim "O! I wish I could do more for the heathen." Get some one to give twenty-five cents for The Missionary and he will give more than this to Missions. New converts might here find opportunity to show their zeal. Dr. Wilson commended "many boys and girls who obtained new subscribers." Little friends help.

It is suggested that the Superintendents of Sabbath schools supply the classes with this journal. Is not the reading adapted? Is not youth the time to kindle the flames of love for those whom Jesus came to seek and to save?

The Missionary is the official organ of our Church for "the regions beyond." It represents the claims of the 800,000,000 heathen.

Its exchanges include every missionary journal in the English language. It is edited by the Senior Missionary Secretary in Christendom.

During the last few years its editorials have been the finest papers ever written on the science of Missions. H. C. D.

COME TO A HEAD.

Nearly every kind of evil runs its course and is then arrested and probably cured by a revolt against its recklessness. Whether combatted or not, if it succeeds in making headway, its inevitable tendency is toward excess, and just when men are despairing of its overthrow, its violence brings its end. It has often been so in the past that the current of some iniquity set in so strongly that men were powerless to restrain it. They could only look on as it carried everything before it, and in utter dismay confessing their weakness, appeal to God, who alone could give them deliverance. He heard their prayer, but often answered it differently from their desires. He let the crime go on till it overleaped itself, and then gave them victory.

A phase of the woman question was making such headway a few years since that it seemed as if society was about to be cursed with a kind of immorality such as the world had never seen before. Sensible men and women exposed the folly and shame of it only to be laughed at, and were told to stand aside to make room for the new reform, while many good people were so infatuated by the glamor of its success that they were ready to hail its progress and bid it God-speed. It came to a head after a time in an exposure that made the public conscience reel back mortified and staggered by the grossness of what they had once commended and taken to their hearts.

The same thing occurs with false doctrines and practices in the Church. If not overcome and effectively restrained by debate and discipline, they run their course until arrested at last by the inevitable revolt against their own aggressions. Men have bewailed a failing cause and looking upon the religious life of the world as almost spent and wasted, only to see, as if in a moment, a resurrection from the ruins of a sin that had wrought its own destruction. The truth cannot fail. Its dark days may be succeeded by darker ones, but when the darkest of all arrives, the light is not far distant, and it will soon break in brightness and beauty. If there are tendencies at work just now in the Church and characterizing the religion of the period that look disappointing and alarming, let them not discourage the Christian solicitude that watches their unhappy progress. The very worst that can happen from them is that they may hinder and delay the day of final triumph, for they will not follow those of a kindred kind that have gone before them to defeat and extinction.—United Presbyterian.

KEEPING ALIVE.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Being born is one thing—but keeping alive is another thing. Myriads of children who were born five years ago are lying under the white coverlet of the snow. Conversion is a birth into a new life through the power of the Holy Spirit. But not all the people who have been converted are now leading a strong, effective, happy, spiritual life. A fearfully large number of Christ's enrolled army are to-day in the hospital or else asleep under the baggage wagons. Some have deserted outright.

Two things are vital to the preservation of a healthy Christian life. The first of these is genuine prayer. Not the formal repetition of devout phrases every night and morning—which lulls the soul to sleep just as surely as a low crooning puts a child asleep in its crib. Genuine prayer is a very different thing. It is the soul's uplifted cry to the Infinitive love. It is the keeping of an open track to the throne, and maintaining a constant intercourse with God. Prayer establishes the same connection between my soul and God that the water-pipes in my house do between my household and the Ridgewood reservoir. Prayer is the conduct-pipe between me and my heavenly Father. It is the outlet upward for praise and penitential confession and petition for hourly help: it is the inlet through which the supplies of divine grace descend into the soul. When the heavenward channel is allowed to freeze up, I am in the same plight with the housekeeper who inquires, "How is it that the water does not run today?" The plumber comes and soon explains the difficulty. "Madam, your pipes are frozen up; the connection with the reservoir is stopped." Woe be to the Christian who has broken his connection with Jesus! And no surer reason can be given for the lack of conversions and spiritual growth in certain churches than the fact that their prayer-pipe is frozen up; there is not faith and fervor enough in their meetings to thaw out the ice.

A twofold office belongs to genuine prayer. It serves as the outlet of gratitude and the inlet of grace. We must thank God heartily for all he has given, and then we shall receive still more abundant gifts to be thankful for. Stinginess in praise brings scantiness of spiritual growth and blessings. Our prayers do not smell sufficiently of the sweet fragrance of thankfulness. For us ill-deserving sinners to be anywhere out of perdition is a matter for thanksgiving; but to be actually on the pathway of hope, with showers of blessings and the sunlight of promises streaming on us, is enough to make "our feet like hinds' feet," and our souls leap for joy. Inventory your mercies, brother! stop complaining, and throw on the altar a handful of frankincense, that the Lord may "smell the sweet savor" of our gratitude. "Father," said Molly, the little daughter of the Shepherd of Salisbury Plain, "I wish I was big enough to say grace at the table to-day, for I was thinking what must poor people do who have no salt to their potatoes; and look what a plenty of both we have got to-day."

Prayer is the inlet also, and when that channel is clogged, the starvation of piety begins. Every spiritual supply comes through this channel. Just as soon attempt to keep up a blooming and fruit-bearing piety without fervent prayer, as to get your geraniums into full flower by locking them up in the dust and darkness of a "Greenwood" vault. Backsliding is both the cause and the effect of a neglected closet. The first symptom of consumption in a church is a thin prayer-meeting. The mighty Christians have always been mighty in prayer. A certain mission school superintendent sent for Edward N. Kirk to preach to his ragged flock, and the whole night previous to Brother Kirk's coming was spent in wrestling prayer; the word was clothed next day with power. Piety is born in prayer; if it ever dies it is for the want of prayer.

The second essential to spiritual life was condensed by our Master into the short word "watch!" He know our weakness; and when he coupled prayer and watchfulness, he married the sovereignty of God to the believer's free agency. If we do our part God will do his. Never has there been a human heart that could be trusted without oversight, and a very close, wakeful, constant oversight. If you were set to keep a bird unfastened on the palm of your hand, you would realize what is meant by "keeping the heart with all diligence." You must have the arm of godly resolution ready to seize it the moment it attempts to fly off into sinful indulgence. Do not take off the eye, do not drop the hand one moment. We never know when the temptation is coming. Temper will start up like an unchained dog; lust will take fire at a stray spark; an unruly tongue may get loose; pride, covetousness, and other sins steal in with smooth face and under the cloak that hides their ugliness.

Vigilance is the price which every Christian must pay for being the servant and the heir of Christ Jesus. Watch for the sly approaches of the tempter! Watch for the return of the wretched "tramps," your besetting sins, whom you have so often ordered off your premises. They know every gate; look out! Watch the leadings of your Master. Watch the opportunities to do good. Blessed is that servant whom the divine messenger shall find watching! The most comprehensive hint that we can give for preserving your spiritual life is to use your knees in prayer, your eyes for watchfulness, your purses for benevolence, your tongues for faithful testimonies, and your whole heart and hands in constant work for the Saviour who has redeemed you from eternal death.—Christian Union.

"A SONG OF SOLACE."

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

Thou sweet hand of God, that so wounded my heart,
Thou makest me smile, while Thou mak'st me to smart;
It seems as if God were at ball-play—and I,
The harder He strikes me the higher I fly.

I own it: He bruised, He pierces me sore:
But the hammer and chisel afflict me no more.
Shall I tell you the reason? It is that I see
The Sculptor will carve out an angel for me.

I shrink from no suffering, how painful soe'r,
When once I can feel that my God's hand is there,
For soft on the anvil the iron shall glow
When the smith with his hammer deals blow upon blow.

God presses me hard, but He gives patience, too!
And I say to myself, "'Tis no more than my due;"
And no tone from the organ can swell on the breeze
Till the organist's fingers press down on the keys.

So come then, and welcome the blow and the pain,
Without them no mortal to heaven can attain;
For what can the sheaves on the barn floor avail,
Till the thresher shall beat out the chaff with his flail.

'Tis only a moment, and chastens with pain;
Joy follows on sorrow like sunshine on rain;
Then hear thou what God on thy spirit shall lay:
Be dumb, but when tempted to murmur, then pray.

NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Change, exercise, fresh air, diet, tonic—all these together will not cure any one who gives up and gives way to nervousness. The aim of the patient must be to disregard and even defy his sensations, impressions, languor, or whatever form his sufferings may take, and just go on as usual, doing all he can to forget self. Nervous people often rally wonderfully under pleasant excitement, sometimes even under sudden trial. They surprise their friends by their activity and endurance, and accomplish the otherwise impossible. Let us illustrate our meaning in one or two particulars. Suppose a patient so severely depressed that he can hardly be persuaded to move; he must try. Let him summon all his energy and self-command; let him walk round his garden, or fifty yards on the road to-day, and return satisfied that he can at least do so much. The next day let him go farther—twice round or more, a hundred yards along the road, and so on; daily increasing his self-appointed task, and daily proving to himself that he can do what he once thought or feared he could not do. The same principle applies to other efforts, according to the form of the malady. Persevere in resolute resistance to the difficulty, whatever it may be; and use each victory, or degree of victory, as a step towards further advances. No brooding over troubles and watching for symptoms. Giving up is fatal; resolution and hope gain the victory, with the help of Providence. And even as to fears, forebodings, and so forth, the same direction, in substance, will apply.

Not a few of the habits of modern life strain the nervous system considerably; hurry and excitement are far too prevalent. "Taking things coolly" should be at least endeavored by those who may have much in their work calculated to stimulate the mind or the feelings. Excess of any kind is constantly the parent of nervous depression. So too are exciting amusements, such as gambling. Too much novel reading is an unsuspected but often very powerful contributing cause. Overwork, alas! is one which it is not so easy to remedy as to denounce.

Little to earn, and many to keep, often strains the nerves and brain too heavily. What is sometimes ridiculed as "a hobby" is of the greatest use to hard-worked men: music, gardening, a lathe, even rabbits, or canaries will serve the purpose. The hobby should be readily accessible, and for most people inexpensive; but it should involve an entire change of thought and occupation, and be as little connected as possible with the individual's ordinary business or pursuit. A good hobby is often a wonderful relief to the overtaxed mind. Too little exercise and too much tea ruin the nerves of many a woman. Men often try theirs by indulging too freely in the use of tobacco. Young men and, above all, growing lads are very unwise if they employ tobacco at all. Their elders have more excuse; but the vigor of youth cannot require it, and certainly will not profit by it. The diabolical cruelty of frightening young children is almost certain to sow the seeds of nervous weakness; so does harsh treatment in later childhood. And over-driving and harrassing young lads and girls, whether at books or work, all tend in the same direction. Competitive examinations have to answer for some cases of enfeebled nerves.

Simple habits, moderation in all things, cheerful amusements or pastimes, and reasonable care, will go far to prevent nervousness. But when, through ignorance, indiscretion, hereditary tendency, or affliction, it has been developed, the sufferer will do well to give all heed to the foregoing hints and to take for his motto—Hope on, hope ever.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS.

The early Christians lacked many privileges and advantages that we enjoy. They had no printed books. They worshipped God in dens and caves and upper-chambers, had few and simple ecclesiastical garments, and often received the Lord's supper in vessels of wood, and not of silver or gold. They had little money, no church endowments, and no universities. Their creeds were short. Their theological definitions were scanty and few. But what they knew they knew well. They were men of one Book. They knew whom they believed. If they had wooden communion vessels, they had golden ministers and teachers. They "looked unto Jesus," and realized intensely the personality of Jesus. For Jesus they lived, and worked, and died. And what are we doing? And where are we in the nineteenth century? And what deliverance are we working on earth? With all our countless advantages, our grand old cathedrals, our splendid libraries, our accurate definitions, our elaborate liturgies, our civil liberty, our religious societies, our numerous facilities, we may well doubt whether we are making such a mark on the world as Clement and Justin Martyr and their companions made 1700 years ago.

I know we cannot put the clock back and return to the A B C of early Christianity. But one thing we can do: We can grasp more firmly the grand old primeval principle around which our modern Christianity has clustered and swelled, and grown to its present proportions. Such a principle is that laid down in our text, "Looking unto Jesus." Then let us covenant with ourselves that for the time to come we will try to run our race, fight our battles, fill our position, serve our generation, like men who are ever "Looking unto Jesus." So looking while we live, we shall see face to face when we die. We shall joyfully exchange faith for sight, see as we have been seen, and know as we have been known.—Bishop Ryle, on Heb. xii.:2.

THE NUN OF JONARRE.

The language of the second commandment, "showing mercy to the thousands of them that love," etc., is read by eminent scholars, "showing mercy unto the thousandth generation of them that love me." As in the instance of Abraham and his posterity, that promise of long earthly blessing on parental piety has often been seen fulfilled.

One of the dukes of Montpensier had a daughter named Charlotte, whom he obliged to enter a nunnery at the early age of thirteen. This sacrifice of her fresh young life was against her mother's wishes, and against her own. But her mothers pure and godly influence and faithful lessons had taught her a submissive christian spirit rather than the spirit of rebellion, and in time she became more reconciled to the cold and constrained religious life marked out for her. She practiced dutifully and meekly all the austerities and requirements of her order, and was rapidly promoted. When still very young she was made Lady Abbess of the Convent of Jonarre, in Normandy. Years rolled on, and as the Protestant Reformation spread, some of the Protestant books and tracts, in one quiet way and another, gained entrance to the convent. They were forbidden things, but their reading brought new light and joy to the gentle-hearted Charlotte of Bourbon. Situated as she was, she could only give thanks in secret, and teach to her nuns the blessed faith and truth that had come to her own soul. It was the same truth that she had heard from her now sainted mother, and the dear childhood instructions, so revived, confirmed her conviction that she was right. Henceforth she would rely on Christ alone. Before long a way to liberty and larger duty was divinely opened to her. The Huguenots in their memorable struggle in France gained some successes, and in the course of the war the Convent of Jonarro was broken up, and the nuns were forced to flee. The Lady Abbess escaped in disguise to Heidelberg, and joined the cause of the reformers. Victorious Holland offered a safer refuge, and there she became the wife of William, Prince of Orange, and (by the marriage of one of her daughters in Germany) the great grandmother of Sophia, Duchess of Brunswick.

Those who have well studied English history know that the present Queen of England is the head of "the House of Brunswick." She is the direct descendant of the pious nun of Jonarre.—The Watchman.

THE DAWN OF DAY.

A traveller among the mountains of Asia Minor, who had pitched his tent not very far from the birthplace of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, in the Province of Cilicia, was surprised the other day, as he narrates, by a poor, ignorant, Turkish woman coming up to his tent door, and asking him if it was true that the day of judgment was near. "On questioning her," he writes, "as to her reason for making such an inquiry, I found that she had heard the villagers, especially the leading men, express the opinion that the last days of Islamism had come, and that the whole world is about to be judged for its wickedness. To-day," he goes on to say, "I have had a long conversation with a Turkish cadi, or judge, the drift of whose conversation took the same direction. These two persons represent the extremes of society among the Turks, yet they are agreed as to the decadence and probable collapse of the Turkish power. A large majority of the Turks are despondent. Their despondency is rather increased than otherwise by seeing their Christian neighbors hopeful, and increasing in prosperity. The recent changes in the condition of the Christians in Asia Minor have been so small that it is not easy to see on what grounds they are so hopeful; yet that they are hopeful and actuated by new energy, is evident to the most casual observer. I can compare their present appearance and bearing to nothing so well as to men who find themselves recovering from certain disease—fever, for example. As strength recovers, and healthy blood begins to flow through the system, we know well how such men are stirred with new hopes and earnest desires to go about their work; this is the precise condition of the Christian races in this part of the Turkish Empire. Centuries of subjection to the authority of the Moslems have not utterly crushed them; their hopes are reviving; and they are looking in all directions to see what they can do to prepare themselves and their children for the new era that seems to be dawning upon them. It is interesting and encouraging to see how anxious men are, among the Christians, to send their sons and daughters to the best schools in the country."

SCIENCE VS. SCIENCE.

A recent issue of the Christian Intelligencer contained the following resume of a lecture just then delivered by Prof. Fairfield, of New York, on a subject of much interest, the foundation, indeed, of the evolution theory:

It seldom happens that a paper is presented in this city so thoroughly scientific, as that read in the latter part of last month, before a select company of gentlemen, by Mr. F G. Fairfield, Professor of Microscopy and Microchemistry in the New York College of Veterinary Surgeons; and seldom has so formidable an assault been made upon the speculations of the evolutionists. The gist of Professor Fairfield's treatise is that the lowest forms of life are not, as the evolutionists declare, the progenitors of higher forms evolving still higher until man is reached, but are simply and only the products of tissue dissolution, or, in plain words, of corruption, of the decay of animal and vegetable tissues and secretions. They are simply that and nothing more. They are never creatures out of whom something better comes, but only a provision for the transmutation of decaying matter into something odorless and not poisonous, or for the removal of such matter altogether. They are not spontaneously generated in dissolving matter, but exist in the higher forms of living matter, and are found in perspiration, in saliva, in the vapor of respiration, and in the mucous secretions. Professor Fairfield did not say, but we do, that they are the divine provision for the transformation and removal of corruption. This is sterling common sense, agrees with every man's observation, and is established by Professor Fairfield, by hundreds of experiments, as a scientific fact.

To use the terms of natural science—Professor Fairfield claims to have proved that the monads, the bacteria, the amœba, the monera, upon which Huxley and Haeckel base their theories, are only the products of tissue changes and decomposition. This he proves by the results of an almost endless series of chemical experiments and microscopic examinations. If this gentleman is right, and there is the strongest presumption that he is, the foundation of evolution is annihilated.

The paper also attacked the cell theory, and denied that what are called cells by the evolutionists are such in structure, in mode of origin, in chemical composition, or in properties and capacities. This also Professor Fairfield sustains by the results of many experiments. Besides this, the treatise denies in the strongest terms that microscopic research has found any indication of an evolution of living out of inorganic matter. The distinction between the forms is broad and plain, and investigation in this field "has rendered the doctrine of evolution scientifically untenable." Professor Fairfield said: "There is no present possibility of reconciling the opposition of processes that exist between the two forms of matter; and he who fails to see the fatality of the objection, fails to see the force of a fact which the microscope has established and which is probably final.—Herald and Presbyter.

UNCONGENIAL.

Said Dr. Cuyler: "You can't grow healthy, young christians in the foul air of social dissipation! Midnight parties, operas, Germans and whist clubs, do not suit Christ's plants of grace, any better than Labrador ice fields suit orange trees. A christian cannot keep all the habits of a worldling without killing his piety. Come out and be separate, means something more than to take the communion seat a half-dozen times a year.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

In every debate, whether in the newspapers or in some place else, the man who does most for the truth is the best—that is the most Christian in spirit. It may so happen that one man who is violent and uncharitable, and even abusive, will be on the right side, and he able in his arguments and powerful in his reasoning, while his opponent of good temper will be upholding error. But the average audience will forget the logic, and claim for the latter the praise of being the better representative of the Gospel. It is possible to be intellectually right and spiritually at fault, and vice versa; and the first great thing, therefore, that any one who will contend for the faith ought to do is to put himself in close communion with God and make his heart right, as it shall be filled with the spirit of the Master. There is no more discouraging thing than to see a man of a turbulent, unchastened soul seeking to maintain the truth of the Scriptures against one who, whatever his errors may be, has yet assimilated himself to the love that breathes from Cavalry.—United Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Arangements have been made at St. Helier's, Jersey, for the residence of a religious sisterhood from France. It is said the members are all vegetarians, and an extensive garden ground is to be devoted to cultivating what they require.

The Church of Scotland expended during last year, on Foreign Missions, the sum of £20,164 6s. 6d. It has eight different mission centres, of which six are in India, one in China, and one in East Africa. On its Colonial work the same Church expended £9,013, while on its Jewish mission the expenditure was £5,885.

After examining the evidence forwarded to Rome with regard to the apparitions and manifestations at Knock, the Pope has expressed a strong opinion of their authenticity. It is probable, however, that a number of distinguished Irish ecclesiastics will be instructed further to investigate the matter, and then report their opinion on the subject. The Pope has had his attention much called to the Protestant accusations and objections to which certain modern miracles have given rise, and also to the reasons there are for asserting that in some of the cases speculation of a very base sort has been mingled with, if it has not altogether taken the place of fanaticism.

Much attention is now given in Paris to meetings for children, where religious truth is presented to them in an attractive manner. Children's meetings on Thursdays and Sundays are held in various parts of the city under the special charge of Pastor Paul Cook, and are attended by large numbers of the gamins of Paris.

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Quebec has done a very sensible thing. He has issued a pastoral letter to the clergy of his diocese, condemning trades-unions, and declaring that any Roman Catholic who in a trade dispute assaults a fellow-workman because he is a non-unionist shall be excommunicated.

Cardinal Manning is expected to leave Rome for London this week. It is believed that his mission to the Eternal City has failed. "His views," writes a correspondent, "respecting the increased independence on the Propaganda which it is expedient to confer on the 'Supreme' ruler of the English Catholic Church are not shared at the Vatican, and words might be cited to indicate that the characteristic tendencies of the Cardinal which lead him to think such independence desirable are not so judged at the Vatican as to have contributed to increase the esteem and personal liking felt there for his Eminence."

Trouble has arisen in the Gallican Catholic Church established at Paris in the Rue Rochouart by Hyacinthe, whose vicar, the Abbe Bichery, has withdrawn from the organization. It appears that on Palm Sunday Father Hyacinte affixed to the door of his church a placard indicating that he and his congregation were henceforth to be under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Edinburgh, as his church, from being Gallican, had become Anglican. This gave rise to great agitation among the faithful, and the vicar openly broke with a man whom he could no longer recognize as the head of the Old Catholics. The difficulty is to be settled in the courts.

Quite a little crisis is imminent in the history of Protestant missions in Spain. Cabrera, formerly a priest, embraced Protestantism in 1861 at Gibraltar, and was, one year later, installed as pastor, under the auspices of the Scotch Presbyterian Society. In 1868 he was called to Seville, and in 1874 to Madrid, to succeed the lamented Carrasco. Last year the Scotch Society reduced the appropriation for the support of Cabrera from $1,500 to $900. Feeling aggrieved, Cabrera determined to relieve his church from the patronage of that Society, and turned to the English Episcopal Committee. Last February he published a pamphlet, proposing to the young Spanish churches that they organize on the model of the Episcopal churches of the United States; and in March he met at Seville the four Spanish pastors who depend on the Episcopal Committee, and also Bishop Riley the American Bishop of the Mexican Episcopal Church, and was by them elected "the first bishop" of Spain. He now proposes to erect in Madrid a beautiful Protestant cathedral, and to organize his diocese under the patronage of the wealthy and powerful Anglican Church.

JOHN McLAURIN - Editor

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1880.

EDWARD HARRIS.

Edward Harris was named at his birth Moses Titcomb Harris, by which name he was known until after he had reached manhood, and had left the Seminary. By this latter name he is designated in its catalogues. He subsequently obtained a change of name by legislative enactment.

Mr. Harris was born in Philadelphia, November 1, 1797, and was a son of John and Elizabeth (Titcomb) Harris. His father was a ruling elder, and his mother a member of the Second Presbyterian church in that city. He pursued his academical studies partly at Portland, Me., and partly at Washington, Ky. He was never graduated from any collegiate institution. He was received on a public profession of his faith into the Congregational Church of Portland, Me., under the care of the Rev. Edward Payson, D. D., at about seventeen years of age, and while a law-student in that city. He entered Princeton Seminary in the fall of 1819, took the full course of three years, and was regularly graduated in 1822. While in the Seminary he also mastered a part of the college course.

Mr. Harris was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, October 16, 1822. For a year thereafter he served the church at Salem, N. J. The next winter he was a missionary in Luzerne county, Pa., and afterward, in 1824, on Long Island; in 1827 in Kennebec county, Me., and in 1828 again on Long Island.

In the summer of 1830 he was called to be pastor of the Congregational church of Alna, Lincoln county, Me., and was ordained and installed there by an ecclesiastical council, September 29, 1830. He was released from this charge June 27, 1832. He was installed pastor of the Congregational church at Hebron, Conn., January 29, 1834, and was released therefrom January 7, 1835. From 1835 to 1837 he was stated supply of Windham Congregational church, Conn., and subsequently supplied several other churches for brief periods. From April 1857, to August 1858, he supplied the church of Newbern, N. C., during its pastor's absence in Europe; and in the winter of 1858-'9, was assistant editor of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN. After this date he preached irregularly and occasionally, being settled nowhere. His course in the ministry was unique. For fifty years after his licensure, he preached eighty times a year, travelled 2,500 miles a year, and received for his ministerial services less than one hundred dollars a year in money. In the course of his ministry, he edited several volumes for the press, wrote several tracts, and contributed largely to several religious periodicals.

Mr. Harris was never married. His mental powers, which were originally excellent failed during the latter years of his life, and he became thoroughly demented. For the last two years he was carefully nursed and tended in the hospitable home of his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Kimhall, at Newburyport, Mass. There he died on Sabbath, September 14th, 1879, in the eighty-second year of his age. His remains were buried in Oak Hill Cemetery at Newburyport. He was a man of rare integrity, conscientiousness and fidelity to religious principle.

SPIRITUAL DYSPEPSIA.

Good health is a precious boon, often too lightly valued. It is an important factor in the world's work and progress. Strong digestion, nerves, and frame, united to sound minds, give great power. Vigorous, stern, and firm views issue from rugged men; as when the old Scotch chieftain, McDonald of Keppoch, camping out with part of his clan, kicked from under his son's head the bundle of snow he had rolled up for his pillow, declaring that "the young rascal, by his degenerate effeminacy, would bring disgrace on the clan." Muscle and rowdyism are not synonymous. Brawn and brains have intimate relationship. The nervous system—wonderful telegraphic world of sympathetic power—is closely connected with the stomach, healthful digestion, and good aeration of the blood in the lungs. Blood must be vitalized by full oxygenation, and all the system well balanced and supported. Dr. James W. Alexander, when asked if he enjoyed full assurance of faith, said, "I think I do, except when the wind is from the East." Cicero became a victim to the fearful train of maladies that are born of dyspepsia. What did he do? Fled at once to Greece to the gymnasium; put himself under strict regimen for two full years, and then returned to Rome with body and brawn equal to any of his field hands. Can we wonder at his beautiful periods, or the crushing oratory that overwhelmed Catiline, and annihilated Pompey?

If spiritual life be gloomy, and we be tossed by fears, let the body be watched; secure its health as far as possible. Physical maladies plant their gloom, weakness, moroseness, and crookedness of every sort, in the soul. What dreadful imaginings of utter loss of interest in Christ! What darkening of hope! What faintness of faith! What murmurings! What coldness in prayer and lack of relish for divine things! The blessedness once known gone, gone forever! Oh, who does not pity the spiritual dyspeptic!

Yet no mere arrest of health necessarily arrests holy life in its vigor and comfort, anymore that it necessarily stunts activity in worldly enterprise. Julius Cæsar suffered from epilepsy, and was always thrown into fits by planning a great battle. In 1693, in Belgium, 120,000 soldiers of Europe's proudest nations were marshalled and fought by the fiery pupil of Conde, the hunchbacked dwarf, Duc De Luxembourg of France, and the famous warrior and statesman, William III., Prince of Orange and King of England, who was an asthmatic skeleton, and who with wonderful skill covered the slow retreat of England, Pascal, Baxter, Calvin, and Dr. Samuel Johnson were all feeble men, but they did great things for their Lord.

Spiritual dyspepsia may exist, on the other hand, separated from bodily disease. Improper food, disordered digestion, and want of exercise are fruitful causes of soul troubles. Now Christ is the Bread of Life. We must feed on Him continually by faith. How? Receive Him lovingly in the heart, and rest on Him alone. Communion with the Saviour brightens the life. That communion is had through quiet meditation, study of the Word, and the prayer of faith, and active work for the Master. The precepts, promises, exhortations, examples and warnings of the Scriptures build up spiritual life, and drive away clouds of anxiety, and the droppings of fitful apprehensions. Let the heart be opened to the healthful guidance of the Holy Spirit, and soon all sorrow and sighing will flee away, and the revived Christian will feel, though the earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, I will not fear, for I have a building of God awaiting me, and a precious Friend and glorious Redeemer.

BRITISH POLITICS.

Mr. Gladstone is undoubtedly surrounded and involved in difficulties which will try his statesmanship to the very utmost. He has indeed been called to the leadership by such a majority as unmistakably indicates the entire confidence of the people; but public opinion, especially such public opinion as is the result of passionate appeal is always variable. Indeed, by appointing Lord Ripon, a bitter Roman Catholic and renegade from Protestantism, to the vice-royalty of India, Mr. Gladstone has called down upon himself the indignation of a very powerful part of those who secured his elevation.

We cannot comprehend just what and how great are the difficulties encountered in British politics, because they are of a nature so unlike those which beset us. In political contests there is at least as much enthusiasm and partizan hate engendered in Britain as in this country, which is surprising when we reflect that in Great Britain occupancy of the political offices (barring a very few of the highest) is not changed.

The great questions which engross British politicians and people are Home Rule, Land Tenure and Disestablishment. True there are question affecting the finances, and those regarding the relations of England to foreign countries which none but a statesman can grasp, but the questions specified are those which loom up into first importance. So little are these questions understood in this country that we lay before our readers a very clear explanation of Home Rule, from the Christian Union, and may follow with a definition of the other problems hereafter:

"Home Rule has suffered from disrepute brought upon it by the loud-mouthed demagogism of its advocates; but Home Rule is simply local self-government. Great Britain is an Empire consisting, apart from its colonies, of four States—England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland. The original races and languages were different; their dialects, their local interests and their religious beliefs and customs still differ. At present the whole affairs of this people are administered by one Parliament sitting at London. Whether the taxes paid by the people of Ireland for the relief of the poor may be partly appropriated to procuring seed for the coming season, whether out-door relief may be granted to the famine stricken, and on what conditions, whether liquor may be sold and at what hours in the cities of Cork and Dublin, whether a street railroad may be established in Belfast or Glasgow, whether gas works may be provided for Bristol and Yarmouth—these and an unlimited number of local questions, which only the people of the locality are competent to solve, have all to be settled by a National Parliament. Every private bill for Ireland, Scotland, England, Wales, every legislative act rising to the dignity of a law, every regulation that is more than merely municipal or provincial comes before the Parliament. It is as if our United States Congress had, in addition to their present duties, to legislate for half a dozen States and a score or more of cities; only to make the parallel complete the States should be peopled by men of different races, customs and religious faiths. The English Parliament is wholly incompetent to such a task; confessedly incompetent. The Scottish members long since formed a little parliament of their own. A Scotch caucus meets and agrees on measures to be commended to the House of Commons, and the House generally adopts its conclusions without the delay of debate; a curiously roundabout way of securing Home Rule for Scotland with a Scotch Legislature meeting in London.

Another anomaly, as it seems to Americans, adds to the complications of the English system. England has colonies which are integral parts of her empire. These colonies possess their own parliaments, but they have no representation in the English Parliament. As respects local self-government Canada is as independent as New York State; but as respects great national questions she has no voice except that which is afforded by her press. The Canadian fishery question is settled in London; and Canada has no representative in the English Parliament to call the government to account either for a failure to settle it or for a settlement adverse to her interests. Thus the English Empire consists of two kinds of States, one of which has no local self-government, the other of which has no representation in the national body. Imagine the Atlantic States without legislatures and governed directly by Congress, as is the District of Columbia; imagine the Pacific States possessing legislatures, but with no representatives or senators in Congress, and the reader will have a conception of the anomaly which Home Rule proposes to remedy by the establishment of local legislative bodies for England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, and the admission of members into Parliament from the Canadas and Australia. The instant demand is for local self-government for Ireland; but this is instant only because the Irish have suffered most obviously and seriously from the denial of their right to it.

The remedy—on paper—is easy enough. But to determine, beforehand, what subjects belong to the local and what to the national legislative body, to meet courageously the senseless clamor against "dismemberment of the Empire" and to consider wisely and provide efficiently against the real dangers of disintegration, to lighten the responsibilities of the English Parliament without weakening its just authority, and to create local parliaments without intensifying provincial pride prejudice, requires the clearest prophetic vision combined with the soundest practical good sense—in a word, the supremest statecraft. The policy of inaction has been tried and failed; the difficult duty of action devolves upon the new administration."

DEATH OF REV. B. F. THOMPSON.

The Missionary for June came to us with a cheering letter from Rev. Ballard F. Thompson, Pernambuco, Brazil, saying that "the attendance at church is very good, and that there are many who are considering the question of applying for admission to the Church." Yet before we had opened the Missionary, a passing brother brought us word of his death. He died in Pernambuco, Brazil, April 27th, of malarial intermittent fever. Very sad is the news. He left a delightful pastoral charge in Middle Tennessee and sailed for Brazil, only a few months ago. Full of piety and zeal, he threw himself heartily into the work, and the heart of Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, who had labored so long in that city alone (specially since the illness and death of his former co-laborer, the Rev. William LeConte,) was greatly cheered and greatly strengthened. And thus early the earthly work of our brother is ended. We can only bow in sorrow to the stroke, remembering that the Lord's ways are not as our ways, but vastly higher and wiser. As the heavens are higher than the earth so are His ways higher than our ways. In our eyes it is a heavy, serious loss; in His infinite eternal vision, it is a great benefit to His work. And while the Church must deeply mourn his loss, we can find comfort only in the thought that our Heavenly Father, who loves us with infinite love, in His wisdom and love has planned it thus.

There was true bravery in the course of our departed brother. He had carefully studied the prospects of health for himself in the Brazilian field, and was aware that in going he underwent the risk of more or less suffering from the climate. But under the conviction that duty called, he went to his post. The Lord has spared him from the suffering which he feared. And if his days were in God's wisdom to be few on earth, how much happier to be found at death in the brave discharge of duty than in any other place!

In Union Theological Seminary he was esteemed as a leading man, a hard student and one of the best Hebrew students there. As a pastor in Tennessee he won all hearts by his faithfulness and acceptability in the family circle. He was pre-eminently a man of prayer.—Christian Observer.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Thanks for an invitation to the Musical Entertainment at the school of the Misses Nash and Miss Kollock.

We do not say that we will publish all communications that come to us accompanied with responsible names—far from it; but it has become necessary to say that without regard to merit or demerit, articles not so accompanied must be excluded from our columns.

A lad once stepped into our office in search of a situation. He was asked:

"Are you not now employed?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then why do you wish to change?"

"Oh, I want an easy place!"

We hadn't the place for him. No one wants boy or man who is seeking an easy place; yet just here is the difficulty with thousands.

Will the boys let us advise them? Go in for the hard places: bend yourself to the task of showing how much you can do. Make yourself serviceable to your employer at whatever cost of personal ease, and when the easy places are to be had they will be yours. Life is toilsome at best, to most of us, but easy places are at the end not at the beginning of life's course. They are to be won, not accepted.

From the Richmond Dispatch we copy the following account of a narrow escape of Dr. Hoge from drowning:

"We learn by a letter from one of the party that Rev. Dr. M. D. Hoge met with an accident while traveling in the land of Palestine which nearly resulted in the loss of his life. While travelling along the seacoast between Tyre and Sidon they came to the mouth of the Litany river, which empties into the sea about midway between Tyre and Sidon. Dr. Hoge being in advance of his party, accompanied by Mr. T. William Pemberton, attempted to ford this river on horseback. After having entered the stream the attention of his companion was called to the fact that a large sail-boat had passed up the stream, which caused him to think it was too deep for fording. He called to Dr. Hoge to stop, but just then his horse stepped over the precipitous bed of the river and plunged into the rapid stream. With wonderful presence of mind Dr. Hoge turned his horse's head up the stream, and after battling awhile with the torrent succeeded in urging him up the height, and they were saved. It was a trying moment to his companions and friends, who were compelled to watch the issue without any power to assist in rescuing him. The escape was truly a providential one, for a few feet further into the stream and no human hand could have prevented horse and rider from being swept out to sea. Dr. Hoge and Mr. and Mrs. T. William Pemberton arrived safely in Hamburg, Germany, on Thursday last, all well.

Rev. Dr. J. L. Burrows is a man of very hard, clear, firm and solid sense. Whether one agrees with him or not, it is right hard to see where he is in error. We let our readers try their skill on the following on the subject of Home Missions before the Southern Baptist Convention:

"Dr. Burrows gave us seven reasons why our contributions were so small. It is not now as it was fifty years ago, that the churches hold erroneous views on the subject of giving. It is not on account of the poverty of our people, nor is it from any characteristic penuriousness of the Southern people. We are often too extravagant and liberal, as well as hospitable. Nor is it for want of piety. Larger numbers of Southern people are pious, orthodox and evangelical than are the citizens of any other section. Nor is it for want of culture and piety among our ministry. Some of them are unlearned, but even these farmer-preachers have done great good. Still there are tens of thousands of our people who are never asked to do anything, and never give anything. But it is from the fact that we have suffered ourselves to glide into an unscriptural church polity of once-a-month preaching. Our possibilities are in our country churches, and they are doing nothing. They meet for instruction and worship but once a month. Who would undertake to build up a strong church with twelve sermons a year? No man could do this, even though he possessed the learning of Paul and the eloquence of Apollos. The Campbellites have made an improvement by meeting together every Lord's day preacher or no preacher. Some of our churches are weaker now than they were forty years ago. Without settled pastors, we shall continue as we are. This must ever remain so as long as the circuit riding system in preaching in our churches is continued. Only one in thirty of our churches have settled, home pastors. Yet this small number of churches give over three-fourths of all that is contributed. Only trained acrobats can ride four horses at once.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

LITTLETON CHURCH, ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

At the April meeting, one young lady was was received to the communion of Littleton church, and baptized. At the June meeting, a family of husband and wife and two children were received. Two young men are applicants.

WHITE PLAINS, WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

Dear Brother McLaurin: We received two members recently at White Plains, making six in all that have been received during the last month, on examination. The Lord has blessed us much at White Plains. We have a large and prosperous Sabbath School with working teachers. Our young people love to attend both the Sabbath School and the church. PASTOR.

Rev. R. B. McAlpine, pastor elect of the Presbyterian church of Goldsboro, was married in Selma, Ala., on the 2nd of June inst., to Miss M. E. Craig, of that city. Rev. Dr. T. W. Hooper was assisted in the ceremonies by Rev. Dr. Raymond.

From the Raleigh Post we clip the following respecting the Sunday School of the North Carolina Penitentiary: "The Sunday School at the Penitentiary, under the efficient management of A. M. McPheeters, Esq., and his corps of hard working teachers, is becoming more and more interesting and prosperous. The prisoners, we are pleased to note, manifest great interest in the exercises, and many of them are very serious on the subject of religion. The lesson Sunday was "the crucifixion." This theme, always calculated to move the heart, appeared to have had deeper and more pungent influence upon the hearts and consciences of those set in the darkness of prison cells. While the teachers were endeavoring to present Jesus as even the prisoner's personal Saviour, many honest tears of repentance were seen here and there. A great and good work, through the aid and influence of the Holy Spirit, is being done for these miserable people."

The Evening Post of Raleigh, N. C, speaks thus of the Second Presbyterian church of that city:

"To-morrow, Sabbath, June 13th this beautiful little church will, for the first time, be used by the congregation. The completion of this building has been effected under many difficulties and trials—the members of the church preferring to pay as they went, and now that the structure is about completed "it is finished" and unencumbered. Dr. Atkinson, the greatly beloved and eloquent pastor of this church, will preach at 11 a. m. and 5 p. m. to-morrow."

The Raleigh Observer of June 12th, says:

"This church will be completed to-day, and to-morrow will first be used as a house of worship. It is situated at the intersection of Blount and Johnson streets, in one of the most beautiful portions of the city. The building was begun early in 1879, and the work has slowly but steadily gone forward until now. The edifice is of wood, with deep basement walls of brick. At one of the angles rises a beautifully proportioned spire about one hundred feet in height. The line of the building is also broken by projections here and there. There are three entrances to the church, at each of which are massive steps. The building is about thirty-five feet in width, and some seventy feet in depth. On entering, the effect of the interior is though rather sombre, pleasing. The colors used give the effect of dark oak. The walls are paneled high, and the windows are pointed with ground glass panes. The pulpit is in a deep recess. Over the front entrance is the gallery which only runs at the end, and not at the sides of the building. In the front is a triple window of stained glass, the gift of Christ's church to the congregation. The seats are arranged in two rows, with a centre aisle and two side aisles. The pulpit and chairs are of rich walnut. Friends of the church have generously donated a carpet of handsome pattern, a Bible, tables, and other things necessary.

The contract for the work was taken by Messrs. Kingsley & Ashley, who have done their work well. The cost, first and last, has been some $4,000. Through the generous aid of friends here and elsewhere the congregation has been greatly helped in its efforts to secure a place of worship. The church will take its place among the handsomest and most convenient wooden structures in the State."

COMMUNION AT CASTANEA.

How dear is the quiet country church—with its rude architecture, its unpainted pine pews, its forest surroundings and its forest sonnets, so musical with breezes and birds and cicadas. And dearer still are the inmates of to-day—this holy communion May Sabbath of the rural church. The beloved old pastor, laid aside from active "labor in word and doctrine," and waiting with patient hope for his heavenly Father's call—the young pastor with his earnest face and earnest voice; and the invited pastor of another church, who is to preach the morning sermon, and many others. How the memories of a life time rush upon one on an occasion like this! For thirty years I have worshiped in a town church with a town organ and town choir; and there I have passed through the storms and the calms of varied fortune—and there ever found rest and comfort and joy from above. But never did my own, or any other city church stir my heart's depths like this sanctuary in the forest. The minister who stands in the pulpit I remember as a fair-haired child—his own children now older than I was then. How fervid yet how quiet his tones—how logical, how scriptural, how full of gospel sweetness his sermon. Could one who says that "the Presbyterian Church shuts herself out from the realm of the æsthetic" listen to these words and look at the attentive, upturned faces and tear-filled eyes, as the reunion in heaven is portrayed, he would surely hesitate before uttering such a sentiment again. The true æsthetic is something which touches the heart of the poet and the artist, and the Christian. I have visited Romish churches from Montreal to New Orleans; for at one period of my life I had a fancy for the study of church architecture. I have observed the worshipers of that and other denominations, and none have seemed to me so deeply in earnest as Presbyterians. Especially country Presbyterians.

The old basket which holds the communion service at Castanea is of twisted straw, like those brought from Europe by the earliest settlers. It was presented to Unity Church (of which Castanea is a branch) by Mrs. Robert H. Burton, whose husband was one of the elders of Unity. How many eyes now closed in death have grown familiar with that picturesque old basket!

In this age of sham and pretence and sensationalism, there is, to me, nothing so beautiful as real earnestness in religion. Sober, unconscious enthusiasm! In Paris, the modern Babylon, they make artificial flowers so perfectly, that it requires the closest inspection to tell them from the real. The present rage for the cultivation of flowers makes their presence a necessity in every fashionable house. A traveller says, "During my sojourn in Paris, I found two American ladies keeping house, who were acquaintances of mine. Mrs. A.'s display of flowers was exquisite and very profuse;—Mrs. B. had a collection of tea roses and Neapolitan violets, but nothing else." "Why do you let Mrs. A. surpass you so far in her floral collection?" asked a mutual friend. "Oh, do you not know that Mrs. A's flowers are all artificial?" was the amused answer.

"I was shocked and never afterwards felt comfortable in Mrs. A's salon." Give me a single real violet in preference to a ton of artificial flowers. And so in religious worship. I would rather hear one sentence, warm from the heart and uttered "in spirit and in truth" than all the printed prayers and borrowed sermons in the world. Forms and ceremonies also are mere artificial flowers: they only imitate the real thing and we are too apt to be satisfied with the imitation.

All things should be done "decently and in order" for the convenience of the worshipers. If carried farther than this, they shut out the worshiper from the object of his worship. I would like to see more care given to the surroundings of our country churches. Dead branches removed—heaps of rubbish and stones cleared off, and the grass encouraged to grow by an occasional top-dressing. Country grave-yards ought to be filled with flowers and evergreens. But don't ask us to follow any new paths, either in form or doctrine. Only let us search out more carefully the old paths and walk therein. The paths trodden by the Culdees in Scotland, and by the Nazarenes in Judea. Holiness and learning should constitute our only realm of the æsthetic. H. M. I.

CALLED MEETING.

There will be a meeting of the Wilmington Presbytery June 23rd, at 4 o'clock P. M., in the Second church Wilmington, to consider the action of the Home Mission Committee in appointing Rev. H. B. Garriss Evangelist for the eastern portion of the Presbytery. Also to consider a call from Goldsboro church for the pastoral services of Rev. R. B. McAlpine, if presented.

G. W. MACMILLAN, Moderator.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

D. Appleton & Co. send us quite a number of novels. Second Thoughts, Dr. Heidenhoff's Process and Two Russian Idyls are those upon which we lay our hands just now. As to one and all of them, we have only to say that we do not read them, and therefore certainly cannot advise others to do so. What is in them we do not know, but there is a vast deal without them worth vastly more of a reader's time and thoughts. Messrs. Appleton & Co. furnish Stray Moments with Thackery, which are just the kind of moments one likes to spend with Thackeray, and we can advise one who wishes to cool off a heated brain, or rest a brain overtaxed, to invest thirty cents in this little book. We have, too, the Life of Thomas F. Bayard, which may or may not furnish material for numberless campaign speeches. But we have what we value more than all:

"The large type edition of the Life and Words of Christ, by Cunningham Geikie, D. D., from the same stereotype plates as the two volume edition. 1 vol.; cloth; 1,258 pages; price $1 50. This is precisely what we have wanted. It supplies, and we know the absence of these to be a very serious defect in other editions—the publishers say in all cheap editions—the copious notes of the author, the marginal references, and an index. Considering the large type and the ample page, the volume is a marvel of cheapness. It brings Dr. Geikie's famous work, in excellent form, within the reach of every christian family in the land.

Religion of Ancient Egypt, as illustrating the Origin and Growth of Religion, by P. Le Page Renouf. (The Hibbert Lectures for 1879.) $1 50. Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York. 1880. This is the second course of lectures on this foundation, the first being by Max Muller on the "Religions of India." M. Renouf is a veteran and distinguished Egyptologist, and combats many old and erroneous notions about Egyptian religion. Large translations are given from hitherto undeciphered hieroglyphic literature, and new light is thrown on former darkness shrouding this olden nation. While scholars are still divided on the exact aspect of the Egyptian religion, yet this fresh and popular exposition of a recondite subject abounds with interest to even general readers. Readers will be amazed at the clearness and beauty of many of their religious principles.

The catholicity of Scribner's Monthly is well illustrated by the June number, which must certainly appeal to a wide range of literary tastes. The following are the contents: Spring Horseboats; Success; Sun-spots and Financial Panics; Peter the Great; Lamentation; The Grandissimes; The Cypriote Inscriptions; A Year of the Exodus in Kansas; Rocky Mountain Nights; To the Immortal Memory of Keats; William Blake, Painter and Poet; Apple Blossoms; The Dominion of Canada; Thackeray as a Draughtsman; Sad Spring; Extracts from the Journal of Henry J. Raymond; Watching the Cow; Life in Florence; My Friend, Mrs. Angel; Topics of the Time; Home and Society; Culture and Progress; The World's Work; Bric-a-Brac. $4 a year, 35 cents a number. Scribner & Co., 743 Broadway, N. Y.

Blackwood's Magazine for May is at hand. Contents: Dr. Wortle's School; Peter the Great and Syria; Reata, or What's in a Name? Morocco and the Moors; Russia and Nihilism in the Novels of M. Tourgenief; Bush-Life in Queensland; A Woman's Wisdom; The Reign of Buncom. Leonard Scott Pub. Co., 41 Barclay street, New York.

Appleton's Journal for June is on our table. Contents: The Shakespearean Myth; Herr Drommel's Inconsistencies, by Victor Cherbuliez; Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy;" Health at Home, by B. W. Richardson, M. D.; Senior's Conversation; Siberia, a Chapter from "Russia and England from 1876 to 1880;" A Swiss Novelist; Dreams; Infernal Machines; The Spanish Theatre; Editor's Table; Books of the Day. $3 a year, single copy 25 cents. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

The Requiem, published by Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston—50 cents—is a novelty. It is a music book, light, compact and neatly bound in flexible covers, and contains about seventy-five approved Funeral Hymns, constituting quite a variety of appropriate music.

From J. H. Bufford's Sons, 141 Franklin St., Boston, exceedingly choice and attractive specimens of their Scripture, Sabbath school, and Educational Chromo cards, for rewards, &c. Their beauty and variety leave nothing to be desired. We advise trial.

Wide Awake for June is a very good number. Contents: Cake Crumbs; Maid Cicely's Steeple-cap; At Plymouth Oak Farm; Five Little Peppers; Grandmother's Cap; Our American Artists; The True Story of Simple Simon; How Patty Curtis Learned to Sweep; Snap the Whip besides many others that we have not room to mention.

The following English Reviews for May, are from Geo. Munroe, 17 Vandewater St., N. Y.; each $2 25 a year, or 20 cents a number. They present in neat and cheap form a rich variety of subjects and a number of most valuable and interesting discussions; e. g. Mallock's Atheism and Rights of Man; Minto's John Donne; and M. Conway's characteristic "Pound of Flesh" with its wicked flings at Christianity; in the Nineteenth Century; Dr. Elam's expose of the Gospel of Evolution; Plain Reasons against Joining the Church of Rome, by T. Arnold and Dr. Littledale; and F. Lenormant's Eleusinian Mysteries, in the Contemporary; and in the Fortnightly, Geo. Saintsburg's Earnest Renan; and L. Stephen's Attempted Philosophy of History. Tennison; Marc-Ausele by Ernest Renan; Modern English Landscape Painting; Penal Servitude; Ceremonial Use of Flowers; Agnosticism and Women; The Pinch of Poverty: Irish Absenteeism, The Nursing Crisis at St. Guy's Hospital; A Conservative View of the Elections; Sunrise, A Story.

Contemporary Review: International Novelists and Mr. Howells; Daltonism; Ideals of the Day; Miss Lonsdale on Guy's Hospital, by Dr. Moxon; White Wings, A Romance.

Fortnightly Review: The Conservative Collapse; Sir G. Campbell on Home Rule in Several Countries; Ideals of Feminine Usefulness; The Settled Land Bill; A Recent Page of Arabian History; The Revolt of the Counties; Home and Foreign Affairs; The Trumpet Major, from Good Words.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

By order of Ouachita Presbytery, a Presbyterian church has recently been organized at Fulton, Ark., by Rev. W. T. Howison and Elder John B. Christian, and Rev. W. E. Burke by invitation. The new church consists of one elder, one deacon, and ten members. Mr. Victor Green having removed his membership to the new organization was elected elder and duly installed. The deacon, elected, ordained and installed was Mr. Will G. Allen.

On the 23rd ult., Rev. James A. Armstrong was installed pastor of Shepherdstown, W. Va., and on the 29th ult., Rev. G. L. Brown was installed pastor of Warm Springs church, Bath county, Va.

On the first Sabbath in June of each year, the congregation of the First church makes an offering in money to be applied to the liquidation of the church debt. The offering this year amounted to $1,400. The Second church makes a quarterly offering for the same purpose. These offerings have been substituted for fairs, and have worked well.—Central Presbyterian.

Items from the St. Louis Presbyterian:

At the recent Commencement, the Board of Trustees of Westminster College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. John F. Cowan, of McCredie, Mo., and Rev. Edward Martin, of St. Charles, Mo.

It is with unusual pleasure that we announce that Rev. L. P. Bowen has entered upon his labors in the church at Marshall. We are sure he feels more at home, now that he has returned to Missouri. All his brethren bid him welcome. Correspondents will note his removal from Pocomoke City, Md., to Marshall, Saline county, Mo.

The postoffice address of Rev. J. A. Graves is changed to Liberty, Bedford county, Va., whither he has removed from Grand Junction, Tenn.

We extract the following from the Christian Observer: In accordance with the appointment of Presbytery, and in answer to a petition of certain members residing at New Haven, Ky., the commission of Presbytery, consisting of Rev. Messrs. T. E. Converse, J. H. Morrison and J. J. Cooke, and Ruling Elder J. J. Irvine, of Bardstown church, visited the field, and found the way open to organize a church. The organization was completed on Sunday, May 30th, and the church then elected Mr. Wm. H. Alleu unanimously to the office of ruling elder. Mr. Allen was duly ordained and installed. The services were closed by the administration of the Lord's Supper. Rev. Ben. Helm and Rev. A. McDonald, of Elizabethtown, had held a meeting the week previous. With the regular preaching of the Word, this church has a bright prospect.

ECLECTICISMS.

SHARP SHOOTING.

Western Church:

Let the preacher for the common people always use short idiomatic phrases and sentences. They will be better understood. They will hit harder. They will be remembered longer. More sharp shooting can be done with a pound of lead in ounce balls, than with the whole pig coiled in a sort of double bow knot and fired all at once. Keep clear, then, of all complex sentences.

CHRIST-LIFE IS CONSECRATION.

Covenant:

To enter the Christ-life—not the Church-life, but the Christ-life—is to lay down the natural and lower life, as Christ laid it down. It is to consecrate one's self—every reasoning power, every element of genius, every force of disposition, everything that belongs to the power of human nature—to make one's self the bread of others, the supply of others, to live for beneficence.

GREAT THOUGH HUMBLE.

Baltimore Presbyterian:

We have seen those whom we were willing to call great men, of whom the Church seemed to have little knowledge. They were rendered conspicuous by an honorary degree from a college, and yet they were really doctors in divinity. They were never thought of for a professorship, and yet were deep theologians. They never had honorary appointments to preach special sermons, and yet their country charges they could preach powerfully and impressively.

REAL JOY.

Southern Presbyterian:

Men must have something to enjoy. If the irrepressible desire of human nature we remain ignorant of the best joys, we sure to seek inferior ones. When we see professors of religion, therefore, looking to the vain and paltry pleasures of the world for their happiness, we feel sure they know little or nothing of the higher, purer, and richer joys of God's service. They do not enjoy religion, because they have none to enjoy, else what they have is so feeble, so defective and so perverted, that it is incapable of yielding any enjoyment.

THE EFFECT OF HABIT.

The Presbyterian:

If you are overcome by bad habits counteract them with resistance so oft-repeated that your nature works not only necessarily, but harmoniously against them, and you will come out new creatures; old things will have passed away in the victorious struggle. This is ever witnessed in the last struggles of advanced Christians. When those in whose lives divine impulses have been gracious habits come to the last hour—that hour of weakness and decay—then habit brings out the strength of youth through the breaches these foes have made, making the dying pillow soft as down, and the chamber of death more radiant than a banqueting house.

ENEMIES OF MANKIND.

Western Methodist:

Some one—we cannot say who—advances the thought that if the churches inflicted the harm upon society, upon families, upon individuals, which is inflicted by the liquor trade, wholesale and retail, all the land would ring with the cry, "Down with the Churches." The legislative, the judicial and the executive departments of the government would promptly hearken unto the voice of the people, and would abolish the churches, as enemies of mankind, as nuisances not to be endured for a day. Now, can any one tell why greater forbearance should be exercised toward a great evil inflicted, not by religious men, but by wicked men?

RESTRAINT NECESSARY.

United Presbyterian:

Many of the restraints of law, society and the Church seem irksome, so that sometimes we almost with they were done away. But if we have such an inward clamor for liberty, we have only to think of the little self-control that possesses us to know that the external influence upon us is necessary for our safety. Even among the best Christians there are but few who could afford to be relieved entirely of the restrictions that are upon their lives and conduct. To do that which is right in our own eyes and to be a law unto ourselves is to exist in a state more hazardous than any humble man will wish to attempt.

THE BROAD FOUNDATION.

Southwestern Presbyterian:

It being denied to man to know by intuition, what measures and methods are best for the advancement of the Church; and the Lord having denied to any one man all the wisdom, dividing it, as He does, among many, there is no other way than by wise and wide discussion to vindicate Church policy or settle it. Hence, our most successful forms of Church work, and our best established laws are always the fruit of the most thorough and general comparison and collision of opinion. The many rays converging in one focus give us a light more strong and clear than any single ray could furnish. And, on the other hand ecclesiastical records are thickly strewn with legislation extemporised with the utmost enthusiasm and confidence, which, for lack of the broad foundation which ample discussion affords, fell still-born to the earth.

VERY RIDICULOUS.

Canada Presbyterian:

It seems very ridiculous in the organs of the Roman Catholic Church to cry so much for liberty to their side when they will give none wherever they have power. This is well put in the following extract: "Her policy now is against liberty in all countries where she is dominant, and she favors it only in those countries where she cannot impose herself by force. She was the friend of Catholic emancipation in England; but where has she been the friend of Protestant emancipation in Spain? She has asked for liberty of public worship at Geneva, but she has never granted it in Rome. The Church has given her hearty support in every tyranny that has been established in Europe in the present generation, on the single condition that the tyrant should be a Roman Catholic, and she has combatted every movement towards political emancipation. To the friends of political liberty the Church of Rome—whatever may be the beauty of holiness to which many of her sons and daughters have attained—is at once the most redoubtable and most insidious of their foes."

LOW VIEWS.

Christian at Work:

Christian people think they will be all right if they can only squeeze through the narrow gate into the heavenly fields. "Safe," in a sense, they will be; but, after all, how low must be the plane of such a life in comparison with that of some of the glorified saints who have lived lives of holiness, of consecration, of earnest, never-failing work for the Master. The thief on the cross was forgiven, to be sure—let us not forget this. But he would have been a better Christian if he had never been a thief, and the reward of a Christian believer whose life has been one of struggle with sin and of consecration to the Master's service will surely be far more abundant than will fall to the lot of one who repented, it may be, under the shadow of the gallows. There is somehow an idea prevalent that heaven is a vast plain inhabited by a spiritual democracy, all living on the same level. But it is rather a country of valley and hill, elevation and depression, and assuredly not all who enter will find themselves dwellers on the mountain-top.

THE CUP OF SORROW.

On classic cups and vases we have sometimes seen devices carved by the cunning hand of the sculptor. So around the cup of trial, which God commends to the lips of suffering Christians, are wreathed many comforting assurances. Here is one of them: "All things work together for good to them which love God." Here is another like it: "As thy day is so shall thy strength be." Afflicted friend, turn thy cup of sorrow around, and you will see engraved on it these precious words: "As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you." Turn it again and read: "My grace is sufficient for thee." The whole cup is encircled with the words of love. But it requires faith to read them. They are invisible to selfishness and blind unbelief. And God sometimes washes the eyes of His children with tears, in order that they may read aright His providence and His commandments.—T. L. Cuyler.

AN EDUCATOR.

A prominent clergyman of Chicago, after enumerating the variety of valuable matter usually found in a religious weekly paper, closes with the following remarks: "I suppose some Christian families feel that the price of a good religious paper is more than they are able to pay. But the value of such a paper, when taken and read, is above all price in money. The cost at the most is only six pennies a week. There are many mothers who so prize the assistance of such a paper in the education of their families that they would sooner wear one hat less a year than dispense with their paper. There are fathers who would by a coat cheaper by the cost of the paper, rather than be deprived of its blessing. So deeply do I feel the need of such a paper as an educating force in my own life and home, that I count it not at all among the luxuries but necessities of my table. And I am sure that where it is taken and read, and not laid upon the shelf to stay there, it will be an invaluable educator of both the home and the Church into that life which we live by the faith of the Son of God."

The catalogue of the Bingham School for the year ending June 1, 1880, is before us. The exhibit is better than ever before. The roll contains 189 names, representing ten Southern and four Northern States, District of Columbia, South America (Brazil), Europe (Scotland), and Asia (Siam)—a number and an area of patronage unprecedented in the history of Southern schools. Those best acquainted with the school say that the discipline and instruction were never as good as at present, and that the satisfaction given to patrons and pupils was never as great. See advertisement.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

We note from our exchanges that peaches of this season have appeared in different sections of the State. Nothing of the sort has yet been seen in this immediate locality.

Mrs. Tyler, the widow of the ex-President, lives at Sherwood Forest, the Tyler estate on the James river. Her daughter, her little grand daughter, and herself have all been received into the Catholic Church.

The steamers Narragansett and Stonington collided on Long Island Sound on the night of Friday last. A dense fog prevailed at the time. The Narragansett took fire and soon sunk in four fathoms water. The number of passengers on board the ill-fated vessel was between 300 and 400. Probably not less than fifty lives were lost, and there may be many more.

The steamer Passport, which has been so serviceable as an excursion boat between Wilmington, N. C., and Smithville, at the mouth of the Cape Fear river, has been sold and will be withdrawn.

It is a suggestive fact that the average amount expended in one year in Maine for liquor "for medicinal and mechanical purposes" was fifteen cents for each citizen, while in the rest of the Union the liquor bill averaged fifteen dollars for each citizen the same year.

The late Duke of Portland, who died not long since, seems to have been specially fond of newspaper reading, for his yearly subscriptions, it is said, amounted to $6,500. He had four complete sets of each paper to which he subscribed, one for each of his Scotch houses, one for Welbeck, and one for Hartcourt House. Many of these sets were bound up into volumes every six months.

More than one thousand years ago the mortar used in the construction of the Mosque of Sophia, in Constantinople, was charged with musk, the perfume of which permeates the building to this day.

The general tendency toward universal harmony has further illustration in the fact that music has been got out of stones in Boston. M. Baudre has arranged an apparatus of twenty seven musical flint stones of irregular shape, each sounding a different note when struck, and ranging in pitch from D to Upper E sharp, including all the sharps and flats. The music obtained is peculiar and not at all disagreeable. The tone is pure, somewhat resembling that of resonant glass, and familiar and even difficult music can be played on this new instrument. These musical flints were found in the chalk and iron districts of France.

Prof. W. C. Kerr, Geologist, is in correspondence with a wealthy gentleman of Minneapolis, Minnesota, in regard to the grape and fruit culture in the western part of the State. The party will visit the State soon, with the intention of making it his home. The professor also has a letter from an eminent scientist of Philadelphia, asking him to make a tour of the mountains about the middle of June with a number of geologists and botanists of note. Every summer these parties make trips through the mountains of this State, which afford the richest field in the country for researches of this character.—Raleigh Observer.

The Romish Church excels in stories of remarkable conversions. It is particularly strong on the effect of holy bones and other relics, and of holy water. The latest story magnifies the water of Lourdes. It is told by a Toulons paper as follows: "A priest at the railway station lately asked a man to hold a flask for him. During the absence of the clergyman the man took a sip ont of the flask, thinking it might be brandy. It was, however, water from the Lourdes. The effect of the draught was that the man renounced the Protestant religion, became a Catholic, and begged to be allowed to make a confession on the return of the priest." An intimation that this, like various other miracles, was an advertisement of the Lourdes speculation would be rejected, we suppose, with indignation; still it looks so.

We were shown this week, by Mr. J. R. Eads, of Pleasant Ridge, in this township a cluster or bunch of oat stems amounting to forty-seven, all from one grain. From one of these stalks he got 93 seed. Whilst several were gathering around examining this fine bunch, Mr. C. J. Kee remarked that they were fine, but that while he lived in Chester, S. C., he raised some having as high as 72 stalks to the grain. Some of the by-standers began to look amazed. About this time, Mr. Kee, remembering that he had a patch of oats back of his lot, went to examine them, and in a short time returned with three bunches, the largest of which had 84 shoots or stalks from one grain, and the next largest one 98. From one of these stalks he got 104 seeds. These oats measured from the ground to the top five feet six inches. What county can beat Gaston for oats? But, gentlemen, please don't bring us any more bunches until we build our house bigger. A few bunches of oats like these would fill up a common-sized—well —Gastonia Gazette.

At Woodville, Columbus county, N. C., CLEMENT BANNERMAN, youngest son of Shade and Eliza Wooton, aged 3 years and 3 months.

"Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

In Robeson county, May 11th, 1880, MARY JANE, daughter of Archibald A. and Lina A. McLean, aged 4 years and 2 days.

Little Janie was a child of unusual brightness. With scarce five summers to mark her footprints here, she possessed a mind of rare intellect for one so young. But the most ennobling trait in her character was her amiable disposition, which not only made her a special favorite of her parents and relatives, but endeared her to all who knew her. The associations with her playmates were ever pleasant and gentle, and never even in childhood follies were her little hands known to be raised in violence to any of them. Too pure for this world, she was taken in the arms of her Saviour to that beautiful land of rest which furnishes its richest abodes to His lambs.

Adieu, little rose-bud, sweet emblem of love,
Arrayed in thy beauty by a Just One above,
Brought forth with the dew-drops of soft summer air,
Plucked from the branches by the hand of the fair.

May thy virtues—thine excellencies—ever impart
Modesty and purity to these stricken hearts;
And thy sweet little memory, fade though it will,
Be cherished in our bosoms and hang round us still.
McL.

April 26, near Kilpatrick's Ford, on the South Yadkin, in Iredell county, Mr. THOMAS STEVENSON, age 82.

He had been for many years a member of Fourth Creek church, but removed his residence and membership to this church a few years ago. A quiet, good man; a descendant of a long line of pious ancestry; a grandson of one who acquired the name of "Little Gabriel." One brother, William, died just before him aged 95; another, Fergus, just after him, aged 89. Several children survive.

In Snow Creek, Iredell county, May 20th, Mr. WM. F. COWAN, aged 80 years, a native of Rowan.

He was engaged in mercantile business for a time, but in 1840 went to a farm on Snow Creek, where he died. He married Miss Ann Allison in 1833, and had a family of three sons and three daughters. The wife, one son and a daughter survive. In 1853 he was elected elder in Bethany church. He joined the Church in early life, was interested in her welfare and died in the hope of the Gospel.

On Hunting Creek, Iredell county, on the 18th ult., Miss POLLY ANDREWS, daughter of the late James Andrews, aged 90 years.

She had been for many years a member of Tabor church. She was a useful woman, and left a brother, several sisters and other friends to mourn their loss. She was buried at the family cemetery, near home.

At the house of her son-in-law, near Bethany church, 27th ult., Mrs. ELIZABETH HOWARD, widow of the late Alvin Howard, aged 75 years.

She was much esteemed in the community, had been for several years a member of Bethany church, and found it gain to die. She had buried five sons. One daughter and five sons survive her.

Quite suddenly, on Fifth Creek, Mrs. MAGNOLIA E. HOUPE, wife of Mr. E. E. Houpe, and daughter of Mr. A. C. Murdoch, aged 21 years.

She left an infant 8 months old, a husband and a large circle of friends to mourn for her, cut off in the morning of life! She had been for some time a member of Bethany church, and was anticipating much happiness in attending a communion of her church this week, but God directed otherwise.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

ANTIOCH, ROBESON COUNTY, N. C., May 23, 1880.

At a regular meeting of the Antioch Y. M. C. Association, held May 23d, 1880, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The hand of Divine Providence has removed from our midst our late brother, JOSEPH A. CURRIE; and

Whereas, In view of the loss we have sustained by the death of our brother, and the still heavier loss sustained by those who were nearest and dearest to him; therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say, that in regretting his removal from our midst, we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our respect and regard.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with the family of the deceased on the dispensation with which it has pleased Divine Providence to afflict them and commend them for consolation to Him who orders all things for the best, and whose chastisements are meant in mercy.

Resolved, That this heartfelt testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be forwarded to the family of the deceased as a token of respect.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and be spread upon the records of our Association.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ROBESON COUNTY BAR IN REFERENCE TO THE DEATH OF COL. N. A. McLEAN.

WHEREAS, Under a mysterious and yet allwise dispensation of Providence, death has again entered into our brotherhood, and within less than one year from the death of our esteemed brother, Giles Leitch, the grim harvester has cut down and removed from our midst, our much loved brother, Col. NEILL ARCHIBALD McLEAN. Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Col. N. A. McLean, our profession has lost one of its brightest ornaments, and most talented members, the community in which he lived, a sincere and earnest friend, and a wise and judicious counsellor.

Resolved, That as a lawyer, he was thorough, as an advocate able, and in the discharge of his professional duties, he was courteous to all. We who were accustomed to meet him in the forum, knew best the force and strength of his well-cultivated and scholarly mind.

Resolved, That his fame is the common privilege of the people among whom he lived, and the name of the great Robeson county orator, will long be fresh in their memories, and not his fame and brilliant eloquence only, but as well his genial smile, friendly greeting, courteous manners and frank generosity.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his immediate family, in their sad bereavement, and with them can but turn to the pages of that sacred volume, from which he so often drew inspiration for comfort and relief.

REAL COMFORT.
Every one should own a good Hammock. There is no other one article that will give one-half so much enjoyment in worth the number as a hammock stretched in the shade, and any one who does not own one misses much of the pleasure to be obtained in the summer months. If you are going on a vacation into the woods or to the seashore, take a Hammock with you; it will repay its cost hundreds of times. The most common Hammock in the country is the imported Mexican Grass Hammock; this is made of vegetable fibre and soon rots and arrests. The Hammock we offer is the Gossamer Interwove Hammock, made of doubled and twisted cotton cord, knotted at every mesh. It can be cut almost to pieces, yet it will not unravel, and it will never rot, lasting for years, and out-wears three common Imported Hammocks. They weigh almost nothing, and can be carried in the pocket. They are handsomely trimmed, and weave in beautiful fast colors, with Patent Swivel Nickel Rings. The regular price is $2 50; we will send a Gossamer Hammock to any address, by express, for $1 50; by mail, post-paid, 25 cents extra.

WHAT THE
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
Did For a Kansas Woman.
Its Great Controlling Power over the Nervous System, the Digestive Organs and Uterine Affections.

TRADE MARK—PATENTED.
Case of Mrs. B——, stated by Dr. L. M. Wood, Wyandotte county, Kansas.
Extract from a letter dated White Church, Wyandotte county, Kansas, February 1st, 1880:
"I first saw Mrs. B—— laboring under Hysterical Coma, from which she had not been sufficiently aroused to take nourishment for four days. She was of large frame, but in a condition of extreme emaciation. From her husband I obtained the following statement: She was thirty-six years of age, and when in health unusually robust, her average weight being one hundred and fifty pounds. She was accustomed to do all of her house work and to perform other labor when necessary. Several years before she had undergone an operation for a Tumor formed in the region of the right Acetabulum. Her general health remained good for some time. Afterwards, however, she became a great sufferer from a distressing form of Dyspepsia, there being at times almost total Atony of the digestive organs. There was also serious derangement of the Monthly Functions, with general prostration of the Nervous System resulting in attacks similar to that described, and she had been under the care, at different times, of several distinguished medical men without benefit. Under appropriate treatment she was aroused to a state of consciousness, took nourishment such as her stomach would retain, and her general condition improved to some extent. There was, however, a frequent recurrence of these attacks, and I saw but little if any hope of permanent benefit. Recollecting that I had seen the Buffalo Lithia Waters endorsed by men eminent in the profession, as a "Powerful Nerve Tonic," I determined as a last resort to make a trial of it in her case, and ordering it directly from the Springs, put her upon it. In a few weeks the beneficial result was unmistakable, in the increase of appetite—the invigoration of the organs of digestion, and most especially in the gradual restoration to a healthy condition of the exhausted Nervous System and a diminution both of the frequency and severity of the attacks referred to. She used the water for several months with continued and decided benefit. The Monthly Functions have been restored to a normal condition, and there has been a total cessation of the attacks of Hysterical Coma, and she has gained rapidly in flesh and strength, until she is now in robust, vigorous health, eating as much "Hog and Hominy," and doing as much hard work as any woman in this Western country, the credit for all of which, I give where it is certainly due, to these remarkable waters."
These Springs are opened for Visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE. The Waters in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, Five Dollars per case, at the Springs.
They are prescribed by Dr. J. Marion Sims, Dr. William A. Hammond and Dr. John T. Metcalf, of New York, as well as by a large number of leading medical men in all sections of the country. Spring pamphlet sent to any address.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Goodest Mother.

Evening was falling cold and dark.
And people hurried along the way,
As if they were longing soon to mark,
Their own home candles cheering ray.

Before me tolled in the whirling wind,
A woman with bundles great and small,
And after her tugged a step behind,
The Bundle she loved the best of all.

A dear little roly-poly boy
With rosy cheeks, and jacket blue,
Laughing and chattering full of joy,
And here's what he said—I tell you true:

"You're the goodest mother that ever was."
A voice as clear as a forest bird's;
And I'm sure the glad young heart had cause
To utter the sweet of the lovely words.

Perhaps the woman had worked all day
Washing or scrubbing; perhaps she sewed;
I knew by her weary footfall's way,
That life for her was an up-hill road

But here was a comfort, children dear,
Think what a comfort you might give
To the very best friend you can have here,
The lady fair in whose house you live

If once in a while you'd stop and say,
In task or play for a moment pause,
And tell her, in sweet and winning way,
"You're the goodest mother that ever was."

—Margaret E. Sangster.

The Lighthouse Keepers Daughter.

BY LUCY DUNCAN.

[Translated from the French.]

Many years ago a little girl lived all alone with her father in a castle that was built on a grand old rock. There was a lighthouse in this castle, and every night the light was brilliantly reflected on the deep blue sea, casting the shadows far and wide.

Little Marie was very delicate, and often unable to leave her bed for many days. The poor child did not have much pleasure in her young life at the castle; and—can you believe it?—she had never seen a flower! for nothing but weeds grew by the rocks, and Marie had never lived anywhere but in this same castle.

Her papa was very kind to her, and every night when she was well enough he would carry her in his arms up the narrow, winding stairway that led to the great lamp, and nothing pleased Marie more than to watch her papa light it, and then to see the flame throw its light on the water; it seemed like a fairy tale, she said

One morning when her papa was going away for a few days, Marie said to him:

"Papa, will you make me very happy—happier than I've ever been before?"

"Yes, little one, if it is possible for me to do so; how could I refuse my pet anything?"

"Then, dear papa, will you—can you—bring me a rose, a lily, a beautiful? Oh, I do want one so much!"

During his absence Marie did not hear the cry of the sea-gulls, or the rippling of the waves, or even the rustling of the wind past the old castle. She thought of but the flowers which she was sure her papa would bring to her.

Although she had never seen one, she had often heard her papa speak of them, and had seen many pictures of them in her book. What kind of a flower would he bring her? Would it be a beautiful red rose, a soft white lily, or perhaps, some tender little violets? It seemed to Marie as if her papa never would come; but at last he came, and after carefully fastening the boat to its moorings, he jumped on shore, and hurried to see his little girl. She put her arms around his neck and whispered:

"Dear papa, and—and—my flower?"

"I have not brought you a flower, my child, but I brought you something better instead," and he gave her a paper package, which she opened with feverish haste, her hands trembling with anxiety. Alas! it did not contain anything beautiful to her eyes, for all she saw was some dried grains like sand or tiny pebbles.

The poor, disappointed child burst into tears, and her tears were very bitter, for they came right from her grieved and aching little heart. She thought that her papa didn't understand how much she wanted the flower—only one, she had asked—and yet she knew he loved her.

Her papa did not immediately try to explain to her what the "grains" were, but taking her in his arms, he petted and comforted her till she could listen to all he had to tell her; and then he told her that the little grains were flower seeds, and that, if they were carefully planted, she would one day have a beautiful flower garden of her own. Marie thought she would like to plant all the seeds as fast as she could; so her papa found a nice place on either side of the steps where there was a narrow strip of earth between the great grey rocks.

For many days she watched the seeds very eagerly, and took the greatest pains to water the ground where her treasures were hidden; but the constant anxiety lest, after all, she should lose her flowers, proved too much for the frail and delicate child.

She was taken very ill, and again obliged to stay in bed for a long, long time. Her papa took the most loving care of his pet, and everything that could ease her pain and make the weary hours seem less dull, he bought for her; many toys, books and pretty things—and yet one thing more little Marie wanted.

"Papa is so good, so kind, he loves me so much! oh, if I had that one flower!" she said to herself.

The beautiful summer had come at last, and one day, when Marie was feeling better, her papa said:

"Marie, my darling, the air is so soft and warm, the sky and the sea are so blue and calm, that I must carry you out of doors to show you something very pretty; you have never seen anything half so beautiful."

He took her in his strong arms and carried her down stairs and out on the steps to the foot of the castle. And what did she see? Flowers, flowers, flowers everywhere!

Roses, lilies and violets, and oh! so many others whose beautiful colors were as brilliant as the rays of the setting sun; and they seemed to smile their greeting to her as they bowed their heads at the gentle murmer of the breeze.

"Oh, how beautiful! papa, how beautiful!" and a tear softly kissed her pale, wan cheek.

"All this belongs to you, my pet, my darling," and he placed her tenderly by the sweetest of the so loved flowers.

She inhaled their delicate perfume; she kissed them; she gently caressed their soft petals, and, when her papa put a garland on her head, and filled her hands with the choicest he could find, and when he carried her back to her room, and laid her again on her pretty couch, she seemed like a fairy queen on her throne of flowers. Her papa sat down by her, and, taking her hand in his, said to her:

"Last spring, little one, when you asked me for a flower, there were none to be found. I hunted everywhere, and asked each person I met to tell me where I could find one; but they all shook their heads and told me they did not know. But, dear child, I loved you just as much then as I love you now, and when I gave you all those seeds you thought so ugly, I knew that I was preparing a happy surprise for you to-day. You had to wait and wait, darling, but by waiting you have a garden that will last a long time; and instead of having one flower that would fade in a few hours, you have a garden full, from which you can gather bouquets as many as you like."

Marie did not forget the lessen about the flower seeds as long as she lived. Our dear little ones often ask things of God which, perhaps, they do not always receive at once, and they feel badly, and say to themselves, "God does not trouble himself about me and what I ask him for." But, children, yes—indeed, yes! He does trouble himself. Don't forget little Marie and her flowers. The good God keeps in his heart the remembrance of your prayers; and if you continue to love Him, and give Him your whole heart, your garden will be full of the most choice and beautiful flowers.—Sunday School Times.

The One Gift.

There is one gift that God will accept from man. He does not want man's first gift to be his riches, nor will he accept them first. He does not want our works, for they are sins He wants our hearts! "My son, give me thine heart," He says to every child of man. Every thing else we can give Him will be too imperfect for his acceptance. Nothing broken will He receive except a broken heart: "A broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." When the Macedonians made contributions to the Apostle Paul He says they "first gave their own selves to the Lord." (2 Cor. viii. 5) Similar to this was the gift of a little Sunday school girl, who brought to a friend a very beautiful bouquet of flowers. "And why do you bring me these?" asked the gentleman. "Because I love you," she answered, quickly. "And do you bring any gifts to Jesus?" he again asked. "O, I give myself to Him," was the quick response. That was a beautiful answer. And that is just what we wish every reader of this would do who has not done so.

That God might win our hearts He has given us an unspeakably great gift, even his only begotten Son, who is now preparing a place for His people which we may share with Him "when He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day." And in many other ways has He manifested His love to us. Will we not then make to Him this most reasonable of all gifts, presenting our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God?—Young Pilgrim.

How Russians Keep Warm.

The Russians have a great knack for making their winters pleasant. You feel nothing of the cold in those tightly built houses, where all the doors and windows are double, and where the rooms are kept warm by big stoves hidden in the walls. There is no damp in a Russian house; and the inmates may dress indoors in the lightest of garbs, which contrast oddly with the mass of furs and wraps which they don when going out. A Russian can afford to run no risks of exposure when he leaves his house for a walk or drive. He covers his head and ears with a fur bonnet, his feet and legs with felt boots lined with wool or fur, which are drawn on over the ordinary boots and trousers, and reach up to the knees; he next cloaks himself in an ample overcoat with fur collar, lining and cuffs; and he buries his hands in a pair of fing rless gloves of seal or bearskin. Thus equipp d, and with the collar of his coat raised all around so that it muffles him up to the eyes, the Russian exposes his nose only to the cold air; and he takes care frequently to give that organ a little rub to keep circulation going. A stranger, who is apt to forget that precaution, would often get his nose frozen if it were not for the courtesy of the Russians, who will always warn him if they see his nose "whitening," and will, unbidden, help him to chafe it vigorously with snow.

In Russian cities walking is just possible for men during the winter, but hardly so for ladies. The women of the lower order wear knee boots; those of the shopkeeping classes seldom venture out at all; those of the aristocracy go out in sleighs. These sleighs are by no means pleasant vehicles for nervous people, for the Kalmuck coachmen drive them at such a terrible pace that they frequently capsize; but persons not destitute of pluck will find their motion most enjoyable. It must be added, that to be spilled out of a Russian sleigh is tantamount only to getting a rough tumble on a soft mattress, for the very thick furs in which the victim is sure to be wrapped will be enough to break the fall.

The houses and hovels of the Russian working classes are as well warmed as those of the aristocracy. A stove is always the principal item of furniture in them; and these contrivances are used to sleep on as well as to cook in. The mujick, having no bed, curls himself up on his stove at his time for going to rest; sometime he may be found creeping right into the stove and enjoying the delights of a vapor bath. The amount of heat which a Russian will stand is indeed amazing, and his carelessness in facing the cold afterwards, not less so. On a Saturday, which is wash-day all over Russia, you may see in a village a mujick who has been cooking himself in his stove till he is the color of a boiled lobster, rush naked into the snow and roll himself in it like a dog, till he glows all over to his satisfaction. It seems monstrous that one of the Russian's principal protections against the cold was laid under penalty by Peter the Great, and subsequently by Elizabeth and Catharine II. when they were trying to civilize their subjects according to the custom of the West. These three sovereigns all laid a tax on beards, and peasants entering cities on market days were required to exhibit in proof that they had paid their tax—a brass coin stamped with a bearded face, and the words, "The beard tax has been settled." This absurd impost was abolished by Paul, but the effects of it still survive in a manner, for the beard is still considered "bad form" in aristocratic circles. Military officers only wear moustache and whiskers; diplomatists and other civil servants eschew the whiskers, and generally shave their faces clean. A Russian with a beard is pretty sure to be either a "pope" or a member of one of the classes below the upper middle.—Scottish American Journal.

Fun with a Spider.

Spiders in many respects are just like other animals, and can be tamed and petted and taught a great many lessons, which they will learn as readily as a dog or cat. But you must take the trouble to study their ways and get on the good side of them. One day I had been reading in a book how spiders managed to get their webs across streams and roads, and from the top of one tall tree to another. I went out and caught a large garden spider, one of those blue-gray sprawling fellows, and fixed him up for my experiment.

I took a stick about eighteen inches in length and fastened a piece of iron to one end of it so that the stick would stand up on that end of itself. Then I put this stick in the centre of a large tub half full of water, and placed the spider on top of the stick. I wanted to see if he could get to the "land," which was the edge of the tub, without any help. He ran down first one side of the stick and then the other; each time he would stop when he touched the water, and, shaking his feet as a cat does, he would run up again. At last he came to the conclusion that he was entirely surrounded by water—on an island, in fact. After remaining perfectly quiet for a long while, during which I have no doubt he was arranging his plans, he began running around the top of the stick, and throwing out great coils of web with his hind feet. In a few minutes little fine strings of web were floating away in the slight breeze that was blowing. After a little, one of these threads touched the edge of the tub and stuck fast, as all spider webs will. This was just what Mr. Spider was looking for, and the next minute he took hold of this web and gave it a jerk as a sailor does a rope when he wishes to see how strong it is, or make it fast. Having satisfied himself that it was fast at the other end, he gathered it in till it was tight and straight, and then ran on it quickly to the shore—a rescued castaway, saved by his own ingenuity. Spiders are not fools, if they are ugly, and He who made all things has a thought and care for all. The earth is full of the knowledge of God.—Canada Presbyterian.

A Little Etymology.

The Nineteenth Century gives its readers the following interesting scrap in relation to the derivation of monetary terms:

The derivation of the words relating to money and commerce are interesting and instructive. "Pecuniary" takes us back to the time when value was reckoned by so many heads of cattle. The word "money" is from moneta, because in Rome coins were first regularly struck in the temple of Juno Moneta, which again was derived from monere, to warn, because it was built on the spot where Manlius heard the Gauls approaching to the attack of the city. "Coin" is probably from the Latin cuneus, a die or a stamp. Many coins are merely so called from their weight, as for instance our pound, the French livre, the Italian lira; others from the metal, as the "aureus;" the "rupee" from the Sanskrit "rupya," silver; others from the design, as the angel, the testoon, from teste or tete, a head; others from the head of the State, as the sovereign, crown; others from the proper name of the monarch, such as a daric, from Darius, the Philip, Louis d'or, or the Napoleon. The dollar or thaler is from the Joachimstaler, or money of the Joachimas Valley, in Bohemia, where the coins were first struck in the sixteenth century. Guineas were called after the country from which the gold is obtained, and the "franc" is an abbreviation of the inscription Francorum Rex. The "sou" is from the Latin solidus. The word shilling is derived from a root signifying to divide; and in several cases the name indicates the fraction of some larger coin, as the denarius, half-penny, farthing, cent and mill. The pound was originally not a coin, but a weight, and comes from the Latin pondus. Our pound was originally a pound of silver, which was divided into 240 pennies. The origin of the word penny is unknown Some have derived it from pendo, to weigh; but this does not seem very satisfac ory. Our word "sterling" is said to go back to the time of the conquest, but the derivation has been much disputed. Some have supposed that it was first attributed to coins struck at Stirling, but for this there is not the slightest evidence; others, that the name was derived from coins having a star on the obverse, but no coins which could give rise to such a name are known. The most probable suggestion is that it has reference to the Easterling or North German merchants.

John Bunyan.

In one way, Bunyan must ever be the chief wonder of our literature. No one has done so much with so little help from predecessors or contemporaries. To one book—the Bible—he was profoundly indebted in several senses; but few other works can be mentioned as seriously affecting or informing him He may have taken an idea or two from Fox's "Book of Martyrs;" but, on the whole, Fox probably did him more harm than good. The Bible was, in fact his library. The proverb tells us to beware of the man of one book; but proverbs are commonly one-sided and partial. Much depends on who the man is and what the book No one can overrate either the literary or spiritual influence of the Bible upon Bunyan. But, as we have just said, there are few other literary influences worth recording. And it is difficult to conceive how Bunyan could have been brought into contact with the literary culture of his time without being ruined. For it was altogether unfavorable to such intensity and fervor as characterize his nature. The genius of Milton, indeed, flourished, and flourished nobly in that same age. But Milton's was a personality of almost scornful independence. His soul was like a star; it dwelt apart. Not so Bunyan's. His was an eager, sympathetic spirit that would have withered in the atmosphere in which that other lived its own glorious life lonely, exalted, supreme—

"Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified."

Moreover, Bunyan was some twenty years the younger; and the magnificent inheritance of Elizabethan traditions in which Milton in some sense shared was well-nigh exhausted when Bunyan grew up. Milton belonged in many respects to the great Elizabethan race. If we take Butler or Dryden as more truly representing the age to which Bunyan belonged, we shall see reason to supect that it might have gone ill with Bunyan had he moved in their circle. How could his fervid, passionate soul have thriven there? In the midst of cynics and satirists how could it but have languished and died? Something of the ancient chivalrous spirit lived in the bosom of this Bedfordshire tinker; he had a lingering love for knight errantry and its ways; to him were still dear the old romances whose simplicity and artlessness had won them the contempt of the Restoration wits. Evidently Bunyan could not have been Bunyan had he been so unfortunate as to rise in the social scale. One simply cannot imagine Mr. John Bunyan, late of Elstow, sipping coffee at Button's!—Academy.

The Origin of Machine-Made Pens.

Joseph Gillott, the first to employ machinery in the manufacture of steel pens, was originally the maker of buckles and other "steel toys," working alone in a garret in a Birmingham "slum." At this time he was engaged to a young women in his own rank in life, whose two brothers were working, in about the same style as himself on hand-made pens. Gillott thought he could better the processes employed, and worked secretly in his garret until he had made a press and other appliances, by which he could make twenty times as many pens in a day, and better pens, than was possible under the old methods. He found ready sale for them, and soon the demand outgrew his power of production. At this juncture his sweetheart agreed to his proposal that they should marry and work together, little dreaming of the ultimate issue of their enterprise. In after years Mr. Gillott used to tell how, on the very morning of his marriage, he began and finished a gross of pens, and so'd them for £7 4s. before going to church.

SHALL ORANGE PRESBYTERY BE DIVIDED?

The Presbytery of Orange is the largest Presbytery in the Synod of North Carolina and one of the largest in the Southern Church. It has thirty ministers and sixty churches. Its boundaries are the State line on the north, the Atlantic Coast on the east, the Neuse River, the southern boundaries of Wake, Chatham, Randolph, and Davidson counties, the Yadkin River and the southern and western boundaries of Yadkin county, and the western boundary of Surry county on the south and west. It embraces within its limits thirty-eight counties and four parts of counties. The meetings of a Presbytery covering so large an area must necessarily be attended with great expense, especially to the churches in its extreme eastern and western limits. The division of Presbytery is obviously then desirable if practicable. There is one difficulty in the way of division, but we think this is rather apparent than real. The difficulty is this, Presbyterianism is comparatively weak in the eastern part of the Presbytery, i. e. the churches are fewer and more scattered in the eastern part of the Presbytery than in the western. There are twenty counties in the east which have not a Presbyterian church in them. There are only four churches east of the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad and two of these are new churches, one of them only organized this year. There is one church belonging to the Presbytery on on the Wilmington & Weldon Road, this also is a new church—Rocky Mount. We hope we will have another soon at Wilson. The church of Goldsboro is geographically within our limits, but its connection is with the Presbytery of Wilmington. If the Presbytery is divided it is to be hoped that it can be so arranged as to throw it with the eastern Presbytery. We have one other little church east of Raleigh, the church of Oakland, which is geographically I believe within the bounds of Fayetteville Presbytery. The great bulk of the Presbytery is therefore west of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad. This fact however, is not an insuperable obstacle to division. It only shows that to make anything like an equal division of the Presbytery as to ecclesiastical and ministerial strength, the line which divides them must be far west of the line which divides them equally as to territory.

A tentative proposition was made last fall to divide the Presbytery by the line which forms the eastern boundaries of Person, Orange and Chatham counties. This proposition was not discussed, but a committee of three was appointed to report on the matter at the spring meeting of Presbytery. Two of the members of the committee brought in a report that they deemed it inadvisable to divide the Presbytery at present. The chairman of the committee as his report, submitted this proposition: That we put to a final vote of Presbytery next fall the question to divide the Presbytery by the following line. The western boundary of Person, the northern boundary of Orange to the North Carolina Railroad, that Railroad to its intersection with the eastern boundary of Orange, thence along the eastern boundaries of Orange and Chatham counties to the southern boundary of the Presbytery. This it will be seen is the same line as the one proposed last fall except that the county of Person and that of Orange which lies north of the North Carolina Railroad is given to the east. I would simply amend that line by throwing Person county which is missionary territory for Presbyterianism into the western Presbytery. This line of division would give the eastern Presbytery thirteen ministers, or fourteen if Durham succeeds in getting a minister for all his time, and twenty-four churches. The western Presbytery would have seventeen ministers and thirty-six churches. It would make a more equal division to throw the whole of Orange county into the eastern Presbytery, making the line the eastern boundary of Person, the northern, western and southern boundaries of Orange, and the eastern boundary of Chatham. This would give the East sixteen or seventeen ministers and twenty-eight churches and the West fourteen ministers and thirty-two churches. I think that the West ought to make up its mind to accede to this latter line. The proposition of the chairman to submit the question of division by the line which he indicated to the fall meeting of Presbytery was a very fair one. Its design was to give opportunity for discussion in the spring bringing the matter fairly before the minds of the Presbytery so that they might deliberate upon it during the summer, and then vote more intelligently in the fall. The proposition however was rejected and the Presbytery adopted the majority report, viz: that it is inexpedient to divide. Upon the declaration of this result notice was immediately given that the matter would be brought up again next fall. The reason of this was that the meeting was a small one, there being present only eighteen ministers and nine ruling elders, whereas the full complement of Presbytery is thirty ministers and sixty elders. The matter deserves a fuller hearing. It was thought also that it should be more fully discussed.

I propose in my next to give some reasons why I favor division. I hope that others will give reasons both pro and con and that next fall we shall have a full Presbytery, a free discussion, and consequently a more satisfactory vote. C. M.

GENERAL ASSEMBLIES ON THE SABBATH.

In 1812 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church drew up and sent to Congress a petition against the opening of the mails and the delivery of letters on the Sabbath, but the prayer was not granted.

In 1814 another petition for the same object was drafted, and two thousand copies were printed to be distributed throughout the Church for subscription. A committee of three was appointed to solicit the concurrence of other religious denominations in the same object, and a committee of one from each Presbytery to correspond with the other committee to gather up the petitions and forward them to Congress. This consisted of about forty persons, of whom Rev. James Hall, D. D., of Statesville, was one. The same year they sent out a pastoral letter to the churches on the observance of the Sabbath, with a recommendation that, when the letter is read to the churches, the ministers preach on the subject. The result of these petitions is not formally stated, but it was a failure, and another effort was made in 1815; a committee was appointed on the subject of petitioning Congress; the committee reported May 24th, and their report was made the order of the day for the next morning. We do not find it taken up then, but on the 29th, when a strong paper was adopted, and all the churches were earnestly recommended to petition Congress. The Presbyteries were urged to circulate petitions and forward them to Congress by the 1st of the next January. This did not, it seems, accomplish the object, and in 1816 one member from each Synod was made a committee to correspond with influential men in all the Congressional Districts of the United States, and engage their co-operation in preparing and circulating petitions praying the repeal of the law permitting the transportation of the mails on the Lord's day.

This is a brief notice of what we have gathered from the printed minutes of the General Assembly from 1789 to 1820, showing that our Church has not been indifferent to this important matter. E. F. R.

LETTER FROM DR. G. B. TAYLOR, ROME ITALY.

[From the Biblical Recorder.]

MESSRS. EDITORS: Some weeks ago, I wrote home of the arrival of Dr. Somerville, a venerable Scotch Presbyterian minister, who after successful evangelistic labors, not only in France and India, and Australia, but in several Italian cities, had come "to preach the gospel to them that are at Rome also." He has now finished his work here, and I am able to speak intelligently of it and of the man himself. Though considerably past three score and ten, and with his temples adorned with long, flowing white locks, he has the vigor and vivacity of a strong young man. One day, without fatigue, he made the entire circuit of the city, without the walls, on foot, a distance of at least twelve miles; nor did three services a day, in which he was always the principal speaker, and, in the more public service, a most energetic one, ever seem to tire him. He would also join with great spirit in the singing, encouraging by his gestures the congregation to do the same; and yet he always seemed to come out fresh, like a blooded horse, head up to the end of the course. In person, he is dignified and commanding, like Dr. Jetor or Dr. Sears, and with a smile as sweet and genial, and manners as thoroughly winning, as I have ever seen.

His methods are very simple, consisting, for the most part, of the preaching of the gospel, numerous prayer meetings, and the abundant use of new and stirring music. Even before coming, he secured an invitation from leading evangelical workers, and after his arrival he succeeded in gaining a co-operation on the part of evangelical Christians, more cordial and unanimous than has ever before been secured by any person or for any object in this city. He was accompanied by Maj. Colquhoun, who cared diligently for all business matters, and took the deepest interest in the spiritual part of their mission. It was rather singular that they put up at "The Minerva," a first-class hotel in the heart of old Rome, which is, however, not very much resorted to by English and American travellers, but is noted for being the resort of priests and cardinals, and clericals generally. Our friends labor, as we learned quite incidentally, entirely at their own charges, receiving no salary whatever from any source. But they are under the auspices of a Society in Glasgow, which, as we suppose, provides for the not light expenses of extensive advertising and renting large buildings for the more public meetings.

After a fortnight of noon prayer meetings, and of more private meetings at 9 o'clock in the evening, in both of which Italians and English-speaking people participated, the latter predominating, and after nearly a month of choir practicing, all things were ready for the theatre meetings. The Argentina Theatre had been secured from the managers, and half the rent had been paid. The formal consent of the Questura had been secured, and a less formal one from the office of the Sindico. Huge posters on the walls greeted the eye at every turn, announcing that Dr. Somerville would discourse on the gospel at such a time and place, and would be interpreted as he had been in Florence and Naples. Thousands of small hand-bills were also distributed by English-speaking and by Italian Christians. All these preparations had not failed to excite the ire of the clerical party; and the clerical sheets loudly protested against the proposed services, and especially against the use of a theatre belonging to the city of Rome, for such a purpose. On the Sunday afternoon preceding the first meeting (which was to be held the next night), I went over to see Dr. Somerville at his hotel, and found him and a few other Christian friends in great distress, as a notice had just been received from the Sindico that the theatre could not be used for religious services; nor were the efforts made to change him, of any avail, though he was very courteous. Two or three hours were spent in consultation and prayer. Count Papengouth, taught by his trials and answers to prayer in connection with his work in Naples, was, of the whole company, the most sanguine that God would open some way for the holding of the meeting, not to hold which would be, humanly speaking, a great disaster to us and a great triumph for the foes of the gospel. Then he and Maj. Colquhoun went out to try to secure the only other large theatre that seemed at all available. They were, however, unsuccessful; the manager seemed not specially opposed to letting them have it; but it was impossible, as a play was actually advertised for the following evening. We all felt greatly distressed and disheartened; but a few brethren gathered, as usual, in Dr. Somerville's room, after the evening services, and continued to pray over the matter. The next morning Signor Cocorda proposed another visit to the manager of this theatre, with the hope of securing it, perhaps, for an afternoon service. What was, their astonishment and joy to find that it could be had in the evening, as the manager at 10 o'clock the preceding night had received a note from the prima donna stating that she had been taken sick and could not sing, so that he had been constrained to give up the proposed representation. He also agreed to rent the theater for another evening, and to rent for the same purpose, any desired number of evenings, a smaller theatre in another part of the city, and all at a very reasonable rate. Was not this a most signal answer to prayer? Who can hear it and not feel his faith strengthened?

The time was short, but by diligent means, our placards were striped with notices of the change, and though the meeting was smaller than it would have been, it was, under the circumstances, a success. Subsequently, another meeting was held in the same place, but, though very interesting, was largely interfered with by the rain pouring in torrents. This theatre, the "Alhambra," is new, and, situated just across the Tiber, is reached by a new toll bridge. It does not, like most of the old theatres here, belong to the city. Both the owner and the manager showed themselves to be liberal men. Indeed, had they not been, the tremendous pressure brought to bear upon them would have led them to break their contract with us for even the first meeting, as they were assured that the theatre would be less patronized by the public. As it was, it was refused to us after the second meeting, despite a provision of the contract to the contrary.

Besides the two meetings referred to, five others were held at the small theatre Manzoni, which is in a remote corner of the city, and is next door to the English Baptist chapel, at which "Father Grassi" ministers. These meetings were exceedingly successful. The building, which holds 1,200 persons, was always crowded, and multitudes who came could not be admitted. The audiences were evidently in full sympathy with the spirit of the meeting, and perfect order prevailed, no occasion occurring for the intervention of the Mayor's representative, who was sent to the meeting, nor of the police, who were present in force. Indeed, there could not have been, at any meeting held by Dr. Somerville in Rome, the slightest pretext for a disturbance, as he refrained from all semblance of controversy, and even maintained a dignified silence, not only as to the attacks made upon himself, but also in regard to the failure to hold the proposed meeting in the Argentina. The choir, consisting of some fifty persons from all our churches, carefully trained under the supervision of Dr. S. himself, by Mons. Garnier, head teacher at the Waldensian schools, and Sig. Cocorda, rendered efficient service, and often even the public would join in the choruses. The preaching was striking and abounded in incidents and illustrations—the more welcome because not much used by Italian preachers, while the staple was always the great cardinal doctrines of the gospel. The delivery of the preacher was also very impressive; and the Word lost far less in being interpreted than would have been supposed, as it was spoken with great rapidity, and as rapidly put into terse Italian by his excellent interpreter, Sig. Cocorda. There were, of course, things in Dr. Somerville which were open to criticism, and were criticised. But, on the whole, he certainly achieved a great success, as he won the affection and regard of all who came in contact with him, and the more in proportion as they knew him.

In addition to the services described, special ones were held for children, for soldiers, and for young men, and Dr. S. closed his labors with a sort of convention of Christian workers, at which each brother present freely expressed his views as to the modes of evangelization in Italy. There was also a breakfast given by the Major and the Doctor, at which there was an interchange of kindly sentiments, and every one felt his heart beat more tenderly toward his brother.

The practical Anglo-Saxon will demand, "But what were the results? How many were converted?" I reply that we cannot name a single person, and say that he was converted during these meetings. Nevertheless, we believe that great good was accomplished. Generally, when souls are converted in Italy, and also, I am informed, in other mission fields, it is after a very gradual preparation. We almost always find that one presenting himself to the church, tells of having heard or read something long before which made a first impression. Therefore, it is allowable to believe that of the many who heard the burning, simple presentation of the gospel in the late meetings, there will be some in the future who will come and refer to them as having given either a first impression, or at least a help, toward reaching the light and the truth. It has also been a good thing to have public attention called to the gospel by large public meetings, in which the way of life has been described without any polemic. It has been, too, a new assertion of the freedom of speech, and a new proof of the liberty accorded to us, despite of opposition. We are assured, moreover, of an excellent general impression produced, and the opening of the eyes of some who misunderstood our true character and the scope of our work. They are saying in the "Monti," all around the theatre Manzoni: "After all, these Protestants are not Infidels, but are Christians like ourselves, perhaps better." Finally, we have all been knit closer together, have felt anew the power there is in united work, and have been stimulated to new zeal and enterprize, and our Italian evangelists have been led to see the effectiveness of the simple gospel, specially when presented freshly and with apposite illustrations. In fact, some of us have felt a strong desire that good American brethren would send Mr. Moody over to us, to clinch the nail which Dr. Somerville has so well driven.

TELL ME ABOUT THE MASTER.

Tell me about the Master!
I am weary and worn to-night,
The day lies behind me in shadow,
And only the evening is light;
Light with a radiant glory
That lingers about the West;
But my heart is aweary, aweary,
And longs like a child's for rest.

Tell me about the Master!
Of His earthly obedience sweet;
How He wrought at His father's work-bench,
And washed His disciples' feet.
For my hands are so tired of toiling,
Work seems such a wearisome thing;
Yet, once 'twas ennobled and hallowed
By the service of Jesus the King.

Tell me about the Master!
Of the hills He in loneliness trod,
When the tears and the blood of His anguish,
Dropped down on Judea's sod.
For to me life's seventy mile-stones
But a sorrowful journey mark
Rough lies the hill-country behind me,
The mountains before me are dark.

Tell me about the Master!
Of the wrongs that He freely forgave;
Of His mercy and tender compassion;
Of His love that was mighty to save.
For my heart is aweary, aweary
Of the woes and temptations of life,
Of the error that stalks in the noonday,
Of falsehood and malice and strife.

Yet I know that whatever of sorrow,
Or pain, or temptation befall,
The infinite Master hath suffered,
And knoweth and pitieth all.
So tell me the sweet old story.
That fails on each wound like a balm.
And the heart that was bruised and broken
Grows patient and strong and calm.

—The Advance.

LETTER FROM REV. DR. R. L. DABNEY.

LIVERPOOL, May 29th, 1880.

Messrs. Editors:—I reached here last night from Edinburgh, somewhat the "worse for wear," by reason of the bleak gales of the North Atlantic and the scarcely less bleak breezes of this hyperborean region. I am reminded that I am, indeed, on the latitude of Labrador. In Edinburgh the other evening I read very well at my window at 8 o'clock, the twilight was by no means gone at 10, and it began again before 2 A. M. They say that at midsummer night is still shorter. I think Don Phœbus must then conclude that the time for going to bed is scarcely long enough to make it worth while to take off his clothes; so he just lies down for a short nap, with all his toggery on; and as this is described as very "shiny," we have here a truly philosophical solution of the fact that it never gets dark. The people here say: "It is very fine"—meaning, of course, the weather; and the sun does shine, right cheerfully, most of the day, (with from one to three showers between times, to lay the dust). But the wind—and it is their good wind, from the west—is precisely such a one as would make the old Virginia farmers say, in the afternoon: "Well, all the peaches must go to-night;" and would send him to covering up his tobacco-plant beds from the frost. But somehow the frost does not quite come. The temperature of the ocean around protects them from that; and while we mortals from more genial climes button up our heaviest great coats to the chin, the grass, oats, and potatoes grow a little still. The country is generally very green; but not a bit more so, to my eye, than our own limestone lands are in June. An Edinburgh paper, two days ago, congratulated the country upon the fine weather. He said it gave promise of an early and good harvest, though rather too dry and warm for a good hay crop. The thermometer for a week had ranged between the extremes of 35 deg. and 61 deg. I see that when the attempt is made to till any summer crop, every expedient is made to get the utmost of what little warmth the earth has. The soil is ridged very high as high as a two horse plough can bank it up, in very narrow ridges, and the seed potato is put in the very top.

They say: First impressions are not to be trusted. My first impressions are, that British agriculture is a harder master than our old Virginian was; and that commerce and manufactures are unspeakably harder. One can only note what his eyes see. The potatoes are now, in a multitude of places, receiving the first hoeing. Women have been in the majority in every hoe-gang I have seen, but always with a man to lead and boss them; and I assure you they work "like fighting fire." The farm laborers to whom I have been close are not as clean as our negro laborers on well-regulated places, not a whit better clad, nor one whit less stolid looking and subservient. In walking a few squares on the "High Street" of Glasgow, (the street leading to the cathedral, the Barony church, and the fashionable cemetery), I met six women bare-footed, and at least a hundred bare-headed. My friend and I, mind you, had our winter overcoats buttoned up carefully. The next morning I found myself in the compartment of the car with an American also going to Edinburgh. He asked me if I had seen much of the squalor of the Glasgow poor? I replied, that I had not looked for it. Ah! said he, "It is disgusting." He then added: "Its the whiskey does it." I was not qualified to affirm or deny. But I thought. If so, then we see one of the advantages of our old system: that the main results of the labor of the poor could not be wasted on whiskey, because they were authoritatively directed into the more useful channels of shoes, clothing, bread and meat, shelter and religious instruction for the poor, by hands effectually influenced for their good, not only by conscience and family affection, but by interest. Our system was for the laboring people, the best temperance society the world ever saw.—Central Presbyterian.

I'M TOO BUSY.

A merchant sat at his office desk; various letters were spread before him; his whole being was absorbed in the intricacies of his business. A zealous friend of mankind entered the office.

"Mr. ——, I want to interest you a little in a new effort for a benevolent cause," said the good man.

The merchant cut him by replying, "Sir, you must excuse me, but really I'm too busy at present to do anything."

"When shall I call again, sir?"

"I cannot tell; I'm very busy. I'm busy every day; excuse me, sir; I wish you good morning." Then bowing the intruder out of the office, he resumed the study of his papers. The merchant had frequently repulsed the friends of humanity in this manner. No matter what was their object, he was always too busy to listen to their claims. He had even told his minister that he was too busy for anything but to make money.

But one morning a disagreeable stranger stepped very softly to his side, laying a cold, moist hand upon his bow, and saying, "Go home with me." The merchant laid down his pen; his head grew dizzy; his stomach felt faint and sick; he left the counting room, went home, and retired to his bedchamber. His new, unwelcome visitor had followed him, and now took his place by the bedside, whispering ever and anon, "You must go with me." A cold chill settled upon the merchant's heart, dim specters of ships, notes and lands fluttered before his excited mind. Still his pulse beat slower, his heart heaved heavily, thick films gathered over his eyes, his tongue refused to speak. Then the merchant knew that the name of the visitor was Death.

All other claimants on his attention, except the friends of Mammon, had always found a quick dismissal in the magic phrase, "I'm too busy." Humanity, mercy, religion, had alike begged his influence, means and attention in vain. But when death came, the excuse was powerless; he was compelled to have leisure to die. Let us beware how we make ourselves too busy to secure life's great end. When the excuse rises to our lips, and we are about to say we are too busy to do good, let us remember we cannot be too busy to die.—American Tract Society.

THE BISHOP AND THE INFIDEL.

During the sessions of the Northern Methodist General Conference in Cincinnati, Bishop Simpson preached in the opera house to an immense audience, on the "Supposed Failure of Christianity." Later in the same day, Ingersoll lectured in the same room. The Bishop said:

"Dispel all fear. There is no danger of Christianity. It is standing securely. The glory of God is on it. But you tell me that here and there is found a man who attacks it. That is a very proof of its truth, for the inspired prophet said in the last days there shall be scoffers walking in their own ungodly lust. If there were no scoffers at Christianity, I might doubt its truth. I know there are such scoffers, and I hear them around, but they are few and far between. A lecturer might come and occupy a hall, but the churches are full; there are crowds that go to hear the Gospel. The nations gathering around the cross, and the beauty of our Lord Jesus Christ is attracting more and more. The Church is established on the top of the mountain, and all nations are flowing unto it.

"Yes, flowing up hill! Yes, up the mountain side! When I was a boy, I said, 'That is false rhetoric—a mistake—flowing to the top of the mountain; it cannot be.' I went to the workshop of a friend, and I saw in the dust a parcel of steel filings. And he had a magnet, and as he drew near the steel filings they were attracted to it and kissed the magnet. Then I said, give me a magnet large enough, place it on the mountain top, and it will draw all the nations unto it. The magnet is the Lord Jesus Christ, for He said, 'If I be lifted up from the earth I will draw all men unto me.' Blessed be God, we are beginning to see the fulfillment of the promise. God hasten the day speedily when gladness shall fill this earth, and o'erspread our globe."

BRING OUT THE ROPE.

The Swiss guides are heroic men. Tremendous exploits of strength and courage are the scenes which in old age they review. Mountain climbers are dependent upon their skill and experience, but no matter what their knowledge of Alpine safe-guards or perils may be, they cannot secure even the hope of safety to those who ask their help, except on one condition, and that is their willingness to be bound together in different passes.

The party sets out in union, with kindly intentions to be helpful to each other. They have a book-knowledge of the way, but every step is new to their feet, and they must trust their guide. For awhile a common bond of personal welfare is enough. But see, the guide has halted and waits for the company to listen. They hear his voice in that clear Alpine air, ringing in stirring tone,—"Courage, gentlemen, there is danger here; we must tie the ropes around each man, and protect each other!" It is a deceitful snow-bridge over an abysmal cleft in the blue ice! If one man ventures to walk across alone, he may drop between those frozen walls. Bring out the rope and bind these adventurers so firmly that if a man falls, the strength and steadiness of his fellows may hold him securely. Woe betide the man who goes over the horrible glacier region of Switzerland alone!

The experienced guides, who know the dangers of our life-journey, tell us that union is strength, that ties of mutual faith and common interest are not all we need, and they bring out the rope of true-hearted association to double the force of each man's weight. We have done it in faith, trusting in our Lord, because we know that there are dangerous passes in the narrow way to the heavenly heights.

A Christian association needs the strength of all the men and women it can link together. Give us the additional security of your influence, dear reader, and accept for yourself the safety of the bond which holds us.—Watchman.

"BORN THERE."

The obscurest church in the obscurest hamlet that has been honored with being the birth place of many sons, or a few devoted sons, may be more illustrious in that day than the grandest cathedral in the most splendid metropolis. The day hastens in which the Lord will write up his people. It is for us to determine what he shall say to us.

This makes the church something more than a school for training christians, or a hospital for nursing christians, or a hotel for feeding and lodging christians. The church is a family where christians are born. It is the greatest reproach, therefore, that can come to a church, to be childless. No holiday recreation is ours, listening to sermons for the sake of the delightful spiritual sensations they may produce, going to church to see the architecture, to hear the music, to shake hands with friends, to be charmed with the speaker's eloquence. To you the brightest jewel in all the kingdom of heaven, if you reach there, will be the lost soul which you picked from the dust and polished with your toil and care, and set in the crown of your Redeemer.

The only earthly glory and distinction which the church has, is that of being the birth-place of souls. Not a train passes the obscure town of Franklin, from which some one does not look forth to that little white cottage, and say, "Webster was born there." Not a traveler passes the village of Farmington who does not read the inscription on that rock at the roadside, "Henry Wilson was born here." Not a steamer passes up the Rappahannock, from whose deck some one does not point to yonder tall tree on the horizon, with the remark, "Washington was born there." And if the angels ever look this way to make a passing remark about this church where we are gathered to-day, it is to say, "This and that man were born in her." And if the Lord Jesus ever casts a look this way from the heavenly glory, He will probably pass our stained windows and our symmetrical architecture, and our artistic singing and preaching, and the only approving remark He will make will be, "This man and that man were born here." If we give Him no occasion to make this remark our church is no more to Him than any secular and unconsecrated temple.—A. J. Gordon.

THE BOOK TO LIVE BY.

Joseph Cook tersely says: "Do you know a book that you are willing to put under your head for a pillow when you lie dying? Very well; that is the book you want to study when you are living. There is but one such book in the world. For one, I have made up my mind not to put under my head when I lie dying, anything written by Voltaire, Strauss or Parker. If you can tell me what you want for a dying pillow, I will tell you what you want for a pillar of fire in life—that is, the Bible, spiritually and scientifically understood by being transmuted into deeds. Sentiment is worth nothing until it becomes principle, and principle is worth nothing until it becomes action."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

It is announced that for sanitary reasons adduced in the report of the United Synagogue of British Jews, the Council have resolved that the use of mourners' cloaks at funerals be discontinued.

A report just published shows that the total income in the last year of thirty-four of the principal religious and philanthropic societies holding their meetings in May was not less than £1,216,000.

A curious fact is noticed by the Rev. Mr. Ayerst in a paper in the last Indian Antiquary on the Garo Hill tribes, which is that they have included Queen Victoria, "the mother of the Feringhis," amongst their goddesses, and worship her as they do Mahadeva."

At the annual breakfast of the members of the Sabbath Alliance of Scotland, held in Edinburgh on Saturday, a resolution was passed to resist all encroachments made upon the Sabbath. Among the gentlemen who took part in the proceedings were the Revs. Dr. Goold, Dr. Begg, Provost Swan, and several foreign and colonial visitors.

The Aonio Paleario Circolo is an association of Italian Protestants, named after a martyr of the sixteenth century, which has been formed for the promotion of christian study and exercises, much after the plan of the Young Men's Christian Associations. It has a library, reading-room, French and English schools, has provided lectures on subjects appropriate to its purpose, and is establishing classes for the study of the Bible.

It is about one hundred years since the commencement of modern foreign missions. There are at least one million and a half of converts from heathenism. The Bible has been translated into two hundred and twenty-six different languages, and the copies circulated amount to 148,000,000. More than seventy barbarous languages have been endowed with a grammar and literature.

The will of Mrs. Anna Tyson, late of White Lodge, Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, has been proved by the Rev. Charles Haddon Spurgeon and the Rev. William Joseph Bramley Moore, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. Besides other legacies, the sum of £25,000 consols is left to be appropriated and held upon trust to pay nine annuities, and subject thereto for the Stockwell Orphanage, founded by Mr. Spurgeon. The residue of the real and personal estate is given by the testatrix to the Pastor's College, also founded by Mr. Spurgeon.

It appears from a return just made that during the last school year 387 new Church of England schools were opened, and that there was an addition of 53,472 to the number of children in average attendance; while each child in a Church school earned upon an average 15s. 2¾d. of Government grant, or 2½d. more than in the previous year. The Wesleyans added five to the number of their schools, and 3,174 to the number of children in average attendance; the British and other Protestant denominational schools were increased by twenty-seven, and the average attendance by 7,072 children; and forty-five new Roman Catholic schools were opened, with 10,072 more children in attendance. The Board schools opened did not equal by fifty-five those started by voluntary agency; while the average cost of every child educated in a Board school is £2 2s. 0¾d. or 3d. more than in the previous year. The cost in British schools is £1 45s. 10d. or 5½d. more than in the previous year; while in Church of England schools the average expenditure was £1 14s. 7¾d., or 6¾d. more than in the previous year. In the Wesleyan schools the outlay was £1 14s. 5¾d. per child, or 1s. 4½d. more than in the years before; but in the Roman Catholic schools the expenditure was only £1 10s. 10¾d. per child, or 5½d. less than the previous year—a fact due, no doubt, to the gratuitous instruction given by members of religious orders. £600,000 were contributed last year by private donors for Church of England education.

THE BURIALS BILL.

The Burials Bill which has for so long exercised the British Parliament and people, is a source of perplexity to Americans. Why there should be so much anxiety on the part of Non-conformists to secure burial in Church of England graveyards is a source of wonder on the one hand; why there should be so much unreason and bigotry exercised to prevent such burial is quite inexplicable, on the other.

The Church of England as connected with the State is supported in part by Non-conformists, and none but the most absurdly unreasonable bigots deny to Dissenters the right in common law to burial in parish graveyards. The right of property is thus expressed in a British contemporary: "The Church of England incumbent is not the freeholder of the graveyard, but its custodian. He has no authority to remove or alter any gravestone, and though he may use the surface—for example, the incumbent may turn his sheep into the graveyard—the soil belongs to the parishioners."

The civil right to bury being conceded to the Non-conformists, they claim that the right should not be hedged with conditions which render it valueless. The Church of England demands that in each case of burial the English service shall be read or the burial shall be in silence—that the Church of England rites having been declined, the body of a Dissenter should be treated with as little respect as that of a brute.

Thus the issue is joined. The Establishment seeing in the victory of the Dissenters a step towards downfall has fought, and is fighting hard, but there is little doubt that the Burials Bill recently introduced, will pass into law. It has been accepted by the House of Lords, and the government majority in the House of Commons is pledged to its support. The bill in providing for burial with any Christian rites that may be desired, excludes Jewish or Infidel ceremonies.

DEATH OF REV. DR. HENRY A. BOARDMAN

Rev. Dr. Boardman died on the 15th inst., at his residence in Philadelphia. His death was quite sudden. He had complained the day before of some illness, which was not thought to be serious.

Dr. Boardman was born in the city of Troy, N. Y., on January 9th, 1808. He graduated at Yale College in 1829, and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1833. Immediately after leaving the Seminary he assumed the pastorate of the Tenth Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, and there remained in faithful service until 1876, when the pastorial relation was dissolved. He still however held the affections of his flock, and became Pastor Emeritus, hearing the title until his death.

Able in debate and wise in council, throughout his term of nearly half a century of ministerial service, Dr. Boardman has been one of the notables of the Presbyterian church. Latterly his service has been with the Northern Church, but his record belongs to the Church at large. He was elected Professor of Pastoral Theology in Princeton Theological Seminary in 1854 but declined. In 1853 he was Moderator of the General Assembly.

Dr. Boardman published several works which greatly enhanced his reputation.

THE ROBERTSON SMITH CASE.

From all that has come to us, we are disposed to think that the Free Church of Scotland has rid itself of a very disagreeable duty in a manner which can tend only to its discredit. First accounts of its action in the case of Professor Robertson Smith, of Aberdeen, seemed indeed to represent that the Church of Chalmers had trailed its banner and ignominiously surrendered to the enemies of truth. Later accounts indicate that the result is a sort of compromise, to which the Church was led by a desire for peace from the distractions that were hampering it.

The Presbyterian presents its readers with perhaps as satisfactory a view of the state of the case as any we have seen. It says: "The sum of all that was done was that Professor Smith was not regularly tried, was not removed from his Chair as a Professor, or his place as a minister of the Free Church. But he was called to the bar of the Assembly and admonished by the Moderator. We must infer from this that the Assembly judged him worthy of some censure. Following this he is said to have made "a very humble and becoming speech," and a lady, in a private letter, which has found its way into an English Congregational newspaper, says of the same:

"It was awfully exciting. The people rose en masse when they heard of the majority, and cheered, waving their hats and handkerchiefs again and again. It was a grand sight, although some thought it not quite seemly in a church court. Then Professor Smith was conducted to the bar (you can imagine the excitement at that moment) and was admonished by the Moderator. After that he seemed not to know what to do, and there was a pause. However, Professor Lindsay, who was sitting next him, told him to speak, and it was splendid.'

"Professor Smith had the galleries with him, and the students were especially prominent in the cheering which greeted him. The judgment of the Assembly is certainly a little curious. It is very nearly a copy of the famous verdict of a civil jury, to-wit: 'Not guilty, but don't do it again.' Indeed, the fair lady, whose enthusiastic description we have given above, says that 'he promised not to do so again.' What he will not 'do' is not fully explained, but coupled with the intimation that he made a submissive speech, we infer that he will not trouble the Church again with critical novelties and rash speculations about the age and authorship of the books of the Bible. The final disposition of the case will not satisfy many in the Free Church, and will, to some degree, tend to weaken confidence in the soundness of its professors and many of its younger ministry in other Presbyterian churches. Alas! that this should ever be said of the noble Free Church of Scotland."

HISTORY OF NORTH CAROLINA;

FROM THE EARLIEST DISCOVERIES TO THE PRESENT TIME. BY JNO. W. MOORE. Raleigh: Alfred Williams & Co., 1880. Vol. 1, pp. 495.

Encouraged by the reception given to his school history, the author ventured upon this—a more elaborate work. Several months have elapsed since the appearance of this volume, not quite long enough to form a mature opinion of its merits, we acknowledge, but long enough to have traversed the entire narrative attempted.

It would hardly be just to compare this work with any of its predecessors, for none of them can be considered more than fragments. No continuous historical narrative of North Carolina has ever been written before, and surely none have half the interest which attaches to this. At every point the historian shows a spirit of fairness, to each new incident he gives freshness, and above all he succeeds in carrying along the story of the different settlements in a way which conveys to the reader a panoramic view of the events so frequently complex.

The filial devotion which the historian shows on every page, we would expect to unbalance his judgment; but on the contrary historical difficulties are weighed and discussed on their merits, and the amount of research accomplished will be more thoroughly appreciated, as the book is better known. We are glad to note in this connection that Mr. Moore frankly corrects his statement as to the part borne by John Porter in the Indian massacre of 1711, entirely exonerating him from all part in this dreadful work. This correction we believe is founded upon recent researches made by the Hon. Geo. Davis, in a lecture entitled "Studies in Colonial History," delivered before the Wilmington Historical and Scientific Society.

The notes which are added on nearly every page, increase very much the local interest attaching to the general narrative, and we are glad to see that the author has taken this method of introducing such entertaining items. To the North Carolinian, for whom the work is intended, we think it will prove to be a popular feature.

Whatever a more careful analysis may reveal as to the treatment of individual items of history, we do not hesitate to cordially commend this history. It breathes with fervent patriotism, and while giving rank to Mr. Moore as a historian, it will serve to inspire Carolinians with more earnest love for their State. We do not believe that the public acts of the most devoted North Carolinian since the war, have served so patriotic an end as this rehearsal of our good old mother's vicissitudes. If North Carolinians need one thing more than another, it is State pride, and if one can read this simple story without becoming a more dutiful son, his love of the State must be cold indeed.

We devoured this first volume with avidity, and await the appearance of the second with impatient interest.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We call special attention to change in the opening of the session of Union Theological Seminary. The change has been since the publication of the catalogue. See the advertisement.

On our first page we publish the greater part of a letter from Rev. Dr. Geo. B. Taylor, Baptist Missionary to Rome. It will be found interesting, and our readers will appreciate the modest delicacy with which Dr. Taylor in preferring another omits all reference to himself.

Theebaw, the blood-thirsty, besotted wretch who reigns over Burmah, is not dead as was reported some weeks ago. A rebellion, headed by a fugitive prince who had found refuge in India, is gathering formidable proportions. The Indian Government will not interpose farther than to protect the British frontier and prevent Indian subjects from taking any part in the rising. Britain will find her interest however in the dethronement of Theebaw. Insurgents seeking an asylum on British territory will be protected on laying down their arms.

The secular journals of our large cities in general follow the impulse of interest and pander to irreligion, but occasionally one strikes out boldly against popular wickedness, as witness the Philadelphia Inquirer on the infidel Ingersoll: "Bob Ingersoll, tooting his blasphemy from town to town like any other peripatetic showman, is not as dangerous a person as some very sensible people seem to consider him. He is not the first infidel who has flung his puny self against the invulnerable faith of mankind, and been dashed to pieces against it. Other Bob Ingersolls have done what he has done, have had their short day of gaping auditors, and then gone down into the slough of oblivion for which they wrought. They have not multiplied, however, and the Star that shone over the manger at Bethlehem, and guided the Wise Men to the place where the Son of God lay, is day by day becoming more and more the guiding star of all mankind. Religion does not suffer from the Bob Ingersolls. Many of them have beaten their weak hands and brains against it, but always ineffectually. The Bob Ingersolls have alone suffered from their assaults; they have one by one disappeared into the darkness they themselves invoked, while religion has grown into more splendid life and light. He is not dangerous, for the day of the Bob Ingersolls is short, and that of religion as long as the immortality, which is the corner-stone upon which it is builded."

In some very sensible and entirely unpartisan remarks on the nominations made and to be made for the Presidency, the Christian Intelligencer calls attention to the fact that the glittering prize is seldom grasped by those who most eagerly seek it, and looking back cites Henry Clay, Webster, Douglass and others. Another note bringing forward an incident we do not remember to have seen elsewhere recorded, we give entire:

"Another lesson is the renewed evidence that, in this country, the common school is the nursery of the State. The curious little fact, that the two men nominated at Chicago taught the same district school in Vermont within two years of each other, is only exceptional in its dramatic co-incidence. Another little school house has a stone still on which is inscribed the fact that Judge Church, Henry J. Raymond and Daniel S. Dickinson all passed over it as teachers of the school. It is very plain to be seen where one at least of the stones whereon the Republic rests, is to be looked for. But it is a corner-stone in which something more than the newspaper and the spelling-book need to be deposited and sealed up forever. For the Word of the Living God is the pillar and ground of the State."

Here is a bit of human nature brought to the front by the Christian at Work:

A correspondent from a neighboring city writes us deprecating "the stingy economy which just now bids fair to keep relatives and friends from the grave, and which would reduce the funeral services to the most barren rites." A consultation of the directory shows the writer to be an undertaker.

In another column a correspondent kindly furnishes news from Davidson College. To that article we refer our readers for news in general and in detail. We add here a few items gathered from the Charlotte Observer: The Alumni Association elected the following gentlemen as officers for the ensuing year: President, Frank H. Fries of Salem, N. C.; Vice Presidents, Anthony White, Sr., of South Carolina, Judge James Baker of Florida; Recording Secretary, C. McG. Hepburn of Davidson College; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. W. S. Lacy of Jonesboro, N. C.; Treasurer, Rev. Dr. W. A. Wood of Statesville. Col. John L. Brown of Charlotte was elected trustee, vice Col. B. F. Little, deceased. Hon. D. G. Fowle of Raleigh was re-elected for four years, and Rev. J. B. Mack, D. D., of Columbia was also chosen trustee. W. H. Stewart of Fort Mills, S. C., was chosen as the next Annual Orator. F. H. Fries, president, of North Carolina, Anthony White of South Carolina, Malcom McCoy of Georgia, F. P. Ramsay of Florida and W. S. Lacy of North Carolina were constituted an executive committee, with the request to solicit from all the members contributions for the endowment of an alumni professorship in the college. A very encouraging start was made in procuring subscriptions for a professorship, many of the members present responding very liberally. The members of the graduating class received the degree of A. B., with the exception of T. H. DeGraffenried, upon whom the degree of B. S. was conferred.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

We announced last week the discontinuance of The Gospel in All Lands, in consequence of failing health of Rev. A. B. Simpson, the publisher and proprietor. A card from Mr. Simpson states that "should it be found necessary finally to suspend the publication, the balance due on the various subscriptions will be returned at the earliest possible moment."

Later Mr. S. says: "We are now hopeful that arrangements in progress will, by the Divine blessing, secure the continuance of the Magazine from July."

Licentiate L. A. McLean, graduate of the class of 1880, Union Theological Seminary, removes to West Virginia to take charge of the churches of Hinton and Coal Valley and the mission field adjacent in Greenbrier Presbytery. His post office is Quinnimont, Fayette county, W. Va.

Another mother in Israel has laid aside her work for the rest that remaineth to the people of God. Our obituary columns record the death of Mrs. Rachel Morrow, the mother of Rev. C. N. Morrow. Many friends in our Synod will sympathize with the brother and the family in their loss.

On the 13th inst., Shiloh church, in Orange Presbytery, made out a call for the pastoral services of Rev. J. W. Primrose one-fourth of his time. Oxford church has extended a call for one-half of the time of Mr. Primrose.

We are pleased to learn that there is increased hopefulness in the Goldsboro church. Everything moves forward earnestly and harmoniously. There have been several additions by letter recently.

SHILOH CHURCH.

Shiloh church has just made a call to the Rev. John W. Primrose, and will be most fortunate in securing the services of so good and acceptable a man. Being a weak church Shiloh is compelled to unite with some other church or churches in employing a pastor, and is now included with Oxford and Grassy Creek churches, in Mr. Primrose's field of labor. This is the only feasible and the most desirable arrangement that could be made. The Presbyterian Union of the churches of Granville county meets at Shiloh, the fifth Sunday in August, and will, we hope, be largely attended. We wish, if practicable, to have with us on that occasion, Dr. Jacob Henry Smith, who on occasions heretofore, has preached for us so acceptably. W. M.

CONGREGATIONAL MEETING.

WHITE PLAIN CHURCH,
Sabbath Morning, June 20th, 1880.

A congregational meeting was had by electing Elder A. H. Perry as moderator and Stephen T. Buie as secretary, after which the following preamble and resolutions were reported and adopted:

WHEREAS, At the meeting of the Home Missionary Committee of Wilmington Presbytery, held at Burgaw, Pender county, May 28th, 1880, our highly esteemed pastor, the Rev. H. B. Garriss, was elected evangelist to labor in the eastern bounds of our Presbytery; therefore at the request of the committee and our beloved pastor, we this day have held a congregational meeting in our church and the following proceedings were had:

Resolved 1. That we reluctantly part with our highly esteemed pastor, but if the committee and Presbytery, after mature deliberation, think in their judgment that such action will advance the cause of Christ and promote the cause of Presbyterianism in the bounds of our Presbytery, we will bow submissively and let him go.

Resolved 2. That in parting with him we feel that we are parting with one who has been a true and faithful pastor, and one who is loved and appreciated by his congregation for his christian character, always ready to administer to the necessities of the sick and distressed, as he is to meet the requirements of those in greater affluence.

Resolved 3. That we congratulate the people of Eastern North Carolina for being so highly favored should they be so fortunate as to secure the services of one so worthy and so able to preach Christ and Him crucified.

Resolved 4. That in view of the action of Presbytery at Burgaw, and of this Church today, we respectfully ask Presbytery to look after the spiritual interests of this church as its wise judgment may dictate.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

MR. EDITOR: Another commencement has come and gone, and your readers would no doubt like to know something of what was said and done on the occasion.

MEETING OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

On Tuesday the Board of Trustees held their annual meeting. In this body Georgia and the two Carolinas were represented. The affairs of the college were found to be in a good condition. Last year 112 names were on the roll of students. The revenue of the college for the same period from all sources was something over $13,000. The work done at Davidson was found to bear the very highest endorsement from distinguished scholars of the leading American institutions of learning, to whom the papers of the different competitors for prizes had been referred. In a word, the trustees were highly pleased with the present outlook of the college.

Rev. L. McKinnon of Concord was re-elected president of the Board of Trustees; Rev. J. B. Adger, D. D., of South Carolina, vice president; S. H. Wiley, Esq., treasurer, and Rev. J. Rumple secretary. The following gentlemen, with the president of the Board of Trustees as chairman, constitute the Executive Committee: D. A. Davis, Esq., Rev. Wm. W. Pharr, Rev. G. D. Parks, Col. T. M. Holt, Rev. G. W. Trenholm, Rev. J. Rumple, R. I. McDowell and S. H. Wiley. The Board elected Mr. C. McG. Hepburn, a graduate of Davidson, teacher for the preparatory class.

ADDRESS OF REV. W. E. BOGGS, D. D.

On Wednesday, at 10½ o'clock, Rev. Dr. Boggs of Atlanta delivered the annual address before the two literary societies. His theme was the real harmony which exists between the physical sciences and Revelation when both are properly understood. The best compliment I can pay the speaker and the address, is to say that for more than two hours he held up to the starting point the attention of the audience. The man who can perform a feat like this possesses magnetism of a high order. I will not attempt to give you an outline of the address. It was a pleasure to see Dr. Boggs among us, and especially to hear him in a bold and able manner defend the oracles of our holy religion along the whole line of "the scientific controversy."

There is much that the young men can learn from the speaker of their choice at this commencement. There was a beautiful freshness, simplicity and naturalness in his manner. Impressive throughout, at times there was the thrill of the true orator. The sentiments uttered showed deep conviction and earnestness, and at the same time a genuine charity towards those holding opposite views. But one of the chief excellencies of the address was that it was delivered without manuscript or notes.

THE ALUMNI ADDRESS, BY REV. W. S. LACY.

On Wednesday afternoon the Alumni Association assembled in the chapel and was addressed by the Rev. W. S. Lacy. This address was chaste, elegant, tender and sparkling. His topic, "The duty of Educated Men to the Institutions of Learning," he discussed with ability. The speaker paid beautiful tributes to those of his collegemates who, on the field of battle and amid other scenes sealed their devotion to duty by the laying down of their lives. Nor did he fail to improve the opportunity for urging the Association to give expression to their love for their Alma Mater by founding an Alumni Professorship. The seed which Brother Lacy so skillfully sowed, will not be without their harvest. Already is the ground beginning to break, and the little sprout to shoot.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE LITERARY SOCIETIES.

Wednesday evening was spent in listening to the orations of the representatives of the literary societies: Messrs. T. B. Frazer, J. T. Roberts, J. D. Nisbit, J. L. Scott, J. S. Brockinton, and H. W. Beall. These Young gentlemen all acted well their parts, but Mr. H. W. Beall won the prize, and was awarded the Fowle medal for oratory.

At the close of these speeches Rev. J. L. Wilson, in appropriate remarks, awarded the prizes offered by the literary societies to the best debater, best essayist, and best declaimer, as follows:

From the Eumenean Society.—Debater's Medal, T. H. DeGraffenreid, of South Carolina; Orator's Medal, John S. Brockinton, of South Carolina; Declaimer's Medal, H. Briggs of South Carolina.

From the Philanthropic Society.—Debater's Medal, D. Harvey Hill, Jr., of North Carolina; Essayist's Medal, H. W. Beall, of North Carolina; Declaimer's Medal, C. C. Bellamy, of North Carolina.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE LAST GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

A certain thing was done by the last General Assembly, which, in my judgment, tended to put it in a false position before the world, by reason of the possible misinterpretation of the meaning of the act. The objection which I made to the act has also been misunderstood; and a certain statement made by me concerning Dr. Thornwell, by reason of its not being full enough, is also liable to be misunderstood.

For the purpose of correcting any such misunderstandings, I write this article.

The act of the Assembly to which I object was the appointment of a member of that body to occupy the pulpit of a Unitarian church in Charleston, upon the invitation of its pastor. It is thought by some that the ground for my objection is not a good one, because of its inconsistency with the command of our Lord to preach the gospel to every creature. It is probable that those who think thus have mistaken the real ground of my objection. I would preach the gospel in a theatre, surrounded by an opera troupe, or in a temple in India, surrounded by Buddhist Priests, or in a Unitarian house of worship, surrounded by ministers of that faith. But I would not assume, or appear to others to assume the attitude of worship, when that worship is conducted by a Priest of Buddhah, or a Unitarian minister, for by such an act I would be doing honor, or at least appear to be doing honor to a false god.

In justification of my objection to the act of the General Assembly, I did not intend to make it appear that Dr. Thornwell refused to unite in worship with a Unitarian family in which he was a guest, he himself leading the devotions. I ought to have stated more fully the facts of the case. A Unitarian minister, also a guest of the family, was expected to conduct the religious services, and Dr. Thornwell refused, under those circumstances, to participate in the worship, upon the ground that he and the Unitarian minister did not worship the same God. I contend that the principle by which the Doctor was governed was a right one. And it was because the act of the General Assembly was apparently in violation of that principle that I objected to it. At the suggestion of one of the members of the Assembly, there seemed to be a tacit understanding among those who voted in favor of the act, that it was merely one of courtesy to a man who had made the kind offer of his house of worship to the Assembly, and not an endorsement of the man as a minister of the Gospel, or of his church as a Church of Jesus Christ. But I objected to the act, not simply because the world, and the believers in the Unitarian theology, might put a wrong construction upon it, notwithstanding the tacit understanding of the members of the Assembly, of its true meaning; but also because of the attitude in which the appointee and representative of the Assembly was placed in a Unitarian pulpit, by reason of the acceptance of the invitation. Either there was another tacit understanding that the Unitarian minister must not, on the occasion of occupancy of his pulpit by the Presbyterian minister, take a leading part in the religious services, or else it was tacitly understood that if he should do so, the Presbyterian minister would join, or appear to join in the worship as conducted by the Unitarian. Upon the former (tacit) understanding, the act of the Assembly was a very discourteous treatment of a courteous invitation. Upon the latter (tacit) understanding, the principle for which I contend, and upon which Dr. Thornwell acted would be violated. I would as soon bow my head to the "Consecrated Host," borne through the streets of a city in a Papal procession, as preach in a Unitarian pulpit, with the expectation or intention of assuming, or appearing to assume the attitude of devotion, when an avowed Unitarian was leading in prayer. I would preach in a Baptist church without discussing the subject of Baptism, or in a Methodist church without discussing the subject of election, but I could not preach in a Unitarian pulpit if it was understood that the discussion or declaration by me of the divinity of Jesus Christ as Presbyterians understand that term, would be a discourteous act—and such discussion or declaration would be so regarded, unless I had given the minister to understand beforehand that I intended so to do, and he had given his full consent.

The General Assembly acted unwisely, to say the least. It had a good opportunity to give, in respectful language, such an answer to the invitation as would have been a noble testimony of their attachment to their God and Saviour—an answer which, by His blessing, might have had a saving effect upon the deluded worshiper of a false God.

GLIMPSES OF THE INNER LIFE OF OUR LORD.

This is the title of an excellent little volume written by Professor W. G. Blaikie, D. D., of Edinburgh, the learned editor of The Catholic Presbyterian. Its object is devotional and practical. The author contemplates the inner life of Christ as manifested in His devotion to the Father's work, His delight in the Father's will, His entire harmony with the Father, His temptation by the devil, His life of ministering, His sympathy with man, His sorrows, His peace, His joy, His prayerfulness, His enduring of the cross and His dying word. In the discussion of these interesting themes he vividly portrays many of the perfections of the ideal man, exhibiting Him as the great Model to which, by Divine grace, we are to conform our hearts and lives. The careful and prayerful perusal of this book will excite holy trains of thought, stir our religious affections, heighten our aspirations and cause us to examine more thoroughly our internal states and external acts. It will increase our devotion to Jesus and His blood-bought Church and promote the highest kind of holiness: the unity of our wills with God's will. It will cherish that "sympathy with Christ which is the subtle force through which the Holy Spirit moves the world." It will prepare us for the hour of temptation and tend to destroy selfishness, the generic sin. It will profoundly impress us with the idea that in temptation and affliction we have a divine Sympathizer and deter us from sin, which caused "the fairest of faces to look sad." It will greatly multiply our peace, joy and prayerfulness and extend and deepen our conceptions of the glories and terrors of Calvary. We firmly believe that the present low state of intellectual religious culture among many, may be partially accounted for by the absence of such volumes. Every household should possess such an orthodox and searching work. It can be obtained by sending $1 25 to A. D. F. Randolph & Co., 900 Broadway, New York. E. P. D.

AN APPEAL.

To Presbyterial Committees of Education, to Candidates for the Ministry, and to all Brethren of the Ministry:

We have entered upon another year of work for the Master. The department of work to which your attention is now called lies at the foundation of all. Without a constant supply of ministers the whole work of the Church must fail, and without an increasing supply the Church must stand still and make no aggressive movement upon the kingdom of darkness. Men are "saved by faith; but faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God. But how shall they hear without a preacher?"

The great and pressing duty of the hour is that the Church, the whole Church, should pray, earnestly and constantly, to the Lord of the harvest that He could raise up and qualify and send forth laborers into His harvest.

Secondly, it is equally important that the Church should watch and work as well as pray. That is, the Church should watch for suitable young men, give them all necessary encouragement and instruction, and when God shall call them to the work, do all that may be needful for their support during their course of study in college and in seminary.

Now, is there a minister in all our broad field that will not lend a helping hand to this all important work? The appeal is to every one to make a study of this cause, to let the importance of it rest upon his heart, to let it find a place in his public and private prayers, and to instruct his own congregation as to the great need of an increase of faithful ministers.

The chairmen of Presbyterial Committees of Education will please take notice that it is required by the Assembly that all candidates should be recommended anew every year. Please, therefore, report your candidates as soon as possible, stating what amount is desired for them, and what institutions they will attend. Candidates are requested to give their attention to this matter.

By the direction of the Assembly the appropriations are made absolute, to the amount of $100 to college students and $125 to those in the seminary. It is greatly to be desired that these amounts should be increased. Will not the churches enable the committee to do this? It would simplify the work and enable the committee to report more fully the amount contributed for beneficiary education. If we could give the college students $150 each and those in the Seminary $175 each it would require $7,500 for fifty college students and $7,000 for forty theological students, $14,500 in all. If there should be an increase of students it would require more.

The simple question is, will not the churches do what their own interests and the glory of the Master require?

THE ANNUAL COLLECTION FOR THE INVALID FUND.

OFFICE OF HOME MISSIONS,
BALTIMORE, June 19, 1880.

Dear Christian Friends: In reminding you of the day for this collection (the 1st Sabbath of July, or as soon thereafter as may be convenient,) we are encouraged to ask your renewed and liberal support of this noble cause, on account of the great good which has been accomplished by it in the past. Last year 122 families of aged, infirm and deceased ministers were aided from this fund, and in many cases serious suffering was thus averted. In every case comfort was brought to the hearts and lives of the recipients of your bounty as they partook of the fruits of your christian sympathy and love, and we know that their gratitude to God and to you as His instruments has been frequently expressed. The motives which should influence you in contributing to this cause are those which have been presented heretofore, viz: love for the Saviour as He is represented by His suffering children; duty to those who have given up worldly emoluments and devoted themselves to the service of the Church, and who now need your timely help; regard for your own sanctification and growth in grace which will be promoted by ministering to Christ's poor. The Master says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it, unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." This is the sufficient warrant and incentive to which we point you in asking your liberal support in behalf of this sacred object. A larger amount is needed this year than has ever been contributed. It is therefore hoped that a collection will be taken up in every church, and that brethren will give with that liberality which their circumstances will permit.

In behalf of the Executive Committee.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE DESIGN OF TRUTH.

Interior:

Divine truth unemployed is as worthless as unemployed gold—as gold sunk in the dark caves of the sea. It is bestowed upon men for practical purposes. It hath higher potencies than gold. Gold adorns the exterior—truth is designed to illuminate, ennoble and glorify the soul—to make it a luminary of love, a fountain of noble deeds, of generosity, of charity, to give it an unstained standard of honor and integrity. It is intended to beautify the soul and make it lovely in the sight of man, and in the sight of God.

A TRUTH WELL PUT.

Nashville Advocate:

Can anything be more absurd than the political economy that puts one dollar into the public treasury by licensing the making of criminals and then spends ten for their prosecution and punishment? This is exactly what most of these American States are doing with regard to the liquor traffic.

RAFFLING.

N. Y. Observer:

The U. S. Supreme Court has recently made a decision which we commend especially to ladies who cannot see the wrong there is in lotteries. It is a remarkable fact that while legislators and courts appreciate the evil, the Christian women in our churches, whenever they would get up a fair for charity, resort to lotteries, or some evasion of the same sort, insisting that they cannot see any harm in the practice.

GIVING IN VIEW OF MEN.

Canadian Independent:

It is a pity when any man who is interested in the advancement of the Saviour's kingdom sets himself to thinking how little he can give, consistent with respectability, instead of how much he should give for Him who died for him. There is too much of this giving in view of men rather than in the sight of God. The same eye which measured the gifts to the temple treasury years ago still sees our gifts, and the same mind makes its estimate of the value of what we give. It would transform many a parsimonious christian into a liberal man, were he to remember that a Divine eye is watching all his donations. It is a pity, too, when we offer to God the crumbs from the table of our income. The coppers and pennies and quarter dollars which many cast into the church coffers are—when measured with their receipts—nothing more than the scraps and crumbs compared with the full dishes of the table.

A BINDING CONTRACT.

Baltimore Presbyterian:

One of the most binding contracts between pastor and people is that in regard to salary, and yet, in many cases it is lightly esteemed on the part of the people. But few men can do good work and be constantly harrowed by petty financial troubles, and it is the bounden duty of a congregation to relieve a pastor of these. He should be paid his salary, and that promptly, not in driblets, to suit the convenience of careless, if not dishonest parishioners.

THE POSITIVE LIFE.

United Presbyterian:

The positive life is always the best one. Apologetics are usually a mistake. The man who devotes himself to killing weeds will fail, but if he seek to cultivate some useful growth he will exterminate the mulleins and thistles, and enrich himself with a profitable crop.

WAIT PATIENTLY.

Herald and Presbyter;

It is sometimes necessary to "wait patiently on the Lord." He gives the increase, not in our time, but in His own. The apostles, after Christ's death, labored with little gain, until the Spirit was given at Pentecost. We may wait much longer, or God's Spirit may at once be given.

NICKELISM.

Presbyterian Journal:

Nickolism is a new complaint in the churches. It is the next thing to Nihilism, that is it comes within a nickel of putting nothing into the contribution box. This disease is not confined to religious tramps and repeaters, but attacks well-to-do pew-holders, who thus keep up appearances at the smallest cost. The widow's mite, it is well to remember, was commended only because it was all she had.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

The Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tenn., conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon Rev. Dr. L. Girardeau of South Carolina, and upon Rev. Dr. L. J. Halsey of Chicago, Ill.

A meeting at Entaw, protracted for six weeks, from April 9th, in the Methodist church, with the co-operation of the Presbyterians, resulted in the addition of twelve to the Methodist church and thirty-two to the Presbyterian church. Many others expressed themselves as deeply interested.—Christian Observer.

Early during the sessions of the General Assembly the Rev. Dr. Stillman was called home by a telegram informing him of the dangerous illness of his daughter, Miss Carrie F. Stillman. We are pained to learn that she died a few days after Dr. S. reached home. She had been an invalid for more than two years, but had so often rallied after being very ill, that it was hoped, till very near the end, that she might recover.—Southern Presbyterian.

Items from the Central Presbyterian:

Rev. Walter H. Robertson, a recent graduate of Union Seminary, Va., entered upon his missionary work in Gloucester county about the middle of May. There has been, so far as known, been a Presbyterian church in this fine county, and there has never been any regular occupation of the field by any ministers of our Church. This is one of the best counties of Eastern Virginia, and before the war was one of the wealthiest in the State. There are about a dozen families of Presbyterians in and about the county seat who will aid in the support of a Presbyterian church. Mr. Robertson enters on the work for the summer in order to ascertain whether a church can be organized there. It is believed that $300 can be raised, per annum, in the field itself. If the prospect at the close of the summer is encouraging the purpose is to organize a church and erect a house of worship.

Since March 15th, Newbern and Laurel Hill churches in Pulaski county, Va., have been served by their pastor elect. There are four preaching places—Newbern, Martin's Station on the Va. & T. R. R.; Laurel Hill, four miles up the Altoona Narrow Gauge R. R.; and Oak Chapel, half way between Laurel Hill and Newbern. There are now Sabbath Schools at each of the first-named places, organized this spring. The Sabbath School at Oak Chapel is carried on mainly by Methodists and Baptists. The sacramental service was held at Laurel Hill on the fifth Sabbath of May. A large congregation was in attendance. One person was publicly received into the membership of the church. The services of similar character at Newbern, first Sabbath in June, were attended by a very large congregation, increased by many from New Dublin and Dublin churches—whose pulpits happened to be vacant that day. There were four additions to this church—two by letter and two on examination.

On Sabbath, June 6th, a committee of Wes

Hanover Presbytery, organized a church in Fluvanna county, called the Rivanna church, with fourteen members and one elder and one deacon. Dr. T. D. Bell presided and preached in the morning, after which the organization was formally entered into. The officers elected, having been previously ordained, were installed.

Items gathered from the Texas Presbyterian:

Rev. Dr. E. D. Junkin has entered upon his labors at Honston, Texas.

Rev. Josephus Johnson of Victoria, Texas, has been very ill, but at last accounts was recovering.

The church at San Antonio has recently received seven new members, six of them by examination, two baptisms. There is much interest in the congregation, and hope of many more additions during the summer. The congregation prayer meeting and Sabbath school are constantly growing.

Rev. J. W. Sexton writes to the Texas Presbyterian that Bryan church, in the Presbytery of Brazos, observed the last week of May as a week of prayer. God's blessing was vouchsafed, five members were added to the church on profession of faith and the people of God greatly strengthened. On the fifth Sabbath in May, Mr. Sexton was installed pastor of Bryan church. Rev. J. M. Cochran presided, preached and proposed the constitutional questions. Rev. James Wilson delivered charges to pastor and people.

NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN.

Large accessions from the Mormon population have been made to the Presbyterian church at Salt Lake in Utah. In San Pete county fifty or sixty have been received into the church.

The North Presbyterian church at Binghampton, N. Y., has grown from fifty members to one hundred and eighty-five in ten years. During the same time $30,000 have been raised for all purposes.

REFORMED (DUTCH).

The recent meeting of the Reformed Classis of North Carolina, which met at the Brick church in Guilford county, was largely attended and very interesting. Rev. J. Ingold, of this place was elected President for the ensuing year. The next meeting will be held at Salem church, Lincoln county, on Thursday before the fourth Sunday in June, 1881.

The Reformed General Synod has had before it sundry memorials asking for a communion test that would exclude Free Masons or members of any other oathbonnd secret societies. After long and earnest discussions the Synod declined to institnte the test, while maintaining that no christian ought to join or remain in any anti-christian society; the decision as to the character of any society being left to the individnal conscience.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

The United Presbyterian Church has received about $21.000 from a bequest of the late Archibald Stewart, of Pennsylvania, and from the same sonrce $20,000 will probably be realized during the ensning year. Other bequests will soon be received which may swell the amount to $50,000.

BAPTIST.

Rochester University has received $100,000 towards its permanent endowment and $150,000 are to be paid in Jannary next.

Rev. Albert H. Sweetzer, pastor of a Universalist church, was received into the Baptist commnnion on 6th inst.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Rev. Myron W. Adams has renounced Congregationalism and become a Universalist, and his brother, a Presbyterian minister rejects the Scriptnral doctrine of "Future Punishment." The Presbyterian says: Per contra, two Universalist preachers have just been received into evangelical denominations.

The largest per cent. of the ministry of all Protestant denominations in this country in the foreign mission field comes from the Congregational Church, which snpplies 4.29 per cent. of its own ministerial force. The Presbyterian Church North snpplies 2.50 per cent. the Presbyterians South, 1 33; the Baptists of the North, 1.01; the Episcopal Church, 0.57. It is stated that of the 9,145 ministers which the Sonthern Baptists have, only six are engaged in foreign lands.—Christian Union.

LUTHERAN.

The Lutheran General Synod (South) has just concluded its sessions at Richmond, Va., Drs. Krauth and Strobel, of the Northern General bodies, presented friendly greetings In doctrine and polity the General Synod (North), the General Synod (Sonth), and the General Council, are not very widely separated. A step was taken looking toward practical union through a scheme for the elevation of the colored people in districts covered by the Southern body. A farther proposition to furnish all these three bodies with one form of worship and hymnal is pending. The prospect for increased nnity is encouraging, though no organic nnion may soon be looked for. The three bodies report 1,555 ministers; 2,621 churches; 323,356 commnnicants.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

Since Easter, 1879, the First Reformed Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, has received into communicant membership from other churches 24 persons. Of these persons, 13 came to them from the Protestant Episcopal Church, 4 from the Church of England, 3 from the Presbyterian Church, 1 from the Congregational Church, 1 from the Baptist, 1 from the Methodist Episcopal, and 1 from a neighboring pariah of the Reformed Episcopal Church. By confirmation and by letter there has been, during the past year, an addition of 48 members to the list of communicants.—Presbyterian.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, John W. Beckwith, Bishop of Georgia; Gen. John B. Gordon, U. S. Senator; Hon John Gill Shorter, Rt. Rev. Bishop Pierce, J. Edgar Thompson; Hon. B H. Hill, Hon. John C. A THRONGED CITY.

Cincinnati possesses many attractions. Great multitudes of visitors come and go. They examine the Inclined Railroads, the Music Hall, the Public Library, the Fountain; they scan the fine public and private buildings, bridges, parks, and drive through the beautiful suburbs and note the rare advantages of the Central City.

Some of them have been heard to say, after such an inspection of the externals of the city, that "they have seen Cincinnati;" but the fact is, they have had but a glimpse. Cincinnati has back of these things the influences that produce them. If it was not for the business done, for the people who find employment and develop enterprises in the Queen City, you would not have the grand things so much admired. The great stores and workshops are well worthy of a visit, and there is no harm in making a call at these establishments. One of them, on the southwest corner of Fourth and Walnut Streets, is thronged continually with customers and visitors. The establishment of Messrs Duhme & Co., has a reputation not only for the extent of it business, but for the upright and just manner of conducting that business. Persons come from distant places to trade here, because there is no misrepresntation allowed in any of their transactions. Then, they have a magnificent stock of rare and beautiful articles More variety, more taste, more art, more useful and valuable articles in the stock of Duhme & Co., than would fit out an average half dozen of the old fashioned courts, whose style and splendor was the marvel of their day, and has found place in history.

In the department of silver-plated ware alone there is such a display of taste and skill in form, design and ornamentation that the articles of a few years ago seem tame and undesirable in comparison New styles are constantly introduced, and to possess the most elegant, you must make careful examination. This work has been brought to such perfection that, at the Centennial Exposition, where all nations participated; the rewards were given to American manufacturers. The reason for this is that the American citizen demands the beautiful as well as the useful, and has the disposition to enjoy such things. Like the Yankee visitor to the court of St. James, "he is of that clam from which kings are made," and his "rank" calls him to enjoy the most perfect in quality and kind of all things.

The price at which this ware, plated heavily on white metal, can be had, and its durability, as compared with the solid article, makes it to be preferred by many purchasers. It is not easily told from the solid article, will wear a lifetime, and look as well as solid silver and does not cost more than a tenth as much. No less distinguished for beauty of design and excellence of finish than for serviceable qualities and low cost, American Table Plate is rapidly acquiring an enviable reputation throughout the civilized world. The productions of one of the largest manufactories in the world, in this line of goods—that of the Meriden Britannia Co., West Meriden, Conn.—are sold, wholesale and retail, at the southwest corner of Fourth and Walnut Streets, Cincinnati, O.

At Duhme & Co's, however, you can find solid gold or silver "hand made" ware, of the latest designs and most perfect workmanship. Duhme & Co., surpass all competition in their line of productions, but there are many other branches of manufacture represented, and to them all the Queen City is, to a great extent, indebted for her wealth and fame. Visitors should not forget the stores and workshops when looking for Cincinnati.

WHAT THE
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
Did For a Kansas Woman.
Its Great Controlling Power over the Nervous System, the Digestive Organs and Uterine Affections.

TRADE MARK—PATENTED.

Case of Mrs. B——, stated by Dr. L. M. Wood, Wyandotte county, Kansas.
Extract from a letter dated White Church, Wyandotte county, Kansas, February 1st, 1880:
"I first saw Mrs. B—— laboring under Hysterical Coma, from which she had not been sufficiently aroused to take nourishment for four days. She was of large frame, but in a condition of extreme emaciation. From her husband I obtained the following statement: She was thirty-six years of age, and when in health unusually robust, her average weight being one hundred and fifty pounds. She was accustomed to do all of her house work and to perform other labor when necessary. Several years before she had undergone an operation for a Tumor formed in the region of the right Acetsbulum. Her general health remained good for some time. Afterwards, however, she became a great sufferer from a distressing form of Dyspepsia, there being at times almost total Atony of the digestive organs. There was also serious derangement of the Monthly Functions, with general prostration of the Nervous System resulting in attacks similar to that described, and she had been under the care, at different times, of several distinguished medical men without benefit. Under appropriate treatment she was aroused to a state of consciousness, took nourishment such as her stomach would retain, and her general condition improved to some extent. There was, however, a frequent recurrence of these attacks, and I saw but little if any hope of permanent benefit. Recollecting that I had seen the Buffalo Lithia Waters endorsed by men eminent in the profession, as a "Powerful Nerve Tonic," I determined as a last resort to make a trial of it in her case, and ordering it directly from the Springs, put her upon it. In a few weeks the beneficial result was unmistakable, in the increase of appetite—the invigoration of the organs of digestion, and most especially in the gradual restoration to a healthy condition of the exhausted Nervous System and a diminution both of the frequency and severity of the attacks referred to. She used the water for several months with continued and decided benefit. The Monthly Functions have been restored to a normal condition, and there has been a total cessation of the attacks of Hysterical Coma, and she has gained rapidly in flesh and strength, until she is now in robust, vigorous health, eating as much "Hog and Hominy," and doing as much hard work as any woman in this Western country, the credit for all of which, I give where it is certainly due, to these remarkable waters."

These Springs are opened for Visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE. The Waters in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, Five Dollars per case, at the Springs.
They are prescribed by Dr. J. Marion Sims, Dr. William A. Hammond and Dr. John T. Metcalf, of New York, as well as by a large number of leading medical men in all sections of the country. Spring pamphlet sent to any address.

Boys Make Men

When you see a ragged urchin,
Standing wistful in the street,
With torn hat and kneeless trousers
Dirty face and bare red feet,
Pass not by the child unheeding;
Smile upon him. Mark me, when
He's grown old he'll not forget it;
For remember, boys make men

Have you never seen a grandsire,
With his eyes aglow with joy.
Bring to mind some act of kindness—
Something said to him, a boy?
Or, relate some slight or coldness,
With a brow all clouded, when
He recalled some heart too thoughtless
To remember boys make men?

Let us try to add some pleasure
To the life of every boy;
For each child needs interest
In its sorrow and its joy.
Call your boys home by its brightness;
They avoid the household when
It is cheerless with unkindness;
For remember—boys make men

—Exchange.

Presence of Mind.

This is a true story, about a real boy. The boy's name is Dick. That is not a very uncommon name, and his last name is not an uncommon one, either. I am not going to tell you what it is, though, for perhaps he would not like it.

Dick's father died when his son was just able to toddle. After awhile, Dick grew to be a pret y big boy. Then he began to be anxious to get something to do to help his mother. It was a good while before he found anything; but he came home one day, at last, and said:

"Mother, I've got a place."

"What sort of a place?" asked his mother.

"In the factory," said Dick, cheerfully.

But the mother shook her head.

"I don't half like it my boy," she said." They are dangerous places, these factories. Some day you'll be going too near the big wheels, or the bands, or something, and then—"

She stopped and shuddered; but Dick only laughed.

"Well, what then, mother?" he said. "What do you think is going to happen to a fellow with a cool head and a steady hand? Almost all the accidents that you hear of happen because the people are careless, or because they get frightened, and don't know what they are about. I'm not going to be careless and I'm not going to get frightened. And, mother, even if anything very bad did happen to me, I should he doing my duty, should'n't I? You wouldn't have a great fellow like me staying around here idle for fear of getting into danger, would you?"

"Well, no, I suppose not," said his mother, remembering what a bad thing idleness is for anybody, and how surely it leads boys, as well as men, into mischief.

So the next day Dick was at his post in the factory. I cannot tell you what sort of a factory it was, nor exactly what he had to do there. Nobody ever told me that part of it. All I know is that he spent the days among the great, whirring machinery, and that he did his work steadily and well, in spite of noise, and confusion, and dust, and fatigue, and danger.

By the time he had been there for a month or two, he had forgotten all about the danger, and even his mother began to think that he was as safe there as in his own home.

That is always the way when you are used to things, you know. People who live under the shadow of a volcano forget that the burning lava ever streams down its sides and desolates the country around. Some day it does so, though, and sometimes accidents happen, even to the most confident boys.

Was Dick careless that day? I don't know, and neither d d he. He thought that he was doing his work as steadily and as carefully as usual; but suddenly he felt something—just a little twitch at his sleeve; nothing at all to mind if you are playing with your school-mates, but then Dick was not playing with his school mates. There was no one near enough to give him that twitch, and he knew in an instant what it meant—that the fingers that gripped him were iron fingers, and that the pulse that beat in them was the cruel, merciless pulse of steam.

Most boys would at least have looked around in sudden surprise—would have yielded for a moment to the twitch and then—the horror, and agony, and death. What did Dick do? Quick as a flash, the thought came:

"I am caught in the machinery. I can't help that, but I won't be drawn in. I won't! I won't! I WON'T!"

It was hardly a thought, you know, only a swift, wordless instinct. Then he set his teeth, and clenched his fists, and braced every nerve and muscle to stand like a rock, while the machinery did its work.

"Crack! crack!"

That was his shirt, pulled off him like the husk off an ear of corn.

"Crack! crack!"

The flannel shirt went next, stripped into shreds by the iron fingers.

"Crack! crack!"

That was his merino shirt, and Dick stood rigid and motionless still, with not an atom of clothing from the waist up.

The men around him had not been as quiet as he, you may be sure. There had been shrieks and cries enough when they saw what had happened, but the machinery could not be stopped all in a minute, let the engineer try as he would.

It seemed a century to the men, though it was only three or four minutes, before the great wheels shivered and stood still. Some of the men had covered their eyes, fearing to see—what? Splashes of blood on the floor and walls, and a horrible, mangled mass, tangled and broken in an iron grip.

What did those who dared to look see? Only a curly-haired, bright-eyed boy, who looked around at them as quietly and boldly as if nothing at all had happened.

"Why, Smith," said Dick, looking at the man nearest him, "how pale you are! And Jones is trembling like a leaf, and Brown can hardly stand! Why, I'm the best off of you all—if I haven't got many clothes left," he added, as he looked down at himself. "If somebody will lend me a coat, I think I'd bettor go home and get another shirt."

* * * * * * *

"So you see, mother," said Dick, "what I told you is true. If a fellow's head is cool, and his nerves steady, there isn't much fear for him. And the good Lord keeps watch in the factories as well as outside."

Now, what I want you to notice about this story is this: It was not Dick's good luck that saved him, but simply his courage and presence of mind. If he had yielded for one instant to the grip of the machinery—if he had hesitated for a moment what to do—that moment would have been his last.

Don't you think that there is a lesson in all this, if you take it the right way?—Central Christian Advocate.

Why No One Looked at the Bride.

BY MRS. ANNIE E. PRESTON.

I don't know as it is much of a story, but the telling of it one hot May afternoon brightened us all up wonderfully.

We were rather largely discussing a wedding we had all attended that morning, and were criticising, good naturedly, the looks and appearance of the bride, when Aunt Gratia, who had been busy over her sewing, spoke up and asked:

"Did you ever hear of a wedding where no one looked at the bride?"

"Such a thing would not be likely to happen unless it was at an asylum for the blind, only patients admitted," said Mabel

"It might have been the couple who were married under the window in stormy weather," said Vira.

"We never heard of such a thing. Did you, Aunt Gratia? Was it a real wedding, or is it a conundrum?"

"The wedding to which I refer," went on the smiling old lady, "was in a church, and the seats were all filled, for it was a general invitation. It was a real floral wedding. Being the 17th of June, there was no lack of material, and as the Sunday school scholars took the matter of decoration in hand there were plenty of helpers. The huge old wooden ark of a country meeting house was transformed into a veritable bower of beauty. The girls were all dressed in white gowns looped up with flowers, and the boys wore roses in the buttonholes of their white vests. Every guest carried a bouquet, even to the oldest grandfather and grandmother of them all, and pretty children scattered flowers in the bride's pathway as she walked from her childhood's home near by to the church. There had never been such a display in that town before, and it wasn't done for style at all, but just because every one loved the minister's daughter and wanted to have a finger in her marriage pie, but yet, after all this parade, no one looked at the bride."

Aunt Gratia smiled and went on complacently with her stitching, while we all broke in afresh:

"Did a sudden dark cover all the land?"

"Perhaps there was a prevailing eye-distemper at the time."

"Did some fun-loving youngster throw pepper in the eyes of the guests?"

"Oh! I know! something happened at the very church door to prevent the ceremony being performed! How romantic!"

"Wrong, all of you!" went on Aunt Gratia; "it was as perfect a June day as ever slipped graciously down into the abyss of time. Every one was open-eyed with eager, breathless expectancy. And the ceremony came off according to the programme. I know, for I was there myself and heard every word!"

"Oh, Aunt Gratia, you are too tantalizing."

"Do tell us all about it! We give it up!"

So the dear old lady, having threaded her needle, took up the story again:

"When the bridal party were entering the church door, and the organ was playing a wedding march, a low, clear childish voice piped up:

"'Oh, do just look at that mouse! right on the pulpit cushion.'

Everybody heard it; everybody looked; and everybody felt it incumbent upon themselves, individually, to keep watch of the little intruder, for they all knew the silly little bride was mortally afraid of a mouse and they imagined the consternation, should this pretty, bright-eyed nibbler jump or fall upon her bare white shoulders and arms as she stood there almost exactly beneath him.

The little creature behaved with all possible decorum, however, in spite of their forebodings, and after the holy words had been spoken which made the young couple one for life, the music struck up and the mouse ran back along the railing and into his hole in the high platform."

"Oh dear me!"

"How funny; and you saw it, Aunt Gratia?"

"No, I didn't see the mouse; I had something more important to attend to."

"Oh, Aunt Gratia, it was your own wedding. Wasn't it now?

"Yes, my dears, and it was a lesson in humility to me that I have always remembered. For there, when I had every reason to consider myself the centre of attraction, and was as self-conscious as possible, I found afterwards that in this most important event of my life I was entirely eclipsed in the eyes of all my friends, by a tiny long-tailed mouse."—Christian Intelligencer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Professor's Chair.

THE SCRATCHES ON THE ROCK.

Stones might be carried miles by rivers, or they might sail the seas home along by icebergs. As a matter of fact, however, nearly all the stones from distant ledges we find in our fields were brought there by the Great Glacier. That such a glacier once covered the northern parts of the country is known by the marks left everywhere in its track. Its southern limit was about the latitude of New York city. In Onio the ice, perhaps, did not extend quite as far south, but it left abundant marks in Southern Iowa. Almost at any point north of an irregular line joining these points the signs of glacial work can readily be found. Who will look for them in the fields right about home?

Perhaps there is no more striking sign than the scratches on the rocks. Some rocks have been so eaten away and dissolved by wind, water and frost that they present very irregular surfaces, as sometimes an old clapboard becomes so rough by decay that no marks of the carpenter's plane can be found on it. Other firmer rocks, or those that have been less exposed, still retain a polished surface, and show grooves and scratches as distinct as the similar marks on a board that has just left the carpenter's bench. It was once thought these scratches were made by icebergs striking the bottom in shallow seas when the country was under water. That supposition might explain them in one place or a dozen places. But they are found all over the country, and they have nearly the same direction at the northwest corner of Central Park as along Lake Champlain, or high up Mount Washington, or along the Massachusetts coast, or in the Missouri Valley. Examine the recently uncovered rocks in your own neighborhood, and if you find these scratches on them set down your compass and see if the direction is not everywhere within a few degrees of north and south. They have been found to vary scarcely more than the magnetic needle itself varies. Icebergs could not have kept so constant a direction when they struck bottom, but a sheet of ice covering the whole country and slowly sliding southward as it melted away on that side would mark all parts alike.

Such masses of ice are now sliding down the higher valleys of the Alps, pushing along embedded stones which scratch and plane the underlying rocks in the same manner. Such an ice sheet covers hundreds of miles of Greenland, pushing slowly out to sea and sending fleets of icebergs down to the Banks of Newfoundland. Wherever you can find these scratches on the rocks you have a token that such an ice sheet once covered this country. With a little practice one can easily distinguish the glacial scratches from cracks. The scratches keep their direction right across cracks and cleavage, and cut through hard streaks in the rock at the same level as the softer parts. They are to be studied in the same way one would decide whether a mark on a board is a crack or was left by the planing knife. If you find any of these marks, remember that the same signs are to be found all over the Northern States, and they are the handwriting on the rock of one of the great processes by which the Creator has made the earth what it is to-day.—Christian Union.

Weeds.

The term "weeds," curiously enough, is etymologically connected with Wodan or Odin, the great god of the northern mythology, to whose worship in former ages in this country our Wednesday or Odinsday was specially dedicated. Any plant may become a weed by being accidentally found in a situation where its presence is not desired, but true weeds form a peculiar and distinct class. They are at once recognized by their mean and ragged appearance—their stems and foliage being neither fleshy nor leathery, but of a soft, flaccid description—and by the absence in most of them of conspicuous or beautiful blossoms. A look of vagabondage seems to characterize most of the members of the order, which at once stamps them as belonging to a parish class. In the vegetable kingdom they are what gypsies are in the human world, and the same mystery surrounds them which is connected with that remarkable race. Like the gypsies, they are essentially intruders and foreigners; never the native children of the soil on which they flourish. There is this remarkable peculiarity about weeds, that they only appear on ground which, either by cultivation or for some other purpose, has been disturbed by man. To a thoughtful mind the questions must occur, "Have the plants we call weeds always been weeds? If not, what is their native country? How did they come into connection with man, and into dependence upon his labors?"

No satisfactory answer can be given to those questions. As a class there can be no doubt that weeds belong to the most recent flora of the globe. They make their appearance in company with the beautiful and fruitful flora that is specially associated with the arrival of man, and spread from the same region which is supposed to be the cradle of the human race. In this way they are co-related with the Scripture account of the fall of man. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee," was the sentence pronounced by God upon man's sin. We are not to suppose from this circumstance that these noxious plants were specially created then and there for the express purpose of carrying out the punishment of man. They were previously in existence, though they may be said to belong very specially to the human epoch; but since that mournful event they have received a new significance, and are bound up with man in a new moral relation.—Hugh Macmillan.

Marlborough.

Our chief whom England and all Europe, saving only the Frenchmen, worshiped almost, had this of the god-like in him, that he was impassable before victory, before danger, before defeat; before the greatest obstacle or the most trivial ceremony; before a hundred thousand men drawn in battalia, or a peasant slaughtered before the door of his burning hovel; before a carouse of drunken German lords, or a monarch's court, or a cottage table, where his plans were laid, or an enemy's battery, vomiting flame and death, and strewing corpses round about him—he was always cold, calm, resolute, like fate. He performed a treason or a court bow; he told a falsehood as black as Styx as easily as he paid a compliment or spoke about the weather; he took a mistress, and left her; he betrayed his benefactor, and supported him, or would have murdered him, with the same calmness always, and having no more remorse than Clotho, when she weaves the thread, or Lachesis, when she cuts it. In the hour of battle, I have heard the Prince of Savoy's officers say, the Prince became possessed with a spirit of warlike fury; his eyes lighted up; he rushed hither and thither, raging; he shrieked curses and encouragement, yelling and barking his war-dogs oh, and himself always at the first of the hunt. Our Duke was as calm at the mouth of the cannon as at the door of a drawing-room. Perhaps he could not have been the great man he was had he had a heart either for love or hatred or pity or fear, or regret or remorse. He achieved the highest deed of daring, or deepest calculation of thought, as he performed the very meanest action of which a man is capable; told a lie, or cheated a fond woman, or robbed a poor beggar of a half-penny with a like awful serenity and equal capacity of the highest and lowest acts of our nature.

His qualities were pretty well known in the army, where there were parties of all politics, and of plenty of shrewdness and wit; but he existed such a perfect confidence in him, that the first captain of the world, and such a faith and admiration in his prodigious genius and fortune that the very men whom he notoriously cheated of their pay, the chiefs whom he used and injured (for he used all men, great and small, that came near him, as his instruments for war, and took something of theirs, either some quality or some property—the blood of a soldier it might be, or a jeweled hat, or a hundred thousand crowns from a king or a portion out of the starving sentinel's three farthings), or—when he was young—a kiss from a woman, and the gold chain from her neck, taking all he could from woman or man, and having, as I have said, this disposition in him, that he could see a sparrow perish or a sparrow fall, with the same amount of sympathy for either. Not that he had no tears; he could always order up this reserve at the proper moment to battle; he could draw upon tears or smiles alike, and whenever need was for using this cheap coin; he would cringe to a shoeblack, as he would flatter a minister or a monarch; he haughty, he humble, threaten, repent, weep, grasp your hand, or stab you, whenever he saw occasion); but yet, those of the army who knew him best and had suffered most from him, admired him most of all; and as he rode along the lines of a battle, or galloped up in the nick of time to a battalion reeling from before the enemy's charge or shot, the fainting men and officers got new courage as they saw the splendid calm on his face, and felt th at his will made them irresistible.—Thackeray.

SECULAR NEWS.

Notwithstanding the penalty of burglary in North Carolina is death, and the law has been duly executed in several instances in this State within the past year, attempts to effect entrances into houses in the city of Wilmington are frequent.

Rev. Dr. T. H. Pritchard has accepted an invitation from President Battle to address the University Normal School on the general interests of education in the State sometime during the summer.—Raleigh News.

After harvesting, a great deal of wheat is found to be better than it has been expected. The crop, however, in the portion of the State, from reports, seems to be very irregular. Portions of Catawba and Lincoln expect to fall considerably below the average, while Cleaveland expects an average.—Hickory Carolinian.

The Washington Post says Gen. Vance has recommended that Mr. LeDuc, Commissioner of Agriculture, test the cultivation of ginseng in the mountains of North Carolina. Some years ago Mr. P. S. Smith of Asheville, began the cultivation of ginseng in Madison county, but removing to Asheville he did not carry the test to a success. The plant is worth in China $2 per pound, and if it can be cultivated in the Blue Ridge range, may become a source of wealth exceeding that of tobacco.

Col. John D. Shaw, of Richmond county, sends to the Wilmington Star a cotton bloom, which he says opened on his farm near Rockingham on the 10th instant.

The friends of the Dismal Swamp, Canal seem a little despondent of its future. It was the germ of the early prosperity of Elizabeth City, and we should greatly regret its further decline.—Elizabeth City Economist.

Learn to Be Short.

Long visits, long stories, long exhortations, long prayers, and long editorials, seldom profit those who have to do with them. Life is short. Time is short. Moments are precious. Learn to condense, abridge, and intensify. We can endure many an ache and ill if it is soon over, while even pleasures grow insipid, and pain intolerable, if they are protracted beyond the limits of reason and convenience. Learn to be short. Lop off branches; stick to the main fact in your case. If you pray, ask for what you would receive, and go through; if you speak, tell your message, and hold your peace; boil down two words into one, and three into two. Always learn to be short!

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

CHURCH WORSHIP.

It is to be feared many professed christians entertain erroneous views concerning the nature and purpose of church service. The fall left the human family in a guilty, corrupt state. The obedience and sufferings of Christ were for the removal of guilt; and the Spirit was sent to work by the means of grace, sanctification in the hearts and lives of believers. A prominent means, in the divine economy, is the worship of God in the sanctuary. It has done more than any other—perhaps than all other—means to bring His many sons into glory. The service of song awakens and calls into active exercise the devout affections of God's people. Preaching instructs them in the knowledge of God's way of saving sinners—it helps them to understand the gospel plan of salvation. Prayers are the key which unlocks the treasury of heaven and procures needed blessings for God's children. Church service is not a cold, lifeless routine of external duties, called by the Apostle "bodily exercise." It is a system of holy exercises, which demands and deserves the active and devout employment of every faculty of the soul.

But some professors of christianity are very fastidous on the subject of public worship. The songs must be soul-stirring, the prayers cursory and general, and the sermon brief. They demand a service profound, and short—very short. They are with this like the sick man is with medicine—the less of it the better they are pleased. How different are these from that devout assembly at Troas: attentive to Paul's discourse till midnight, and so far as the record informs us, not a drowsy or disinterested head in the whole congregation, but Eutychus!

These professors surely overlook the exceeding depravity of their nature and the necessity of its removal before they are qualified to enter the kingdom of heaven; and that these exercises, together with others of divine appointment, are the means by which are wrought that purification necessary to an inheritance with the saints. The more haste, the more eagerness and anxiety to get through the services, the slower they will progress in the divine life; and it is possible the discovery will one day be made that they are making no progress at all; or what is worse, that they never had any grace. I once knew a church member who applauded a certain ministry because it was so "glorious short." That was being thankful for small favors; but to the day of his death he was a very sorry christian.

It is possible such church members go to the house of God without desiring, and without preparing to receive much. According to your faith be it unto you. Unless the worshiper is hungering and thirsting after righteousness he will not be filled with the grace of Christ and the comforts of the blessed Paraclete. Will Christ thrust Himself where He is unbidden and undesired? He stands at the door and knocks; but if it is not opened, will He enter? We may expect the public worship will be irksome and unpleasant if no soul-preparation has been made to enjoy it. The judicious farmer will not deposit his seed in the earth till it is ploughed and harrowed and otherwise deeply and thoroughly pulverized But church members go to the sanctuary without any preparation, and then complain of the tediousness and tastelessness of the exercises. Why do they not retire to their closets for meditation, self-examination and prayer? Why do they not ask God to give His messenger a subject, thoughts, expressions and illustrations suited to their wants and to those of the congregation? This having been done, the exercises would probably be edifying, and, though an hour long, apparently short. The length of a sermon depends on the hearer as well as the preacher. Sermons an hour long sometimes appear to be not more than thirty minutes, and the hearer's only regret is that it was ended so soon. The fact is recognized that ministers sometimes make deplorable mistakes. But so much restlessness and impatience in the worship of God, and so much clamoring for shortness, is not a favorable commentary on the individual's piety. One of the Lord High Mayors of London was a talented, learned and pious Baptist. His minister was much his inferior in gifts and accomplishments. An intimate acquaintance one day said, "I cannot understand how you can attend so constantly and attentively the ministry of a man so much your inferior." The reply was, "He is God's accredited messenger to me, therefore I receive with meekness and gratitude the message; and honor God through His servant." These impatient, short-in-worship christians might profit by his example.

Church members may reasonable expect a correspondence between the preaching and the pay. First-class preaching cannot be commanded by fifth-class pay. And such a requirement would be commercially immoral. The illustrious King of Israel would not serve the Lord with what cost Him nothing. He would not only make an acknowledgement, but an adequate acknowledgement for accomdations received.' Do these people, who are so worried by the length and lifelessness of the sanctuary service, by their munificient christian liberality, free the minister from all care and anxiety about the bread that perisheth; and exempt him from all employments that would hinder his investing all the exercises of public worship with interest and acceptableness? There are indolent D. D.'s, and dull, dry preachers without a sufix; and for their faults no apology is offered. And there are hearers whose attention and feelings even Gabriel could not command. Some ministers regard and treat the office as a trade, not a holy calling. And like Job's hireling, look at the sun every lick they strike, with a longing desire it would hasten down, so they can get their pay for the least possible work. Alas! that the shepherd would he more concerned for the fleece than the flock.

Church members should conform their feelings and desires to the principles and order of the Church. These were acknowledged to be in harmony with the Word when they became members. The great mistake of some is, they demand that christianity harmonize with their carnal, ease-loving, pleasure-craving hearts. But the great work of the Church is, to bring their principles and actions into conformity to the divine law—to make them willing and obedient in the day of Christ's power—to produce in them that holiness of heart and life, without which no man can see the Lord. The grand and imposing ritual of Episcopacy, however æsthetic and captivating, does not transform the soul into the image of God. The grand system of Presbyterian doctrine, with all its substance and strength does not always bring the spirit of man in subjection to the will of God. The great work of the Church and the great object of life is, that our will may accord with the divine will. The religion of the Bible is self-denying, flesh-mortifying. It brings tribulation—not peace but a sword. True it brings peace, but the sword comes first. The cross must be borne before the crown can be worn. It is not promised we will be conveyed to Heaven in a magnificent drawing-room coach, curtained and cushioned with the richest tapestry. With all the self-denial and holy living possible, we are scarcely saved. We must agonize to enter in. The sacrament of penance is not advocated. Uncommanded fleshly mortifications are not recommended. And with equal care should we avoid new, easy, near, flesh-gratifying ways not known to the fathers, and not authorized in the Word. There is no royal road to mathematics but there is to Heaven. It is the King's high way, and a good old way it is. Moreover it is the ONLY way. Let us cease tinkering with the book, and clamoring for a new, easier, more convenient and more accommodating way. And if there are any whose hearts are so barren and their souls so lean, that their spiritual imbecility requires the support of forms, and ritualistic variations, let them go over into Episcopacy, Roman or Protestant; and there they will have it surely to their heart's content. But as for me and my house, let us worship God on the principle that we may do too little in His service, but there is no danger of doing too much.

SCIENTIFIC ACCURACY OF THE BIBLE.

Light travels 192,000 miles per second, and for short distances is instantaneous. Sound travels 1,130 feet per second. If we notice, by the watch, the time between the lightning and the thunder, and multiply the seconds by 1,130 we shall have the distance of the cloud from us.

The passage of the electricity through the cloud (the cause of lightning and thunder) is connected with the formation of the drops of rain. This then is the order of these events in nature: 1. The flash; 2. the thunder; 3. the fall of the rain. The time occupied by the latter depends on the height of the clouds above the earth. If it is one-fourth of a mile, 1,320 feet, by the laws of falling bodies, the drops of rain will be 9 seconds in reaching the earth, the thunder would be 1.15 seconds in striking the ear. We will have then, the lightning, no time; the report, 1.15 seconds; the rain, 9 seconds.

We have noted here these facts to call attention to the same order observed in the Bible, but inversely—Ps. 77: 17: "The clouds poured out water; the skies sent out a sound; thine arrows also went abroad." As the thunder and lightning are the most striking phenomena, they are repeated in the next verse with an earthquake as the result. "The earth trembled and shook." So, in Job 37: 1-5, we have a terrific storm, "He (God) directeth it (the lightning) under the whole heavens. After it a voice roareth * * * and He will not stay them when His voice is heard." What them refers to, it is difficult to see; it can hardly refer to thunder and lightning; in his commentary on the passage, Barnes says, "He will not hold back the rain, hail and other things which accompany the storm." This would bring it into the right order: 1. the lightning, 2. the thunder, 3. the rain, hail, &c.

The phenomena of freezing water are accurately described in the Book of Job, 37th and 38th chapters. There is a perfect agreement between the words of God and the works of God by natural law: "The breadth of the waters is straitened;" "the waters are hid as with a stone." The author of Cosmos says, "The meteorological processes which take place in the atmosphere, the formation and dissolution of vapors, according to the changing direction of the wind, the play of its colors, the generation of hail and of the rolling thunder, are described with individualizing accuracy, and many questions are propounded which we, in the present state of our physical knowledge may indeed, be able to express under more scientific definitions, but scarcely to answer more satisfactorily. The Book of Job is generally regarded as the most perfect specimen of the poetry of the Hebrews. It is alike picturesque in the delineation of individual phenomena, and artistically skillful in the arrangement of the whole work."

THE BASE-LINE.

The common base-line of religious principle is, "Do right though the heavens fall;" or as it is put by the apostles, concerning all questions about the standard of personal duty, "We ought to obey God rather than men." In any and every emergency where the right is apparent, we are called of God to adhere to the right at every cost to ourselves or to others. "It is a small thing whether I live or die; but it is a great thing that I do what is right whether I live or die," said a true hero when tempted to do wrong for the saving of his life. Measuring from the base-line the level of the path of duty is always clear. To pursue the path at a given time may seem to involve loss to ourselves or to others; it may clearly risk our pecuniary interest, our professional or social standing, our closest friendships, our very life itself—or, what is far more than all these together, our own good name and the welfare of those who are dearer than life to us; but large as this risk may seem, it is not to be compared to the risk of holding back from that path. Unless we then push right on in the face of all confronting dangers, our life is an absolute failure; it would have been better for us to never have been born. No life is worth saving, no interests are worth preserving, at the cost of wrong doing or of neglect of duty. So far, there ought never to be a question. The common base-line of God's truth settles these main measurements. But there are times and places when the real point at issue is, "What is right?" rather than, "Shall we do right?" To enable us to meet these emergencies wisely, we need to fix upon minor base-lines, or base-lines for our local sphere and our immediate personal work. Such base-lines can be agreed on; they ought to be.

Take, for example, the matter of religious belief. We are sure that the inspired revelation of God is a safer guide of our faith than any man-made creed or catechism; but are we, therefore, to reject all creeds or catechisms as helps to our study or teaching, until we have compassed for ourselves all that the Bible says on the points touched by them? Must we have no theological opinions until we have shaped them from our independent Bible study? A good base-line to measure from just here would seem to be, that the presumption is in favor of the conclusions of those Christian scholars whom we suppose to best represent the faith and practice of Christianity; and that it is well for us to accept those conclusions until we find good reason for the conviction that they are manifestly at variance with the Word of God. A good engineer newly coming in charge of a piece of road building does not feel called on to re-run all the "levels" of his predecessor, unless he has special reason for distrusting their accuracy. His original presumption is in their favor. When, however, we are sure that the Bible teaches one thing and a creed or a catechism teaches another, we are to stand by the Bible view of truth, at every cost of being looked at or opposed as heretics or unbelievers. This base-line would guard us against bigotry on the one hand, and undue laxity on the other.

Then again, in the performance of our daily duties, the question often arises, What shall have the first place? A dozen things press at once for attention; which must give way for the others? A good base-line for measuring the relative altitude of conflicting claims on one's time was given by an earnest worker to a young man who confessed his perplexity on this subject: "First attend to the thing that you have promised to do, and that you are paid for doing. Next, take hold of those things that you have pledged yourself to do, but are not paid for doing. After this you can give yourself to those things that you would like to do because you think they ought to be done by you." In other words, if you are a pastor, or a lawyer, or a teacher, you have practially agreed to perform certain services for your church, or your clients, or your pupils, and a stipulated sum is to be paid you for so doing. While those things press for immediate attention, your time is not at your disposal for anything else. You must not respond to a call for outside work, or for new business, or for help to others. Such a call is a temptation, to be resisted unflinchingly. If there comes an hour when something else can be done without conflict with such imperative claims, attend first to that which already has a premise of your attention. Not until these two classes of claims are satisfied, have you a right of selection from other demands upon your services. Recognizing such a base-line as this, many a man would have no hesitation in sticking at his proper business, in spite of multiplied calls on him to go off and "do a great deal of good" elsewhere. But there are emergencies when great interests overshadow lesser ones, and when what would otherwise be a man's duty is no longer binding on him. A young clerk might properly be late at his employer's office if, by stopping back an hour, he could save his mother's life, or rescue a family from ruin. A professional man might be justified in abandoning an interest he had agreed to further, if he found that great wrong would be done to others by his adhering to his unfortunate agreement. What base-line will enable one to measure such cases as these? The ordinary claims of duty are binding on a man unless the extraordinary demands are such as to justify him in losing place and credit and confidence by his fidelity to his higher convictions. He may conscientiously put an extraordinary claim above an ordinary one; but only when he is prepared to take the fullest consequences of his failure on the lower plane. The base-line must show him that the interests he adheres to are obviously higher than those he abandons.

Another safe base-line of personal conduct is, that principle, and not feeling, should be our guide in all our actions. We have no right to read our Bibles, and pray, and go to church, and be reverent in speech and demeanor toward God, and toward all that represents Him, merely when we feel like it, and abstain from these observances at other times. We ought to have a right spirit in all such things; but we ought to be right in action whether we are right in spirit or not. And as toward God, so toward our fellows. We ought to be kindly in word and deed, and cordial and cheery in manner, toward our loved ones, whether our feelings for the hour prompt us to this course or not. Whatever may be our impulses, or moods, or freaks of feeling, our course and manner should never be such as to give discomfort to those who are dear to us, merely because "we want to be ourselves, you know." It is a great deal better never to be ourselves than ever to be unkindly, or regardless of the feelings of those whom we love. And so in the matter of giving, as in that of doing. It is not right for us to give or to refuse to give merely because we feel generous or stingy for the time being; nor yet because it is a peculiarly tempting or a peculiarly unattractive appeal for aid which now presents itself. We ought to have some plan of giving, some recognized basis of duty in the meeting of every call on us for assistance. We are the Lord's stewards; and whether we give or withhold we should do that which we believe our Master would have us do in that particular instance. If we give, it ought to be because we believe that Jesus Christ would disapprove our refusal to give. If we withhold, it ought to be because we think it would displease Him to have us give anything.—S. S. Times.

HOMEWARD TO THEE.

FROM THE SWEDISH.

Never so fathomless a sea,
But through its depths there reacheth me
His still supporting hand;
Never so drear can desert be
But there His love grows green for me,
Amid the scorching sand.

For He, who over sea and land
Doth homeward guide from farthest strand
The bird's unerring way,
Can surely safe my pathway steer—
Then let me never yield to fear,
Nor once in darkness stray.

Though I am weak and wayward still,
Lord, do for me Thy chosen will—
But this my prayer shall be:
Wherever wings my wandering way,
O steer it so at last it may
Safe homeward lead to Thee.

SULTAN ABDUL HAMID.

Since our arrival nothing in the way of spectacle has entertained us more than the march of Sultan Hamid from his palace to the Mosque on Friday last. Friday is the Mohammedan Sunday, and on that day the Sultan is expected to show himself to his subjects and to join the faithful in prayer in one or the other of the great Mosques of the city. On this occasion he selected the one nearest to the palace. It is said that of late he has been very nervous through fear of an attempt on his life, and that he is averse to showing himself in public. We had a good opportunity of seeing the pageant—of inspecting the troops which lined the street on both sides, and the promiscuous multitude of natives and foreigners who had assembled to witness the spectacle. Here were to be seen faces of all shapes, complexions of all shades, raiment of all colors, and all the styles and fashions of dress by which men and women adorn or disfigure themselves. Here were Turks in the universal red fez, but all the rest of their dress European and sombre; Circassians arrayed like brigands, in tall caps, with knives and silver mounted pistols stuck in their belts, and their cartridge boxes worn high up on their breasts; Syrians with striped silk handkerchiefs wound round their heads, embroidered vests, and flowing nether habiliments; Greeks in fanciful costumes looking like harlequins; Bulgarians in coarse, drab cloaks and caps trimmed with fur; Armenian priests in black veils; Albanian dandies in long curls; blue-black negroes from Darfur, jet-black negroes from Nubia, with long scars on their faces, made by being gashed (ornamentally) in childhood; Mongrels of mixed races with ruffian written in every lineament; Mohammedan women in carriages, with folds of muslin drawn across their faces just under their eyes, but so transparent as to reveal the contour of their features; and sprinkled among this motley throng, a handful of Europeans, chiefly English, with here and there an American. All this while we were waiting; but Sultan Hamid did not keep us waiting long. First there was a movement among the policemen, then a stir in the crowd, then a blast of trumpets, the palace gates opened, the body guard filed out marching in advance, and Sultan Abdul Hamid appeared, mounted on a white charger, immediately behind him three or four priests in snowy turbans, and a retinue of gaily bedizzened officers following. The Sultan is thirty-eight years old, thin and rather below the ordinary stature, with a dark complexion and beard cut close. He returned the salutations of his officers with a quick wave of his hand, frequently repeated, and reaching the door of the Mosque he hastily dismounted, the priests commenced a loud chant and all swept in together and disappeared from sight. There was no shouting from the outside multitude, only a single, a sort of a mechanical, regulation cheer, from the troops, and all was silent. There are two very different aspects in which the Sultan may be contemplated: First, as the absolute ruler over one of the greatest empires of the world, territorially; revered by the millions who profess the Mohammedan faith throughout Europe, Asia and Africa; his will the sole law in his vast dominions. Second, as the representative of an aggregation of discordant nationalities; a ruler with a bankrupt treasury, a disaffected and disconraged people, hopeless of the future; his very capital filled with the embassadors of the great powers of Europe who pay him an outward homage and inwardly contemn or despise him; owning numberless palaces, yet without a home; surrounded by soldiers whose business it is to shield him from all harm, yet perpetually trembling for his life. Such is the Sultan Abdul Hamid II.—M. D. H. in Central Presbyterian.

PAUL'S LAST LETTER AND THE CLOAK.

The fourth chapter begins with a solemn appeal to Timothy to do his duty as a pastor "in season, out of season" because the time would soon come when men would turn away from the truth to the fantastic doctrines of teachers who would answer them according to their own lusts. "Do thou then be sober in all things, endure sufferings, do the work of an evangelist, fulfil thy ministry. For I am already being poured in libation, and the time of my departure is close at hand. I have striven the good strife, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me in that day; and not to me only, but also to all who have loved His appearing."

That is practically St. Paul's last word. The remainder of the letter is occupied with personal information, given in the natural, loose, accidental order of a letter, mingled with earnest entreaty to him that he would come at once. "Do your best to come to me quickly." Demas, Crescens, Titus are all absent from him; Erastus did not come with him farther than Corinth; Trophimus was taken ill at Miletus; Luke only is left. Mark is useful to him for service—perhaps because he knew Latin—and therefore, Timothy is to take him up somewhere on the way and bring him. Tychicus is already on the way to Ephesus so that he can take Timothy's place when he arrives. Timothy is to be on his guard against the pronounced hostilities of Alexander the coppersmith. Then follows the touching allusion to his first trial and deliverance, on which we have already dwelt. Greetings are sent to Prisca, Aquila, and the house of Onesiphorus. Once more, "Do your best to come before winter"—if he comes after that time he may be too late. "Eubulus greets thee and Pudens, and Linus and Claudia, and all the brethren. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you."

I have purposely omitted the one simple touching message, introduced so incidentally, and with such inimitable naturalness. "When you come bring with you the cloak that I left at Troas, at Carpus' house, and the books, especially the parchments." The verse has been criticised as trivial, as unworthy of the dignity of inspiration. But men must take their notions of inspiration from facts, and not try to square the facts to their own theories. Even on these grounds the verse has its own value for all who would not obscure divine inspiration, nor obliterate the true meaning and sacredness of Scripture by substituting a dictated infallibility for the free play of human emotions in souls deeply stirred by the Holy Spirit of God. But even on other grounds how little could we spare this verse! What a light does it throw on the last sad days of the persecuted Apostle! The fact that these necessary possessions—perhaps the whole that the Apostle could call his own in this world—had been left at the house of Carpus, may, as we have seen, indicate his sudden arrest either at Troas or on his way to it. A prisoner who is being hurried from place to place by unsympathizing keepers is little able to look after his property. But now the Apostle is settled again, though his home is but a prison, and he feels that it will be his home for life. Winter is coming on, and winter in a Roman prison, as he knows by experience, may be very cold. He wants to get back his rough traveling cloak. It was one of those large sleeveless garments which we should call an "overcoat" or "dreadnought." Perhaps St. Paul had woven it himself of the black goat's hair of his native province. And, doubtless—for he was a poor man—it was an old companion, wetted many a time in the water-torrents of Asia, whitened with the dust of Roman roads, stained with the brine of shipwreck when Euro-Aquilo was driving the Adriatic into foam. He may have slept in its warm shelter on the chill Phrygian uplands, under the canopy of stars, or it may have covered his bruised and trembling limbs in the dungeon of Philippi. It is of little value; but now that the old man sits shivering in some gloomy cell under the palace, or on the rocky floor of the Tullianum and the winter nights are coming on, he bethinks him of the old cloak in the house of Carpus and asks Timothy to bring it to him. "The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments." The biblia—the papyrus books—few we may be sure, but old friends: perhaps he had bought them when he was a student in the school of Gamaliel at Jerusalem; or they may have been given him by his wealthier converts. The papyrus books, then, let Timothy bring, but especially the parchments—the vellum rolls. What were these? Perhaps among them was the diploma of his Roman franchise; or were they precious rolls of Isaiah and the Psalms, and the lesser prophets, which father or mother had given him as a life-long treasure in the far-off happy days when, little dreaming of all that would befall him, he played, a happy boy, in the dear old Tarsian home? Dreary and long are the days—the evenings longer and drearier still—in that Roman dungeon; and it will be a deep joy to read once more here how David and Isaiah, in their deep troubles learnt, as he had learnt, to suffer and be strong. A simple message, then, about an old cloak and some books, but very touching. They may add a little comfort, a little relief, to the long drawn tedium of these last dreary days. Perhaps he thinks he would like to give them, as his parting bequest, to Timothy himself, or to the modest and faithful Luke, that their true hearts may remember him when the sea of life flows smooth once more over the nameless grave. It would be like that sheep-skin cloak which centuries afterwards, the hermit Anthony bequeathed to the Archbishop Athanasius—a small gift, but all he had, Poor inventory of a saint's possessions! Not worth a hundredth part of what a buffoon would get for one jest in Cæsar's palace, or an acrobat for a feat in the amphitheatre; but would he have exchanged them for the jewels of the adventurer Agrippa, or the purple of the unspeakable Nero? No, be is much more than content. His soul is joyful in God: If be has the cloak to keep him warm, and the books and parchments to teach and encourage him, and Mark to help him in various ways, and if, above all, Timothy will come himself, then life will have shed on him its last rays of sunshine; and in lesser things, as well as in all greater, he will wait with thankfulness, even with exultation, the pouring out in libation those last few drops of his heart's blood, of which the rich, full stream has for these long years been flowing forth upon God's altar in willing sacrifice.—Farrar.

PREACH JESUS.

Preach Jesus, the true sacrifice for sin, offered Himself, not any miserable substitute offered by men. Distinguish well the visible from the spiritual Church, the outward from the inward man—so shall you keep separate the shadow from the substance, the semblance from the truth. Preach Jesus, the true Priest forever, the High Priest in heaven: not the bishops or clergy, weak worms of the earth. Preach Jesus, "the Minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." No breathing thoughts or burning words, no tongue of angel or of flaming seraph can tell the treasures of this matchless name. Jesus, the name above every name, has been preached in city and in country, in cottage and in dungeon, in caverns of the earth, on wildest hillside and on solitary shore; and wherever preached in simplicity, faith, and prayer, grace has been given and power bestowed, sinners have wept and prayed and trusted, while angels sang in ecstacy, and heaven has rung with joy. The poor, the miserable, the lonely and forsaken, the heirs of sorrow and the sons of shame, have been gladdened by His Gospel and cheered by His word. No music to their ears like the music of His mercy; no cordial for their heart like the balm of His blood; no cover for their nakedness like the garment of His righteousness; and no procession for their wonder like the going forth of Jesus to conquer and to save. No structure raised by mortal hands, however stately and however costly, can satisfy their taste or come up to their desire. They look for the "habitation of God" that Jesus is erecting of living stones, hewn out and fashioned by the Almighty's hand, growing and glittering in the sunshine of His power, and resting secure on His everlasting strength. Already in anticipation and contemplation thereof, are they charmed with a beauty such as eye never saw, and regaled with music such as ear never heard.—The late Bishop of Cork.

LEARNING AND PIETY.

If we may believe some Christians, and especially some Christian writers, there is nothing that so needs consideration as the intellectual side of religious profession and enterprise, and hence of the questions that claim the attention of scholars and critics. They talk exclusively of readings and manuscripts, exegesis, the relation between religion and science, Biblical scholarship, and the all and singular that is comprehended in the literature of the Scriptures and associated studies. So enamored do they grow of these pursuits that simple piety loses its fragrance for them. While regarding it as a sin and misfortune not to be saved, they yet esteem it an almost equal obliquity to be a Christian without the philological accomplishments.

It would be hard to tell how greatly the world and Church have been indebted to the men who have given their minds this kind of direction. They have been part of its glory. They still exist as those who, if not its chief ornaments, are yet its noble representatives, and to whom it turns in times of danger for light and vindication. But there is such a thing as being made mad by much learning, and in the zeal of that which is scholarly and nothing more, of forgetting other things that are of vastly more importance. The life of Christ in the soul, nourished and cherished there as an experience and exhibited in the daily walk and conversation, is of more value than all the technical study and philosophy that may be gained in a lifetime. He is the happiest man who has the most of it, and the best one besides. And as to influence upon the world in the way of commending the truth and in persuading men to believe in the Lord, one such man is worth more than an academy full of savans with all their learning and showy accomplishments of proof and pedantry, in whom a vigorous piety is wanting.—United Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Two Roman Catholic missionaries, French subjects, have been imprisoned by King John of Abyssinia, who retains them in custody. The French consul at Massowah has demanded their release.

In view of the anticipated expulsion of the Jesuits from France the Committee of the Swiss National Council have requested the Federal Council to take measures to prevent their establishment in Switzerland.

Pere Hyacinthe is about to deliver four lectures at Willis' Rooms on Positive Christianity, under the sanction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The chair is to be occupied by the Primate, the Bishop of Bath and Wells, the Bishop of Edinburgh, and Lord Monnt-Temple.

Vice Chancellor Malins on Monday made an order against Monsignor Capel to compel him to give up the premises in which he resides. Monsignor Capel, notwithstanding that he has not paid the consideration, £1800, or the rent or fire insurance, absolutely refuses to surrender possession.

The Lutheran Home for Deaconesses in Darmstadt has, it is announced, become an important Protestant Sisterhood. It can boast of 13 deaconesses, 23 novices, and 12 probationers—thus over 100 in all. Nine of them are now at work at the German Hospital in London.

At a meeting of the Jersey States on Friday a question was put to the President by a clerical member respecting the rumored purchase of property in the island by Jesuits. The speaker expressed apprehensions that the presence of Jesuits in Jersey might involve the local government into conflict with the French government. The President, after expressing ignorance of any such movement, said there was no law to prevent foreigners settling in Jersey, but they could not purchase property except by a British intermediary.

Mrs. Booth lectured to a large audience in St. James' Hall last week, on "the principles, measures, and aims" of the Salvation Army. Mr. T. A. Denny presided. Mrs. Booth claimed for the movement that it was founded on the principle of adaptation of means to an end, and deplored the practical infidelity of the present day, which totally ignored the subject of religion. Pointing out that ninety per cent. of the working population in this country never crossed the threshold of a church or chapel, she showed that the object in view was to attract the multitudes; and, though admitting that the modes pursued by the army might be open to the charge of being sensational, she urged that novelty was better than stagnation and death. Referring to certain misrepresentations which had been circulated respecting the aim and motives of its promoters, Mrs. Booth deprecated, amid loud cheers, the harsh criticisms with which the movement had been met, and, whilst expressing her strong dislike of sensationalism for mere sensation's sake, maintained that the class for whom they labored could not be reached in any way but that adopted by the Salvation Army. Genteel people had tried their way and had failed in it, and persons who sneered at the new movement should remember that it had been prompted by the necessities of the case. With some pride she showed that the organization comprised 5,280 public speakers throughout the country, and that during the "Salvation year" ending last month, the people to whom they preached had subscribed £14,669. There were 151 stations connected with the army, and the rent-roll for public buildings amounted to over £3,000 annually. Having described the mode in which these stations are organized and worked, Mrs. Booth asked for subscriptions to enable her to extend the movement, which it was proposed should embrace parts of France and Africa. In the course of the evening the "happy family"—a father and his three sons—sang a salvation hymn, whose plaintive melody was chanted with an intonation which was peculiar, but not unpleasing.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30, 1880.

GLADSTONE'S EMBARRASSMENTS.

Mr. Gladstone cannot long retain his popularity in England, however great it may be at the present, if he undertakes to please all those by whose votes and influence the Liberal party came into power. That party indeed would seem to have come in as has been suggested by holding in abeyance during the elections every question calculated to divide or distract. Promises indefinite but profuse are now coming up for fulfillment, and cannot be postponed. The consequence is the great statesman finds himself making enemies in one direction by trying to secure friends in another.

His latest involvement is with Mr. Bradlangh, an infidel, who was returned from Nottingham. It is not probable that in this country any constituency would send to Congress a man so unsparingly denounced as a blacknard as is this man Bradlaugh; though once elected we presume the question of his admission would depend solely on his belonging to the party that might be in power.

This, however, is aside. Bradlangh was returned by Nottingham, and on being called on to take the oath preparatory to taking his seat, declined on the ground of non-recognition of a God. On reflection he concluded to take the oath, provided it should be understood that in his case it was a mere form, a legal necessity. A committee appointed to take the subject under consideration, decided that an oath taken under the circumstances would not be such taking of the oath as is required by the law, but they advise that Bradlaugh be allowed to affirm. A very strong opposition demands that Bradlangh be refused admission to Parliament on account of his character and principles. Just here Mr. Gladstone comes in and pledges the support of the Government to the infidel. The result will be, no doubt, that Bradlangh will take his place in the British Parliament, but how long can Mr. Gladstone sustain himself in these repeated outrages upon public opinion?

THE INVALID FUND.

The appeal now before our people in behalf of the Invalid Fund of the Church has special claims to attention.

The secretaries inform us that last year 122 families of aged, infirm and deceased ministers were aided from this fund, and in many cases serious suffering was averted. In every case comfort was brought to the hearts and lives of the recipients of bounty. Surely no motives could be stronger than those appealed to, viz: Love to the Saviour as he is represented by his suffering children; duty to those who have given up worldly emoluments and devoted themselves to the service of the Church, and who now need our timely help; regard for our own sanctification and growth in grace which will be promoted by ministering to Christ's poor.

In the very nature of the case, ministers cannot accumulate money or property so as at their death to leave their families provided for. A larger amount is needed this year than has ever been contributed.

Let it not be that those ministers who have faithfully served the Church in the days of their strength shall be allowed to suffer in the days of their infirmity; let it not be that the widows and orphans of those who have spent their lives in the service of the Church shall suffer want.

We invite attention to a communication in another column, which gives some facts on this subject.

EBENEZER COLORED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, NEWBERN, N. C.

The appeal of this church through the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, showed the receipt of $711 40, and that $650 more were needed, of which the last $100 were promised. In response I have received from North Carolina: Mrs. W. B., $10; Mrs. G., $2; W. N. H. S., $7 00; Rev. Dr. M., $2; Miss M., $1. Total $22. From New York: Ed. Gridly, $5; John Sinclair, $25. C. A. Day, Chicago, $10; Mrs. S. D. B., through Rev. Dr. Rendall, of Lincoln University, $50; and from sundry friends in various States, sums of $1 to $5, amounting to $18. Total $130. Then Hon. Wm. E. Dodge kindly promises, in addition to his former donation, to give $50 whenever it will enable us to claim the $100. If then this band of colored Presbyterians can now get $370 they will secure $150 more, and be able to get in their church. It is weatherboarded and nearly shingled. Friend, shall the work stop? No! No!! But our money is almost out. Send what aid you can to make up this $370. How easy to do this if each reader will give something. If you knew the anxiety and zeal here, you would not fail by the next mail to send some of the Lord's money to Rev. L. C. Vass, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, and Treasurer of Ebenezer Church, Newbern, N. C.

UNIVERSITY NORMAL SCHOOL.

The North Carolina University Normal School deserves a good writing up, and in the following letter from Chapel Hill, June 24th, to the Raleigh News it has it:

"The fourth State Normal School was formally opened this morning in the University chapel. Present on the rostrum, Professor Mangum, of the University, and Professors Dugger, McIver and Hatcher, of the Normal School. In the quadrangle below, Professors Tomlinson, Richard B. Lewis, English, W. B. Phillips and others of the Normal School. The 103d Psalm was read and prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Currie, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Chapel Hill. Professor Mangum then addressed the audience, numbering about 75 or 80:

"'The day for opening was unfortunate in the circumstance that the round trip tickets on the railroad were not issued till to-day, and this had delayed the arrival of students. President Battle was also unavoidably absent for a few days, and Professor Hotchkiss, who was to preside over the school till the arrival of Professor Shepherd, would not be here till this evening. Nevertheless the school would be opened and organized. Pupils of this session are to be congratulated on the advantages provided for them. Prof. Shepherd—a fine scholar, an author of acknowledged merit and a native Carolinian—we shall be a fold without a shepherd till he does come. (Applause.) Of Major Hotchkiss nothing need be said; our obligations to him in the past cannot be forgotten, and we will commit the organization of the school to him with great satisfaction. The other members of the Normal School Faculty are well known and appreciated: Professor McIver, prominent among us from the first; Friend Tomlinson, always welcome. A number of young teachers are to be employed—students from the University—they will do their duty. Prof. D'Anna, our musical director, we are especially pleased to welcome; and also the lady directress of the Kindergarten, just arrived from Washington City. One young North Carolina lady teacher has come from New York City to show us how to teach any number of bad boys and girls without severity—not even a frown. (Applause in the galleries by little boys.) She has been teaching in the New York Public School Course. Most important of all—Influence of North Carolina Normal School abroad. Ours was the pioneer school; other States have followed us. Mississippi, Georgia, Arkansas, &c., even old Virginia has done what she hates to do, come in behind, and acknowledged that North Carolina was ahead. We may brag on this fact. We ought to brag. If our newspapers felt the importance of such things as they ought, they would make it known. Arrangements stated for the normal scholars, tickets, board, aid, &c., &c. All who want to know about everything, will please go to Mr. Mickle.' (Applause.) Teachers warned against overtaxing the students, Chapel Hill localities pointed out, &c., &c.

"Professor McIver spoke next—education institutions—their importance and superiority in America—characteristics of the Pilgrim Fathers—colleges founded before the Revolution—educated men of those days were the great men of the country—the powerful men—hearty greeting to all present, &c., &c.

"Professor Tomlinson spoke briefly, and as usual ad rem. Congratulated himself on finding himself again in Chapel Hill. Congratulates all of us—would not enlarge. 'Blessed is the man who makes a short speech, for he shall be invited to speak again.' (Thunders of applause.)

"Capt. Dugger read part of President Battle's report for last year. Made some practical remarks on what we are assembled here for. Must not be ashamed of our ignorance—must ask questions, and get all lights possible.

"Names were now taken down, ages of pupils, statistics, &c.

"Mr. W. B. Phillips made a few remarks. Professor English would have done so, but declared that Professor Tomlinson had cut his long speech up.

"Professor Mangum closed, appointing the opening hour at 9 A. M. to-morrow.

"The Normal School hardly seems itself without President Battle and Professor Ladd, but it has begun well and pleasantly. Numerous arrivals to-day and this evening. The weather is hot and bright, and a brisk breeze is blowing. Everything promises well for the fourth Normal School, except that there is little or nothing to eat hereabouts."

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

The public mind is greatly exercised just now on the subject of means to prevent collisions at sea, which are now becoming alarmingly frequent. The electric light regarded in the light of what was claimed for it, has proved a signal failure, but its serviceableness in a fog as a means of indicating the proximity of ships at sea seems to be undeniable.

All attempts at progress or improvement are resisted. There exists in human nature a vein of perverseness, which opposes everything whatever be its claims to recognition; everything, whether for material advantage or for moral welfare. Many more ships will likely be lost, and many more lives will be sacrificed before shipowners can be brought to adopt due means for protecting human life.

Referring to this matter in connection with the recent disaster on Long Island Sound, the Scottish American Journal says: "Despite the prejudice in the minds of seamen against every innovation in their ancient craft, the electric light strongly commends itself for use by passenger steamers, especially while moving through thick fog. In the objection alluded to there is little or no force, since, as has been remarked, in many fogs the opacity of the air entirely conceals all objects a ship's length ahead, and, if the navigator is steering by the compass, it must frequently happen that he will be in positions where the view of distant objects is for the time of no consequence, while the view of an object near or nearing him is of vital importance. It cannot be doubted that the electric light, properly manipulated, is capable of irradiating the entire area of danger; and though it may not be absolutely certain still it does seem probable that if the electric light had been in proper use the recent calamities would not have befallen the "Narragansett" and the "Anchoria." A number of valuable experiments have latterly been made on the subject; and according to the report of a Select Committee of the British House of Commons, so far as the practical application of the light has gone, there seems to be no reason to doubt it has established itself for lighthouse illumination. If this be true, and the range of beam is sufficient to warn vessels of high speed from running on a sunken rock, why should it not avail to warn them from running into collision with each other?

Not long ago the steamship "Faraday," whilst moored at Gravesend previous to her departure for the United States, was illuminated by the electric light which she carries. The light is said to have been equal to about 5,000 normal candles; and persons on shore nearly a third of a mile off could see to read ordinary writing with perfect ease. In speaking of this the London Telegraphic Journal said that the vessel carrying so powerful a light is able to sight any distant object on dark nights, and that she herself could be much more clearly seen; and that thus the light provided a better safe-guard against collisions. The powerful light on the "Faraday" absorbs only about three and a half horse-power used by a small steam engine placed on deck. The British war ships "Temeraire," "Dreadnought," and others are similarly equipped with electric light apparatus; and the general opinion is that it is used to great advantage. What is thus available and useful in ships of war may surely prove equally practicable and advantageous in merchant ships. This is the very reason why the experiment should be made, and the recent sad experience affords a strong inducement to try it at once. The subject should not be allowed to drop as the excitement of the disaster subsides."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The steamer Passport has resumed its trips between Wilmington and Smithville, and Capt. Harper, the courteous and obliging master and agent announce that trips on the Sabbath will be discontinued. We most heartily commend the Messrs. Harper for signalizing their coming into possession of the steamer, by thus recognizing the sacredness of the Lord's Day. All right thinking people will wish them abundant success.

Our exchanges are making considerable sport of the action of the Methodist General Conference, in requiring that all persons, admitted into the ministry hereafter, must abstain from the use of tobacco. The same persons who adjudged that a young brother must not acquire the habit, might, it would seem, have decided that older brethren must desist from it. But the older brethren may as well prepare for the inevitable. The new law will be repealed at the next session, or there will be a general clearing out of oft-burnt old clays and beautifully colored meerschauns.

Mr. Mackonochie—the name suggests the warwhoop and the tomahawk—is holding his ground and bidding defiance to the laws of the British realm.

Lord Penzance decided that the ritualistic practices of Mr. Mackonochie were opposed to law. (Here the power of the judiciary became fatigued and took a rest.) Mr. Mackonochie kept right on, and the prosecuting bishop for awhile retired. After months of waiting the bishop brings suit praying that Mr. Mackonochie may be deprived of his curacy for contumacy. Lord Penzance decides that Mr. Mackonochie ought to be punished, but that the prosecutor did not move in time for execution of judgment, and the court in self-respect cannot enter a new judgment while the first is treated with contempt. (Here the power of the judiciary is exhausted).

Brother Mills, of the Oxford Orphan Asylum, is decidedly a practical man. In the Orphans' Friend he recognizes a somewhat serious fact and duly provides for it. Hear him:

"Courting is obliged to be done; so we have prepared for it. Short benches will be found at suitable places in the grove. All courting couples are requested to occupy these, and not to make any disturbance in the galleries. Courting in the building is positively forbidden."

Would it be a serious infringement to apply that plan to Sabbath Schools? Possibly there are other places where the plan might be worked to advantage.

Our Monthly, the brisk and bright little organ of the Thornwell Orphanage at Clinton, S. C., says this, which we commend to our readers:

"There is a room in the Orphanage that is in need of somebody to look after it. It was intended for a sick-room, in case any child becomes ill and needs special attention. In time past we have had need for it, though we are glad to say, for a half year we have had no case of sickness in the Institution. Still, we cannot hope for this immunity always, and hence we would be glad to have this sick-room furnished. Twenty-five or thirty dollars will be enough. Is there not some Church, Sabbath School or individual that would undertake to do this? We hope to have a speedy reply."

There are no more liberal-hearted, earnest, saintly men than some of our Baptist brothers; but among others there is a woful tendency to run to seed on exclusivism. One exchange notes that, "Mr. Graves, of Memphis, the old Landmarker, has now gone one step further. Not content with non-communion with those immersed by non-immersed ministers, he is now contending that "intercommunion between Baptist churches is unscriptural and inconsistent." He has got a book out on the subject.

Up North—but we'll let the Christian at Work tell it in its own way:

There is a breeze blowing; it is a hymn-book breeze—a Baptist hymn-book breeze; and it blows like the Harmattan, Simoon, or Sirocco, so to speak. All in this wise: Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robinson is known as that rara avis, a successful maker of hymn and tune books. Somehow—won't you tell us how it is, Doctor?—Dr. Robinson makes a book that people like to use in their churches. The clergy like it; the pew-owners like it; the choir-leaders like it; the choirs like it; the organists like it; the boy that blows the organ likes it; in short, all like it except—except. Well, Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur—known as an able and popular Baptist preacher—discerned the successful character of Dr. Robinson's book, and he reasoned in this wise: Dr. Robinson makes one of the best hymn-books extant; his book contains Pedobaptist hymns and affusion hymns: why not eliminate these and substitute hymns bearing upon adult baptism and immersion? Sure enough, why not;—considering that most of the hymns are written by those not connected with the Baptist denomination, why should not Baptists use their hymns and hymn-books, just as Protestants use the beautiful hymns of such Roman Catholics as Faber, Ambrose, the Bernards (Clairvaux and Cluni), Adam of St. Victor, Peter Damiani, Thomas Aquinas, Thomas of Celano, Venantius Fortunatus, etc., etc.? And so Dr. MacArthur proceeded to edit an edition of Dr. Robinson's book adapted to the Baptist denomination, which a great many Baptists like, and the Examiner—whose fidelity to Baptist ordinances will not be questioned—approves. And now a vigorous protest goes up, not because Dr. MacArthur uses hymns written by those not Baptists—for somehow that difficulty is insurmountable—but because he presumed to make use of the labors of an unimmersed brother, even Dr. Robinson, and as a result Dr. MacArthur and his book have been attacked in newspaper and circular—the latter of course anonymous. It isn't regular you know, for a Baptist hymn book should be compiled by Baptists, should consist of hymns written by Baptists only, the types set up by Baptist printers and printed on presses that have been immersed. Next to a point, mathematically defined as having "neither length nor breadth," we know of nothing quite so infinitesimal as the spirit which refuses a good praise-book because the editor who first compiled some of the hymns, or the musician who set them to music, was not of a particular denominational stamp. As to the matter of the anonymous circular referred to, and which impugns both the character of Dr. Robinson's book and Dr. MacArthur's editorship, if the writer of that circular is as narrow bodily as he seems to be mentally, he ought to be able to take considerable recreation on the edge of a razor and find plenty of room for a game of croquet.

We have not at this time, and do not say that we have had at any time within an indefinite period, such communications as the following from our contemporary refers to. Yet we must confess that we have had a very like experience in times that are past, and so we pronounce the editorial cogitations entirely sensible:

"He (the editor) has just read over the manuscript of a very superior article, full of thought, instruction and interest. It is nearly three columns in length. Can a place be found for it in this issue of his paper? He studies over it; he is anxious to put it in; but the "forms" admit only just so many columns of matter. He must have something for this class of readers and something for that class. He must not omit the children: yet he must have some doctrinal, some practical, some meditative articles, and sometimes enlighten his readers even upon the controversial questions of the day. By all means he must not crowd out the Sunday School Lesson, or the news from the churches and the presbyteries. How can he make room for the three column article? He studies and puzzles, breaks down in despair, and postpones the article, with the feeling that this number of the paper is marred by its absence, and the writer will feel as if his article is not valued.

What can the editor do? Brethren, come to his relief by boiling down some of these excellent thoughts, so that more of them can come within the cast-iron limits of the "forms" that hold the types. And have a little patience if he delays your article longer than is right. He cannot help it. But by all means keep on writing.

What does the reader do with three column articles? Tell it not in Gath: but the truth is, that some of the readers skip the long articles and read only the short ones! We who want our influence to be felt by every reader of the paper will try (like Daniel Webster and Judge Curtis) to say a wonderful amount in a few words."—Christian Observer.

PROSPECT CHURCH, CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

Rev. J. A. Ramsay writes:

HELP GOD'S POOR AND DEPENDENT SERVANTS.

An editorial remark in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN about a year ago, to the effect that what our Christian people want to interest them in the Church's work is "facts about individual cases," impressed me no little. From the nature of the case, it is oftentimes difficult to give these, without doing violence to personal feelings. I have by me, however, a letter from an aged saint who lives in a different part of the country from that in which the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN chiefly circulates—the widow of an eminent man of God—which so exactly, modestly and gratefully represents the condition and needs, and feelings of many that I am sure some of your readers will thank me for giving them an opportunity of reading it. Some of them too, who have been liberal supporters of the Invalid Fund will be thankful for what God has enabled them to do for this great object of christian benevolence, while others who have neglected its claims will perhaps be led to feel that it is not only a duty but a privilege to minister in the name of Christ to the wants of His beloved disciples.

My correspondent writes as follows: "A week ago I received through the Committee of Presbytery the appropriation made for my support. I thank you for your kind consideration of the wants of the widow and of the orphan, and also those Christian friends who contribute of their means to those who are needy and dependent.

Having been deprived during an early period of the war of husband, children and others on whom I had depended, I had some very trying and painful experiences. In a time of pressing need I received (very unexpectedly) the semi-annual appropriation from the Invalid Fund; and I cannot express my gratitude to my Heavenly Father for His loving kindness, in providing for my necessities—for without this aid I would have been deprived of many comforts which I have obtained through it. It has been my main support. How faithful are God's promises! How rich in mercy to all who trust in Him! I have now passed my three score years and ten, and of course feel the infirmities of age increasing upon me, and I cannot expect to be spared much longer."

It has never been my privilege to meet the writer of this letter, but from my youth I have venerated the name of her husband, which, if it were mentioned would recall to your older ministerial readers an eminent man of God, who was instrumental in doing a large work in the building up and extension of Zion in an important section, and whose memory is still fragrant among the mountains and valleys to the population of which he for many years ministered the everlasting gospel.

Will not every congregation in the Old North State send something to this Fund this year? R. M.

Baltimore, June 26th.

P. S.—Perhaps while I am writing I ought to tell you of a very pathetic case of an aged and much esteemed minister who sometime since was stricken down and incapacitated for preaching; who was reluctant to ask aid from the Fund, and who undertook in much poverty and feebleness to provide a precarious support for his family by teaching, but who by another visitation was rendered unfit for this service, and who is now compelled to look to Christ's Church for help. I cannot be more specific than this for obvious reasons, and this is only one case out of many that might be stated. Let your readers be assured that the wants of those who draw from this Fund are urgent, and that what they give will be well bestowed in relieving the suffering and promoting the comfort of those who legitimately turn to them for sympathy and assistance.

A DAY WITH THE LUTHERANS UNDER THE TREES IN LINCOLN COUNTY.

Bethpage is the name of a Lutheran church, about six miles west of Lincolnton on the old Rutherford road. It was organized about twenty-five years ago and has a membership of more than a hundred. The people of this region are of German origin and are all engaged in farming. They had never had a jubilee festival at their church until last Friday. Having announced their purpose to observe one, and having invited their friends to meet with them, a vast assembly gathered there on the 25th of June and enjoyed their hospitality and united in their ceremonies.

The 25th of June has long been an honored day with our Lutheran brethren, being centennial and semi-centennial in their history.

On this occasion, a stand was provided in the grove under shady oaks, and as we approached and mingled in the great congratulation, deep feelings were stirred as we read the beautiful records on the white canvass stretched about the stand in the forest trees.

On one side we read

"Augsburg Confession,
June 25, 1530."

On the other side we read

"Book of Concord,
June 25, 1580."

And over the speaker's head was written the following:

"Jubilee,
June 25, 1880."

The programme for the day was as follows:

1st. The causes that led to the Augsburg Confession—Rev. J. R. Peterson.

2d. The Lutheran Church, past, present, future—Rev. Mr. Smith.

Recess:

3d. The Augsburg Confession—Rev. Wm. Little, Pastor Loci.

4th. Book of Concord—Rev. P. C. Henkel.

The ceremonies were closed with the reading of a portion of the 68th Psalm: "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered.... O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people....the earth shook....thou God did send a plentiful rain, &c.," when the long looked for showers began to fall upon the crowd, cooling and refreshing the thirsty fields.

The 137th Psalm was sung:

"I love thy kingdom Lord,
The house of thine abode," and the Lord's prayer was repeated by the standing crowd.

The memories of that grand old Confession which has salted the generations for 350 years, stirred deep emotions that day under the trees. They help to tone us up in these days of busy strife. The world does move, and God takes care of His church, built on the rock. But we felt like this occasion called for a little more time in the addresses we heard. June 25, 1880, in America means much that was not dreamed of June 25, 1530 in Germany. There is no land like our own—no people, no opportunities, no dangers, like our own.

We dare not close our eyes and rest on the past. The influx of French, Irish, German and Chinese and other immigrants, color our times; the pride of free citizenship and personal ambition, the impatience of favoritism, and the power of patronage, all push and scramble upward, and create uneasy and unsafe conditions among us. Does this noble old Confession now sweep over all these conditions? That is the question; and these festal days help us to study and find hopeful answers to it.

When our Scriptural creeds reform our habits and control our lives, we shall be wiser and better men than the honored and beloved Reformers, who compiled and defended them and bequeathed them to us. When the next semi-centennial jubilee, June 25, 1930, shall come may our children find it easier to be good and great than we do to-day, and may the newspapers then be able to register something like this: The Attorney for the District finds no indictment for the grand jury to report to the judge, the sheriff reports no poor, miserable prisoner in the jail, and the poor house keeper has no suffering poor to be supported on the taxes of the people.

Lippincott's Magazine for July contains two illustrated articles of a light and entertaining character—The Palace of the Leatherstonepanghs, which is a humorous sketch of artist life in Rome, and Paradise Plantation, which is a description in a similar vein of amateur farming in Florida. Dr. S. Weir Mitchell concludes the interesting account of his tour Through the Yellowstone Park, and some peculiar phases of Western life are described by Louise Coffin Jones in a paper entitled On the Skunk River. A Forgotten American Worthy, by Charles Burr Todd, recounts the remarkable career of Joel Barlow, whose name is known to most readers as that of the author of epic poems long since buried in oblivion, but whose philanthropic character and patriotic services entitle him to a higher place in the recollection of his countrymen. On Spelling Reform presents some strong arguments against the proposed changes in English orthography. An Open Look at the Political Situation criticises the course of the Independents, and discusses the chances of Civil Service Reform. Pipistrello, by Onida, is a picturesque and powerfully written story of Italian life. Adam and Eve and Studies in the Slums are continued. The poetry is by Emma Lazarus, J. B. Tabb, and H. L. Leonard, and the Monthly Gossip and Literature of the Day are as good and varied as usual. This number begins the twenty-sixth volume. J. B. Lippincott & Co, Philadelphia, Pa.

ECLECTICISMS.

FACTS NEVERTHELESS.

United Presbyterian:

Some of the facts of our religion do not suit natural wishes. It is the same with physical facts. A man passing under a falling tree or toppling wall might wish there was no law of gravitation, or that it would cease to operate for the time. But it does exist and does operate all the same, and inexorably. This is a great fact, whether men will adjust themselves to it or not. So in religion there are great and terrible facts that must exist and rule destinies, no matter how men may question them. Safety is in having the life adjusted to them.

THE MOST PROFITABLE.

S. S. Times:

Moving easily in this world generally means going down hill. Getting upward always calls for hard work. That life which is pleasantest to us is not likely to be the most profitable life. And those friends who have helped us most are perhaps the ones who have cost us most. That which brings thought and doubt and tears, and which necessitates study and effort and self-abnegation, is often more of a gain than that which gives unalloyed pleasure. No friend is worth much to us who does not keep before us a high ideal, and striving to attain to any ideal involves both struggle and sacrifice.

CAN HE TALK?

Interior:

There is a demand sharpening in the Church that students for the ministry shall be more severely examined. And one of the most needed directions is this: "Can he talk?" He may write like Goldsmith, but if he talks like Goldsmith too, he is a poor preacher. Preaching is not intellectualizing in a study. It is moving an audience, and the voice is one of the instruments through which the moving is effected.

COMING.

Central Christian Advocate:

Prohibition, with its blessed train of peace, industry, prosperity and security, must in the end become the normal condition of our country, for the people have their eyes open to one stern fact: Either they must control or destroy the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drink, or it will destroy them. There is no compromise about it. It is not in the nature of things to tamely submit to an evil that threatens destruction to life and its best interests. The majority of our people know this, and have only to act steadily and earnestly in unison with their knowledge and heart convictions to gain complete victory over intemperance. The prophecy tends rapidly to its fulfillment; we stand on the border land of a posession fairer than any which men have yet won. Having won it, a kingdom of righteousness is no longer a dream.

A JUST REBUKE.

Congregationalist:

To hear Colonel Ingersoll blaspheme his Maker through two hours and a quarter, in a New York theatre the other evening, two dollars apiece were given by crowds of men. They would have railed themselves hoarse over the exorbitance of a church that should charge that sum per month for rent of a pew in God's house, for themselves and their families; and over the minister who should presume to preach over thirty minutes. And with what refreshing innocence does this apostle of atheism unroll the wealth of the Unabridged in vituperation of the "priestcraft that robs the poor"—for the support of pastors toiling through a year to help men upward, on less money than he absorbs in a single evening by dragging men downward.

HOW CONDESCENDING.

Methodist Advance:

Dr. Muhlenberg says of people who say they have "respect for religion:" "How vastly condescending! How deeply humble! The creature has a respect for the service of the Creator! A grasshopper deigns to acknowledge that it has a respect for the King of kings and Lord of lords. Verily, a subject of congratulation for the universe! A worm crawling in the dust confesses to its fellow-worm that it has some respect for the government of the "high and mighty One that inhabiteth eternity."

NOT TO BE DRAGGED ALONG.

Christian Intelligencer:

All church members ought to be active in keeping things up. One of the great faults in our churches is that so much is left to church officers and other officials of societies. Whereas, each member ought to be personally active in that in which he is interested; and he ought to be interested in every good work. The way to make healthy and useful church officers is to back them. Do not make it necessary that officers in the church and societies should drag you along. You were not designed to be dragged but to walk and to run, with a voluntary, glad step.

CAN IT BE?

Baltimore Presbyterian:

"Starve him out!" That's it. Refuse to pay your honest obligations, because your pastor happens to have an independent spirit implanted within, and does not think exactly as you do, and is not afraid to say so. In every church there are some of this class—men who are of high social standing, as well as those of an humbler degree. There is little Christianity in such acts. Ministers are mortal, but because a member does not agree with him is no reason that said member should treat him in a dishonorable manner.

AN EDITOR AT REST.

Christian Observer:

An editor sometimes needs rest. His labors are arduous. It is no easy task to conduct a paper in accordance with the divergent views of all those who think they know just how it should be conducted, and yet never publish anything to which any of them will take exception. It is a difficult problem how to print the articles of those who think they have a right to be heard through its columns, and yet not have it contain articles that are prolix, or dull, or heavy, or trivial. His work contains as large a proportion of drudgery as any other pursuit. It knows no rest. Every day brings the duties of the day, and sick or well he must respond to the calls for "copy," and read and re-read the proof-sheets, and attend to business details, and execute a hundred commissions for people at a distance, from finding a teacher or a situation, to buying a woollen mill; and answer a thousand questions, some of them very trivial. And the tread-mill work continues, year in and year out, without intermission; but the editor is never expected to become dull under it. He must always make a lively, wide-awake newspaper.

CHARACTER.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler:

"There was never a time when character went for more or was in greater demand than now. The question, 'Is he smart?' is beginning to give place to the more pertinent question, 'Is he honest?' Even the ministry do not escape this crucible; for it is felt to be of increasing moment that the man who presents Christ on the Sabbath should also represent Christ during the week by a pure walk and godly conversation. There was a great deal of pith in the young lady's remark about the newly-elected pastor. 'I don't care whether he is eloquent or not—is he pious?' The crying need of the hour is not more brains, but more conscience; the richest revival would be that which should give society more genuinely good men and women."

THE POWER OF A HOLY LIFE

It is the power of a consistent Christian example—the power of a holy life. As good old Matthew Henry says, "thanksliving is better than thanksgiving," so we may say that pious living is better than pious talking, and a holy example than the best of verbal appeals; for the former may, possibly, come from the lips, while the latter is from the heart, and even where the former is from the heart it is virtually included in the latter.

"Under whose preaching were you converted?"

"Under nobody's preaching," was the pleasant, smiling reply; it was under Aunt Mary's practising." The life that her aunt led before her was the means of leading her to the Saviour. It was not what her aunt might have said, but it was what she did—her consistent example—which was the means of her niece's conversion.

And so a young man, who gave clear evidence of conversion, on being asked what had led to the great change in himself when he had before been so wild and thoughtless; whether it was through any sermon or book that he had been improved, replied, "No; neither the one nor the other." "What, then, was it? Did some one speak to you particularly on the subject?" And he still said, "No." "What was it, then, that first led you to think seriously on the subject?" "It was my living in the same boarding house and eating at the same table with J. Y." "Well, did he ever talk to you on the subject of religion?" "No, never, until I sought an interview with him. But there was such a manifest principle, such a sweetness of disposition, such a heavenly-mindedness, in his whole life and demeanor as made me feel that he had a source of peace and happiness to which I was a stranger. The daily excellence and beauty of his life made me feel the defects of my own. I became more and more dissatisfied with myself every time I saw him. And though, as I said, he never spoke to me on the subject of religion until I sought an interview and spoke to him, yet his whole life was a constant sermon to me, and gave me no rest until I became a Christian!"—Baptist Weekly.

SCOTCH UNIVERSITY EDUCATION.

The Scotch have an enthusiasm for learning which is almost unknown to the English. If a Scotch lad can obtain a few pounds, the chances are that he will use them in spending at least one session at the University. If an English youth in the same position should suddenly find himself in possession of the same amount of money, in too many cases it would happen that a considerable portion of it would be spent in the public house, or, what is perhaps worse still, would swell the unholy gains of the betting man. It is too long a subject to explain how this difference between the two nations has arisen; not a little of it is due to one of the greatest men that ever lived. The genius of John Knox was so remarkable that he did much permanently to mould the character of a whole people; to him, to a great extent, are due the parish schools of Scotland, and he made zeal for education one of the most important of religious duties. A great number of agencies must be brought into operation to make the English care as much for education as do the Scotch.—Professor Fawcett, M. P.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

On the 12th and 13th insts., Rev. Wm. T. Price, pastor, assisted by Rev. R. C. Fleming, of Woodstock held communion services at Cook's Creek church in Lexington Presbytery. Two persons were received on profession and one from the Mennonite Church.

The Charleston News and Courier says:

At a meeting of the congregation of the First Presbyterian church, Charleston, S. C., on the 20th June, it was decided to extend a call to the Rev. W. T. Thompson, of Shelbyville, Tennessee. The pulpit of the church has been vacant since the death of the Rev. John Forrest, D. D., over a year ago.

A new lecture room of the First Presbyterian church of Louisville, Ky., and which is capable of seating about three hundred and fifty persons is completed. It cost $2,500 to $3,000. It contains a ladies' parlor cut off by sliding doors.

The Presbytery of Arkansas, 11 inst., licensed Mr. J. L. D. Houston, a recent graduate of Columbia Seminary.

Nashville was to hold—we suppose did hold—a pro-re-nata meeting on 22d inst., to dismiss licentiate J. Thompson Plunkett to Mecklenburg Presbytery with a view to his taking pastoral charge of Steele Creek church; also to ordain licentiate DeLacy Wardlaw, who is to go out as missionary to Brazil.

A meeting of Ebenezer Presbytery was called to meet on 25th inst., for the purpose of considering the dissolution of the pastoral relation between Rev. George Summey and Ninth street church, Covington, Ky.

The post office address of Rev. J. R. Bridges is Eminence, Ky.

Rev. A. McDonald, of Elizabethtown, Ky., is reported as doing a good work in Nelson county, Kentucky, as a mission field.

Montgomery Presbytery at a recent adjourned meeting dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. J. M. Rice and Covington church. Covington church through the Presbytery placed a call in the hands of licentiate A. R. Cocke. Mr. Coke declined the call.

Rev. W. E. Caldwell has resigned his pastoral charge in Goliad and Refugee counties, Texas. He requests correspondents to address him at Borjas, Duval county, Texas.

Several additions to the church at Appomatox, C. H., Va., are reported as the result of a protracted meeting in which the pastor, Rev. M. Wilson, was assisted by the Rev. H. H. Hawes.

The post office address of Rev. B. W. Moseley is changed to Bedford Springs, Campbell county, Va., and Rev. A. R. Cocke's to Bufordsville, Bedford county, Va.

Fourteen months since, Walterboro, S. C., was destroyed by a tornado. A new church has been built and was dedicated on 13th inst. The church cost $1,500. Rev. Dr. J. L. Girardeau preached the dedicatory sermon.

Rev. Edwin Cater has been compelled by ill health to retire for a time from his labors as pastor of the church at Yazoo City, Miss.

Rev. B. M. Hobson has removed from Odessa, La Fayette county, Mo., to Belton, Cass county, Mo. Correspondents will please make a note of this.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Camp meetings are popular among the Presbyterians in Texas. Rev. R. S. Burwell writes to the Texas Presbyterian, from Denton, June 16th: Please announce that a "Camp Meeting" will be held at West Fork Church, in Tarrant county. I have secured the services of Rev. J. S. Moore, D. D., and Rev. L. B. Chaney. The meeting will be conducted on the "self-sustaining plan," i. e., bring your basket, not empty, but full of provision. The location is good, plenty of water, grass, good shade and breeze. It is in the northwest corner of Tarrant county, four miles west of Dido, in the timber. The meeting will begin Thursday night before the 3d Sunday in July, and continue perhaps a week. We cordially invite all who feel so inclined, to come.

NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN.

Last Sabbath morning Rev. Dr. Backus occupied the pulpit of the Second church, and when partly through his sermon was taken suddenly ill and was sent to his home. Soon after his return home he felt better, but remained on the lounge. In the afternoon, during the rain storm which passed over our city, the doctor rose to shut the window in his room, and in some way his foot slipped and he fell to the floor. It was sometime before he could make himself heard, and when assistance came he was found stretched on the floor unable to move and in great pain. A physician was sent for, who, after a careful examination, found that the hip joint had been fractured; and said it would be sometime before the doctor would be able to be about again. This will be sad news to his many friends in and out of Baltimore.—Baltimore Presbyterian.

The Presbytery of Allegheny has found Rev. John Brown guilty of unchristian and unministerial conduct and suspended him from the ministry.

The Presbytery of Albany lately received Rev. J. H. Crum form the Congregational Church; from the same Church they received Licentiate Isaac R. Rankin.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

Among the colored people of the South the Reformed Episcopal Church has seventeen congregations and six missionaries laboring with success.

FRIENDS.

The regular Annual Meeting of Friends closed on the 15th inst., at Newport, R. I. The attendance was good, and the speakers generally were earnest in their recommendation of a deeper spirituality and more practical home works. The body does not grow numerically, but, on the contrary seems to be steadily declining. No accurate return of their number can be had, because they have never taken any pains to ascertain it. Unlike other sects, they have shown no dispostion towards proselyting; in fact, they have opposed it, leaving its growth, as they put it, to the direction of the Lord. There are, it is thought, now in the United States, about 100,000 Quakers, distributed as follows: Pennsylvania, 23,000; Indiana, 20,000; Ohio, 14,000; New York, 10,000; Rhode Island, 4,000; Maryland, 8,000; Virginia, 6,000; and North Carolina, 3,000.—Christian Union.

BAPTIST.

The Baptists in Richmond, Va., have increased from one church of fourteen members, in 1870, to 21 churches (including two in Manchester) and 16,847 members in 1880.

James B. Colgate, of New York city, has given $25,000 to the Madison University and the same amount to the Colgate Academy, at Hamilton, N. Y. In all he has given the University $200,000.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Congregational Church at Montclair, N. J., during the past ten years has raised $170,000—$40,500 of this amount was for benevolent purposes. The Sabbath School Missionary collections have been $4,000.

BETTER TIMES.

The "Democrat," New Orleans, La., says: "Suffering among such as have been troubled with diseases of kidneys and liver, has been perceptibly better since the introduction among us of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

SCRIPTURE CONFIRMATION.

The Biblical Archæological Society of England has recently brought to light another confirmation of the accuracy of the Book of Daniel which it may be well to notice as a satisfactory reply to those infidels who foolishly assert that it was written by some one who lived not long before the Christian era; as if it were possible for a Jew of that age to relate history involving Babylonian customs of the time of Nebuchadnezzar or Darius, without being liable to fall into grevious errors:

The Book of Daniel records the punishments common at Babylon, of such extreme cruelty, such as Shadrach, Mesheck, and Abednego being cast into a burning fiery furnace, and Daniel and his enemies into a den of lions, that some have been ready to deny the authenticity of Daniel on this ground alone, forgetful or ignorant of the well-known fact that Rome, whether Pagan or Papal, has been guilty of the very same crimes towards faithful Christains who "loved not their lives unto the death," and for which she will one day be deservedly and finally punished. In the day of Assurbanipal, son of Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, we have the contemporary evidence that both these punishments were in use at Babylon a few years before the reign of Nebuchadnezzar. Saulmugina, brother of Assurbanipal, king of Assyria, was made by his relative king of Babylon, where he reigned prosperously for several years. Afterwards, for some unknown reason, he ungratefully rebelled against his elder brother, but after a severe contest was defeated and taken prisoner.

The Assyrian monarchs appear to have been always animated with an implacable spirit of revenge. Hence we are not surprised at finding among the inscriptions containing the annals of Assurbanipal one of this ominous nature, which reminds us of a somewhat similar event in British history in the closing scenes of the great Plantaganet dynasty: "I orderod Saulmugina, my rebellious brother, who made war with me, to be cast into a fiery burning furnace." Of Saulmugina's followers it is related that many perished with him in the flames, and those who escaped, but were subsequently caught, it is said of them: "The rest of the people I threw alive among the bulls and lions, as Sennacherib, my grandfather, used to throw men among them."—London Record.

"IF THY RIGHT HAND OFFEND THEE."

Cut it off. Why? It is a good hand. It might even prove to be a useful hand. Why not keep it, restrain it, regulate it, use it—in "moderation?"

Because "it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire."

That is Christ's doctrine about any thing that tempts to sin. It may be as harmless as a hand, as useful as a hand; cut it off if it is a perpetual temptation. It may be as harmless as an eye, as useful as an eye; pluck it out rather than let it lure you to hell.

This glass of wine—what harm in it? Is it not one of God's good gifts? Is it not a "fruit of the vine?" Is it not that which "cheereth God and man?" Shall I cut it off? Aye! cut it off, though it were as bright as the hand, if it tempts thee to evil.

But it does not tempt me; I am strong. The withes that bind other men have no power over me. I can sleep in Delilah's lap and wake and laugh defiance at the Philistines. It only tempts my brother, my child, my friend, or the poor, weak-willed creature that cites my moderation as an excuse for his self-indulgence.

"It were better for one that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones."

Till the wine cup neither tempts you nor your weaker brother to sin, it is surely Christian to cut it off. Is it not?—Christian Weekly.

Messrs. DeRosset & Co., are agents at Wilmington for the Taylor cotton gin, advertised in our columns. They will be glad to answer any inquiries, and in view of their established reputation it is not necessary for us to say that they are entitled to implicit confidence.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

The Monroe Enquirer has entered upon its eighth volume. Brother Wolfe has bought a new cylinder press and very materially enlarged his paper. Moreover he has made other additions to his stock and material, and is, to use a common phrase, well set-up. The Enquirer has always been an attractive paper, and is now greatly improved. We are pleased to herald the deserved success.

The French army has abolished the use of the drum, as it cannot be heard in battle or on the march by the rear ranks, is useless in rain, and is an incumbrance in the field.

Rome spent $200,000 on its public schools, of which ten years ago it had none at all. The Romans now evince great alacrity in attending the schools, and the latter are entirely inadequate to the demand of the population.

Old Fulton Market, New York city, will soon be a thing of the past. The Board of Survey has reported that the columns supporting its roof are out of line, and that the structure is rotten. It is ordered to be taken down immediately.

No less than thirty pearl divers in the Persian Gulf fell victims to the sharks during the last year. The fact that £800,000 worth of pearls were found in 1879 explains how it is that men can be found to engage in this perilous occupation.

Two bull dogs wandered, two years ago, from the ranch of Bratt & Co., Nebraska, and joined a pack of roving wolves. They never returned, and now a species of dog-wolf, infesting that section, is more dreaded than the common prairie wolf, being more bold and savage.

The Czar is the only crowned widower and Victoria the only crowned widow among the European potentates. Alfonso and Christine of Spain are the youngest wedded couple, William and Augusta of Germany the eldest.

A find of Roman coins has just been made by some boys at Tilton, near Bristol, England. While pulling up a primrose root they uncovered a large urn which was found to contain thousands of coins of the time of Domitian and Constantine, many in excellent preservation.

Jefferson Davis' plantation at Hurricane, Miss., is leased by Montgomery & Sons. This firm is composed of four negroes, who were formerly owned by a brother of the ex-President of the Confederacy. They own plantations worth $75,000, hire several more, and do a large mercantile business at Vicksburg.

Colorado spiders are not to be laughed at. In a cave near Buena Vista they are the size of small birds, and they make a strange sound while weaving their web. While looking at the cave a miner examined the webs. Their strands were about the size of a No. 12 thread, and he thought that they could be used for thread. Having a needle, he broke off one of the strands and found that it would just fit. Sewing on a loose button he found it as strong as silk.

Lord Radstock, a pious Irish peer, has been preaching evangelical doctrines for a long time with singular success to the aristocracy of St. Petersburg. Among the converts is General Paskoff, who, in his turn, is now creating a sensation on the banks of the Neva by his sermons. The General is one of the wealthiest land owners in Russia.

Senator Morgan of Alabama made the agreeable announcement that the cotton crop of the present year will be the largest ever known—fully 5,600,000 bales, worth $300,000,000. He also said that much of the increase was due to the operations of the entomological experts employed by the government in discovering means for the checking of the ravages of the cotton worm.

As in France, so in Russia, the women furnish a frightful share of the revolutionists. Two Jewesses led the Kasan Cathedral riot; General Trephof fell by a woman's hand; the informer Rosenzweig was shot by a girl of nineteen; another girl led the Kief rebels, and within ten years many hundreds of women have been sent to Siberia for belonging to secret political societies.

It cannot be afforded, it would not pay after so much labor and capital has been expended to build up this medicine to allow it to depreciate. You can take Simmons Liver Regulator with perfect faith as it is made by no adventurers who pick up the business by concocting medicines, but by educated, practical druggists, who have made the study of medicine and its compounds a labor of a lifetime. The care, precision, neatness and perfection exhibited by the very appearance of Simmons Liver Regulator proves that it is the best prepared medicine in the market, and J. H. Zeilin & Co fully carry out their motto: Purissima et Optima (purest and best)

It is saddening to see our hair blossoming for the grave too early. More especially women feel this affliction, and it is even a greater deformity to them than to men Ayer's Hair Vigor averts it and restores the hair sometimes, and its original color always.

YELLOW FEVER

That this terrible disease has for years held a despotic sway, at certain seasons of the year, in portions of our own fair land, and in other countries, is known by each and every one. As well known is it, that a cure, or even a preventive, has not been, heretofore discovered.

It is known to every intelligent man and woman, that the reason for this fearful scourge is neither more nor less than the malarial poison that emanates from low marshy lands—whether adjacent to salt or fresh water—especially in certain stages of the drying process, under a hot sun; as well are these familiar with the fact, that uncleaned cess-pools, insufficient drainage, unremoved filth of any kind or character, are generators of this same death-dealing miasma. Observations of centuries has made every person, blessed with the least faculty of discernment, acquainted with the effect of this subtle malarial poison. Each and all know that Typhus and Intermittent Fevers are the lesser natural consequences of an inhalation of this poisonous exhalative, and that Yellow Fever is the greater.

After a careful reading of the late report of the National Board of Health, no other conclusion can be drawn, than that if the blood is kept in a healthy condition the birth, growth and spread of yellow fever is materially lessened, if not actually prevented. It is a matter understood by all and every one, that if the kidney and liver—the organs that filter and cleanse the blood—are kept in a wholesome and sound condition, this same vital fluid will ever be clear from impurities. That these organs, the kidney and liver, can be kept free from disease, and at all times in a condition to well and faithfully perform their duties, is a matter beyond dispute, cavil or argument, and equally it is true, that a free use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills, will actually compel these same organs to perform their allotted functions.

Testimonials by the thousands are in the hands of the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure vouching for its curative qualities in all diseases of kidney and liver, and hence as a cleanser of the blood, and as well a preventive to yellow fever, we have no hesitation in offering it to the public.

WARNER'S

Kidney and Liver Cure.

The Stubborn Convinced.

In writing of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Bitters, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, the Sentinel, Weedsport, N. Y., has following: "That these possess all the remedial qualities claimed for them is a matter beyond dispute; bona fide testimonials by the thousand from well known citizens in public and private life are evidences strong enough to convince the most stubborn doubter, that they are the best medicines for the diseases for which recommended, ever yet known to the public or the physicians.

Game Played For.

The Republican, Omaha, Nebraska, says: "In the game of life the 'stake' played for is health, wealth and happiness. Each of these can be obtained by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetis Cure, Warner's Safe Pills, Bitters, Nervine and Tonic."

Gratitude Lavished.

Is clipped from the coumns of the Journal-Courier, New Haven, Conn., the following endorsemen: "Gratitude of character strong, earnest and impetuous, is daily, in person and by letter, being lavished upon H. H. Warner & Co. for the introduction of, and the making so extensively known, their wonderful cure, named as Warner's Kidney and Liver Cure."

Mental Strain Relieved.

The Washington, D. C., Critic says: "It is intimated to us that numbers of the Senate and House are freely using Warner's Safe Nervine and relief of nervous prostration incident upon the severe strain upon their mental powers."

Not Open to Argument.

The testimony of the Sunday Herald, Rochester, N. Y., is taken from their columns and is to the effect "that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is a positive cure for disabilities for which it is a specific, there is no disputing; neither is there the 'ghost' of a chance to call into being a negative to so positive an opinion."

Honorable Men.

The Sunday Tribune, Rochester, N. Y., in one of issues prints the following: "The proprietors (of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies), each and all, are men born here, and here have lived the whole period of their stay on earth, and are men who have the unbounded confidence of all who know them."

Speedy and Sure.

The Journal of Commerce, Boston, says: "As a speedy and sure cure this (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure) remedy is 'Safe,' and the cases wherein it misses are those beyond the reach of human relief."

Faith and Confidence.

The following is clipped from the News, Marysville, Kansas: "In calling the attention of our readers to 'Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and other Safe Remedies,' we do so with a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good and said of them."

Good Advice.

The Daily Advertiser, St. Albans, Vt., has the following: "We feel sure that if such of our friends as are sufferers from diseases of Kidneys and Liver would but use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, they would be benefitted."

Quality Maintained.

The Rochester, N. Y., Express says: "So far as the standard of quality is concerned, parties can rest assured the same will be maintained up to the present high character. As a remedy for the speedy cure of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and all complaints of the Kidneys and Liver, no article of any kind or character can equal it (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure).

Wonderful to Contemplate.

From the columns of the Republican, Springfield Mass., is taken the following: "It is a settled fact that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are all they are represented to be by the proprietors, H. H. Warner & Co. The way they go into the habitations of those afflicted with disease for which recommended is truly wonderful to contemplate."

"Bona Fide."

The following is taken from the columns of the York Daily, York, Pa: "The testimonials in possession of H. H. Warner & Co, proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, are not manufactured to order, are bona fide, and have attached date, time, place and signiture of the writers thereof."

Dividend-Paying.

The following is found in the columns of the Standard, New Bedford, Mass.: "Parties, after using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, pronounce it the best dividend-paying (in health and happiness) property they ever handled.

Evidence Corroborated.

The Sun, Indianapolis, Ind., has the following: "Testimonials, not numbered by hundreds, but by thousands, are in hands of H. H. Warner & Co., all furnishing ample corroborative evidence that as curative, for specific diseases for which recommended, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies are unqualified and pronounced success."

Unbounded Confidence.

Peck's Sun, Milwaukee, Wis., in referring to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, has the following: "H. H. Warner & Co, Rochester, N. Y., are the sole proprietors, we have a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good, and said of them."

Surest and Best.

The Journal, Battle Creek, Mich, thus puts it: "The surest safest, best blood purifying medicine known is Warner's Safe Bitters, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills. Regular practitioners prescribe them as a remedy for impure poisoned blood."

Confident, Reliable.

"In writing of the Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, of which H. H. Warner & Co., are proprietors, the Evening Dispatch, York, Pa, says: "We say all this that is good of them as we have a perfect faith in the efficiency, the preparation, and unbounded faith in the truth of all that is said good of it."

Deserve a Monument.

The Standard, Syracuse, N. Y., is the journal from which the following extract is cut: "That the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are entitled to a monument is unmistakably true. It is an indisputable fact that these parties be and are looked upon as Good Samaritans."

WHAT THE

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Did For a Kansas Woman.

Its Great Controlling Power over the Nervous System, the Digestive Organs and Uterine Affections.

Case of Mrs. B——, stated by Dr. L. M. Wood, Wyandotte county, Kansas.

Extract from a letter dated White Church, Wyandotte county, Kansas, February 1st, 1880:

"I first saw Mrs. B—— laboring under Hysterical Coma, from which she had not been sufficiently aroused to take nourishment for four days. She was of large frame, but in a condition of extreme emaciation. From her husband I obtained the following statement: She was thirty-six years of age, and when in health unusually robust, her average weight being one hundred and fifty pounds. She was accustomed to do all of her house work and to perform other labor when necessary. Several years before she had undergone an operation for a Tumor formed in the region of the right Acetabulum. Her general health remained good for some time. Afterwards, however, she became a great sufferer from a distressing form of Dyspepsia, there being at times almost total Atony of the digestive organs There was also serious derangement of the Monthly Functions, with general prostration of the Nervous System resulting in attacks similar to that described, and she had been under the care, at different times, of several distinguished medical men without benefit. Under appropriate treatment she was aroused to a state of consciousness, took nourishment such as her stomach would retain, and her general condition improved to some extent. There was, however, a frequent recurrence of these attacks, and I saw but little if any hope of permanent benefit. Recollecting that I had seen the Buffalo Lithia Waters endorsed by men eminent in the profession, as a "Powerful Nerve Tonic," I determined as a last resort to make a trial of it in her case, and ordering it directly from the Springs, put her upon it. In a few weeks the beneficial result was unmistakable, in the increase of appetite—the invigoration of the organs of digestion, and most especially in the gradual restoration to a healthy condition of the exhausted Nervous System and a diminution both of the frequency and severity of the attacks referred to She used the water for several months with continued and decided benefit. The Monthly Functions have been restored to a normal condition, and there has been a total cessation of the attacks of Hysterical Coma, and she has gained rapidly in flesh and strength, until she is now in robust, vigorous health, eating as much "Hog and Hominy," and doing as much hard work as any woman in this Western country, the credit for all of which, I give where it is certainly due, to these remarkable waters."

These Springs are opened for Visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE. The Waters in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, Five Dollars per case, at the Springs.

They are prescribed by Dr. J. Marion Sims, Dr. William A. Hammond and Dr. John T. Metcalf, of New York, as well as by a large number of leading medical men in all sections of the country. Spring pamphlet sent to any address.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Daisy's Reason.

Our Daisy lay down
In her little nightgown,
And kissed me again and again,
On forehead and cheek,
On lips that would speak,
But found themselves shut, to their gain.

Then foolish, absurd
To utter a word,
I asked her the question so old,
That wife and that lover
Ask over and over,
As if they were surer when told.

There close at her side,
"Do you love me?" I cried;
She lift d her golden-crowned head.
A puzzled surprise
Shone in her gray eyes—
"Why, that's why I kiss you," she said.

A Nest Under a Brake.

She was a little busy-body, this little brown wren, but then she was so good-tempered, so kind-hearted and altogether so lovable that her neighbors forgave her inquisitiveness. Now that is a big word, that some of you little ones may not understand, so when papa comes home, and you are out of breath asking all the questions saved up through the day. ask him its meaning.

Well, as I was saying, she was a busy-body; so, she went chirping and scratching along the brookside that April day, and uncovered a queer-looking ball in the ground; she perched her head on one side and fell to wondering what it could be, not daring to peck its brown velvet skin to find out.

"Well, well, well!" she chirped, "you look very like a caterpillar rolled up like that, but one end of you seems stuck fast in the ground. Why don't you speak? What are you?" but the greenish-brown ball made no reply.

Miss Wren hopped all around it, bent her head down first one way and then another, but still she could get no answer; till suddenly she thought of the half-finished nest in the apple tree, when with a "Bless me, this won't do, I'll come back to-morrow!" she flew off after old Dobbin the horse and Molly the cow, to pick up a stray hair here and there to line her house with.

Next day, she came back and found the queer "caterpillar" grown a little taller, a little fatter and a little greener, but still his tail stuck fast in the ground. Then there was a great chatter and noise, as she wondered and asked questions, and scolded because she could get no answer to satisfy her curiosity.

"If you can grow, you can talk so I could understand; and if you don't speak now and tell me who you are, you are a cross fellow, and I'll fly away and never come near you again! You are not pretty, like me, you know, so you need not be proud!"

And she went on saying a good many naughty words, getting herself into a great passion, till she finally flounced off to her nest-building.

Now, when she was cross and not thinking of her words, like all angry people, she said more than she meant. So in three days her anger cooled off, and then she forgot she meant never to go back to see what became of the bug or worm, or whatever it was.

One morning there was a flutter and a whirr, and down flew Mrs. Wren by the brook-side all good-tempered again and ready to make friends.

"Good morning, Mr. Caterpillar! I hope you don't remember how cross I was, and that if you do, you will kindly forgive it, and—and"—but the queer brown thing was nowhere to be seen.

In its place stood a tall, slender branch of pale green, busy shaking out its leaves—or rather the pretty things that looked like leaves —and if it didn't make answer just as if it were the queer brown thing!

"O, it doesn't matter at all Mrs. Wren. You see I have so little time. When I start in the spring I have to hurry so, I don't dare stop to speak a word, and when you got so vexed with me the other day, you flew away just as I was getting ready to tell you all about it. I'm a fern. When I have shaken myself all out, I shall be the kind called a 'brake,' and I mean to grow, oh, so tall! Think what the brook would be if we did not lean over her and keep the thirsty sun from drinking her up in the long hot summer days!"

The poor little wren was very much ashamed, and she hung her head as the fern went on, while he spread out broad and green, and stretched himself like a cat just awake from a curled-up nap.

"Now you see if we didn't work hard to grow strong and thick before July, the brook would dry up, and then Dobbin and Molly would have no place to wade in and drink. Of course I couldn't do it all alone, but if each of us does his best, all standing close together, we can stretch our arms over the water and do the work together."

Just then there came a little breeze and swung the pretty fern out over the brook, and the wren flew away with a plan in her head, and a resolve to be more patient and do her duty like the good brake.

The plan was about her house-keeping, and the result of it all was that one day in the summer time a little girl, pushing aside the thick leaves by the brookside, spied a pretty little nest with four tiny baby wrens in it.

"Oh," she cried, "you little darling! I wonder how your mamma ever came to find such a lovely place for her house under this great brake! It is like a green silk umbrella. How did she ever think of it?"

But we know why she loved the good fern, don't we? and why she "thought of it."—Christian Intelligencer.

A Drover's Story.

My name is Anthony Hunt. I am a drover, and live miles and miles away, upon the Western prairie. There was not a house within sight when we moved there, my wife and I; and now we have not many neighbors, but those we have are good ones.

One day, about ten years ago, I went away from home to sell some fifty head of cattle, fine creatures as ever I saw. I was to buy some groceries and dry goods before I came back, and above all, a doll for our youngest, Dolly; she never had a shop doll of her own, only the rag babies her mother had made her. Dolly could talk of nothing else, and went down to the very gate to tell me to "buy a big one." Nobody but a parent can understand how my mind was centered on that toy, and how, when the cattle were sold, the first thing I hurried off to buy was Dolly's doll. I found a large one with eyes that would open and shut when you pulled a wire, and had it wrapped up in a paper and tucked under my arm, while I had parcels of calico and delaine and tea and sugar put up. It might have been more prudent to stay until morning, but I felt anxious to get back, and eager to hear Dolly's prattle about the doll she was so anxiously expecting.

I was mounted on a steady-going old horse of mine, and pretty well loaded. Night set in before I was a mile from town, and settled down as dark as pitch while I was in the middle of the wildest bit of road I knew of. I could have felt my way through, I remembered it so well, and it was almost that when the storm that had been brewing broke, and pelted the rain in torrents, five miles, or may be six, from home, too. I rode on as fast as I could, but suddenly I heard a little cry, like a child's voice. I stopped short and listened; I heard it again. I called and it answered me. I could not see anything. All was dark as pitch. I got down and felt about in the grass; called again, and again I was answered. Then I began to wonder; I am not timid; but I was known to be a drover, and to have money about me. I thought it might be a trap to catch me, and then rob and murder me.

I am not superstitious—not very—but how could a real child be out on the prairie in such a night, at such an hour? It might be more than human. The bit of a coward that hides itself in most men showed itself in me then, and I was half inclined to run away, but once more I heard that piteous cry, and said, "If any man's child is hereabouts, Anthony Hunt is not the man to let it lie here and die."

I searched again. At last I bethought me of a hollow under the hill, and groped that way. Sure enough I found a little dripping thing that moaned and sobbed as I took it in my arms. I called my horse, and the beast came to me, and I mounted, and tucked the little soaked thing under my coat as well as I could, promising to take it home to mammy. It seemed tired to death, and pretty soon cried itself to sleep against my bosom.

It had slept there over an hour when I saw my own windows. There were lights in them, and I supposed my wife had lit them for my sake, but when I got into the door-yard I saw something was the matter, and stood still with dead fear of heart five minutes before I could lift the latch. At last I did it and saw the room full of neighbors, and my wife amid them weeping. When she saw me she hid her face.

"Oh, do not tell him," she said, "it will kill him."

"What is it, neighbors?" I cried.

And one said, "Nothing now, I hope. What is that in your arms?"

"A poor lost child," said I. "I found it on the road. Take it, will you? I have turned faint." And I lifted the sleeping thing, and saw the face of my own child, my little Dolly.

It was my darling, and no other, I had picked up upon the drenched road.

My little child had wandered out to meet "daddy" and doll while her mother was at work and they were lamenting her as one dead. I thanked God on my knees before them all. It is not much of a story, neighbors, but I think of it often in the nights, and wonder how I could bear to live now if I had not stopped when I heard the cry for help upon the road—the little baby cry, hardly louder than a squirrel's chirp. —Christian Woman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Scot Abroad.

It is a Scotch proverb that "A Scotchman, a crow, and a Newcastle grindstone travel a' the world over." The Scotch, very singularly, are far less insular than the English; it is said they differ less from the general type of Europeans; they adapt themselves more to the habits and modes of thought of other nations it is said; and that on the Continent they mark themselves less strongly, and conform to foreign ways more easily and naturally, than the English. It is far more usual to meet with a continentalized Scotchman than a continentalized Englishman. A story was told during the Crimean war of the disappointment of an Englishman who went out to the East as an interpreter, and whose ruling passion was a hatred of everything Scotch; but strolling through the camp with a Turkish officer, and abusing the Scotch to his heart's content, to his astonishment Hassan Bey, the Turk, broke out, "I'll tell ye what ma mon, gin yer daur lowse ye'r tongue upon ma country like that, I'll gie ye a cloot on the lug that'll mak' it tingle frae this till Hallowe'en!" The thunderstruck Englishman stammered out, "Why, my good man, I thought you were a Turk!" "And sae I am a Turk the noo, ma braw chiel," said the angry Glasgow Mussulman, "but my faither's auld leather breeks ne'er travelled farther than just fra Glasgow to Greenock and back again; but when I gang hame—as I'll do or it's lang—I'll just be Wully Forbes, son o' auld Daddy Forbes, o' the Gorbals, for a' that's come and gane!" Presently a splendidly-dressed Hungarian came up and said to the Turk, "Wully, mon, there's a truce the noo for twa hours; just come wi' me and we'll hae a glass thegither."

It was the same with an English officer, until the Englishman exclaimed, "Bless my heart! is everybody on earth a Scotchman? Perhaps I am one myself without knowing it!" But when the Russian General Tarassoff exclaimed, "Eh, Donald Cawmell! are ye here?" and Ibrahim Pasha burst fort, simultaneously, "What, Sandy Robertson! can this be you?" the Englishman burst forth, "It's all over! Turks, Russians, Hungarians, English—all Scotchmen! It's more than I can bear! I shall go home; there's nothing left for me to do here. I came out as an interpreter, but if all the nations of Europe talk nothing but Scotch, what use can I be?" This seems very droll, but it is no more droll than real.

We believe it is Sir Archibald Alison who mentions how, when Marshal Keith was combating the Turkish forces under the Grand Vizier, the two Generals came to a conference with each other; the Grand Vizier came mounted on a camel, in all the pomp of Eastern magnificence; the Scotch Marshal Keith, who originally came from the neighborhood of Turriff, in Aberdeenshire, approached on horseback. After the conference the Turkish Grand Vizier said to Keith that he would like to speak a few words in private to him, in his tent, and begged that no one should accompany him; Marshal Keith accordingly went in, and the moment they conferred, the Grand Vizier threw off his turban, tore off his beard, and running to Marshal Keith, said, "Oh, Johnnie, foo's a' wi' ye man?" and he then discovered that the Grand Vizier of Turkey was a schoolfellow of his own who had disappeared about thirty years before from a parish school near Methlie.

And we remember to have met with an anecdote of a Scotchman from Perth who had penetrated into some far interior of Asia—we forget where; he had to see the Pasha, or Bashaw. He was introduced to the comely man in his tent. They gathered up their knees, and sat down upon their carpets. They drank their strong coffee, and smoked their kookahs together in solemn silence; few words, at any rate, passed between them, but we may trust, sufficient for the occasion, but when the man of Perth was about to leave, the Pasha also arose, and following him outside the tent, said, in good strong Dorick Scotch, "I kenned ye vera weel in Perth; ye are just sae and sae." The Perth man was astonished, as well he might be, until the Pasha explained, as he said, "I'm just a Perth man mysel'!" He had traveled, and he had become of importance to the Government there. His story was not very creditable. In the expectation of the post he filled he had become a Mohammedan. But he was an illustration of the ubiquity of his race, and of the Scot Abroad.—Scottish-American Journal.

The Violin.

ITS CONSTRUCTION AND PERFECTION.

In a lecture which he recently delivered at the Royal Institution in London on the construction, the history and the sound of the violin, Mr. Haweis called attention to the variety in shape and style of the instruments of the viol tribe, ancient and modern, as showing the inexhaustible fascination they possessed over the human mind. The wood was selected by the best makers of the old violins with extreme care. At Brecia they used pear, lemon and ash; at Cremona, maple, sycamore and, of course, pine. * * * The wood came into the markets of Mantua, Brecia, Cremona, Venice, Milan, from the Swiss southern Tyrols, unlimited in supply, often mighty timbers of great age—plentiful then, scarcer now. The makers had their pick; they tested it for intensity and quality. Cut strips of wood and strike them, you will vary in musical sound. When a good acoustic beam was found the maker kept it for his best work. In Joseph Guarnerius and Stradivarius the same pinetree crops up at intervals of years. A good maker will patch and join and inlay to retain every article of tried timber. Old wood is oddly vocal. As I sat in my room, surrounded by these instruments, I could not cough or move without ghostly voices answering me from the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries; and even the old saxoned sacks and bellies of unstrung violins are full of echoes." Taking a violin and tearing it open, the lecturer continued: "The violin is made of fifty-eight or seventy pieces. It is as light as a feather and as strong as a horse. Wood about as thick as a half crown by exquisite adjustment resists for four centuries a pressure of several hundred weight. The belly of soft deal, the back of hard sycamore are united by six ribs of sycamore supported by twelve blocks with linings. The sound bar running obliquely under the left foot of the bridge, is the nervous system of the violin; the sound-post, supporting the bridge, is the soul; through it passes all the heart-throbs or vibrations generated between the back and the belly; on its position depends mellowness, or intensity of sound. The prodigious strain of the strings is resisted first by the arch of the belly, then by the ribs, strengthened with the upright blocks, the pressure upon which is evenly distributed by the lining which unites them, and, lastly by the supporting sound bar and sound post and back." The secret of the ancient varnish on which some of the qualities of the instrument probably depend, is still only partly revealed. Mr. Haweis believes with Charles Reade, that it was an heterogeneous varnish, first of oil with gum in solution, the colors evaporated in spirits.—Popular Science Monthly.

The Army Worm.

The army worm which is now devouring the crops of portions of Long Island and New Jersey is the grub of nocturnal moth known to entomologists as the Leucania unipuncta. The moth when fully extended is about an inch long and an inch and three-quarters in width from tip to tip, and is of a yellowish-drab color inclining to russet. Its fore-wings—for the leucania, like all lepidopters, has two sets of wings—are each decorated with one dot near the centre and a dusky oblique stripe at the tip. It generally deposits its eggs at the base of perennial grass stalks about the end of June or early in July, and they are hatched in the next spring. For about a month after they are hatched they feed voraciously upon vegetation, and then descend into the ground, where, in an oval chamber, the larva changes to a shining, mahogony-colored chrysalis which in two weeks develops into the imago or mature insect, by killing which the birth of multitudes of offspring may be prevented. The larva or worm, when it has attained its full growth, is from an inch to an inch and three-quarters long, dark gray, and marked with three narrow, yellowish stripes above, and a broader one of the same color or slightly darker upon each side. It is thinly clothed with short hairs, and has a black line on the head shaped like the letter V. The mouth of the moth had been adapted simply to sucking dew and the nectar of flowers, the mandibles, labium and labrum being in a rudimentary state, while the maxillæ were enormously developed, forming a proboscis with which it gathered food, and which when at rest was coiled up like a watch spring in front of the head. The larva, however, is furnished with apparatus for mastication and sets out on its travels, doing nothing but creep and gnaw the vegetation that comes in its way. When the insects appears in such incalculably vast armies as those in which it has come this year farmers and gardeners are at a loss for means to stay its progress, but in ordinary times it may be destroyed with London purple or Paris green, and its march may be cut off by trenches dug in the line of its advance. Preventive measures are the ploughing of an infested field in the autumn to destroy the eggs, or burning the stubble over the eggs. Natural enemies of the worm are cows and blackbirds, hogs and ichneumon flies, which latter are the deadly foes of the lepidopters. They deposit their eggs, larvæ and pupæ of these insects and in paying attention to the army worm they lay three or four white eggs upon his skin just behind the head, and when the ichneumon larvæ are hatched they proceed at once to make a meal of their involuntary host. Nearly coincident with the appearance of the army worm on Long Island was that of a "strange fly" which is now commonly thought by the farmers to be the parent of the worm, but it is much more likely that the fly was the ichneumon instinctively seeking a home and suitable food for its young, yet unborn. The ichneumon fly itself is harmless to man, and for the sake of the good that it does should be left unharmed by him, as also should the despised crow, which has been shown to be more serviceable to the farmer by reason of the insects which it destroys than it is troublesome to him in the cornfield.—N. Y. World.

SECULAR NEWS.

The Wilmington Star informs its readers that a vicious bull dog that had bitten a child on the street was killed by order of the Chief of Police. That's the style, fill the ditch when the man is killed. A bull dog may range at large until he bites somebody—which he is pretty sure to do—and then he is killed.

A method said to be used in Portugal for preserving fish consists in removing the viscera and sprinkling sugar over the interior, keeping the fish in a horizontal position, so that the sugar may penetrate as much as possible. It is said that fish prepared in this way can be kept completely fresh for a long time, the flavor being as perfect as if recently caught. At this season of the year, when it is so difficult to keep fish from spoiling, this hint may be worth something. At any rate it will cost little to try it. A tablespoonful of sugar is said to be sufficient for a five pound fish.—Wilmington Star.

His Excellency Governor Jarvis, has appointed Donald McRae, Esq., of Wilmington, and Col. R. Y. McAden, of Charlotte, as delegates to represent the State of North Carolina in preliminary meetings to be held in New York city, to make arrangements for the great World's Fair in 1883. Col. Thos. M. Holt and Julian S. Carr, Esq., were named as alternates.—Raleigh Visitor.

Up to Thursday last there was a dearth of beef cattle in this market, and butchers were put to their wits-end to supply the demand; but on that day one hundred and two head of beeves arrived, in three droves, from Brunswick, Onslow and Duplin counties, and were sold at 1½a 2½ cents per pound, on the hoof. The "Market Company," an association of butchers, took 88 head, the balance were sold to outside butchers. Yesterday, 16 head were brought in and a fine drove of 50 sheep, by rail from Weldon. The former sold at 3½ cents per pound, on the hoof —an extra fine lot. The sheep were bought at $1 50 per head.—Star.

SHALL THE PRESBYTERY OF ORANGE BE DIVIDED?

My first and main reason for advocating the division of Orange Presbytery is that we may save expenses. This would not be a reason of much weight if it could be shown that the interests of the churches of the Presbytery are better subserved by retaining the Presbytery as it is than they would be if the Presbytery were divided. The churches are certainly able to bear the present expenses, and, if essential to their best interests, they ought to continue to bear them, but if it can be shown that these interests would be as well if not better subserved by two Presbyteries than by one, then the argument of expenses becomes a weighty one. In other words, if the division of Presbytery shall enable the churches within its bounds to maintain presbyterial government, according to the present constitution, at an annual expense of $250 less than at present, then the saving of that $250 annually, becomes a strong argument for division. That at least $250 annually would be saved in the item of traveling expenses of delegates, if the Presbytery were divided as proposed, must be evident to any one who will attentively consider the subject. Let us suppose an instance illustrating this: Suppose Orange Presbytery is to have a regular meeting at Raleigh. The expenses of that meeting, if fully represented, would be the traveling expenses, in going to and returning from Presbytery, of all the ministers and one ruling elder from every church within its bounds. The delegates must all go to Raleigh. But suppose the Presbytery were divided, by the line proposed last spring, and that the Eastern Presbytery meets at Raleigh and the Western at Greensboro. All the delegates then living west of the proposed line do not have to go to Raleigh, but go to Greensboro. The delegates then living at Greensboro and north, south, and west of that place save all the expenses of going from Greensboro to Raleigh and returning. Those living east of Greensboro to the line save the difference between the expense to Raleigh and to Greensboro. The distance from Greensboro to Raleigh is 81 miles. The expense of a delegate at six cents per mile the round trip, i. e. three cents each way, would be $4 86. There are 27 delegates living at Greensboro and north, south and west of that place. We have, then 27 times $4 86, which is $130 42, for the amount saved by these. The delegates living east of Greensboro to the dividing line would save less amounts Say $150 would be saved for one meeting of Presbytery. The saving is greatest to the churches on the extreme west, while it is very little to those in the centre of the Presbytery. The churches in the extremo east and west are the ones that feel the burden of expenses most, and will be most relieved by division. But this calculation is for only one meeting. We have two meetings of Presbytery every year. Double $150 and we have $300 for the annual saving. But more than this would be saved some years when Presbytery meets at less central points. I have calculated the average annual expenses of holding Orange Presbytery, by calculating the actual annual expenses for the years 1877-'78-'79, when Presbytery met at Graham and at Milton, at Newbern and at Haywood, at Eno and at Mamance. I have then calculated the average annual expenses of each of the two Presbyteries formed by the division of Orange in the same way by supposing them to meet at different points within their bounds for three years. I find that the average annual expenses of Orange Presbytery, if fully represented, would be $828 49, that that of West Orange would be $258 66 and of East Orange $252 03, making the total average expenses of the two Presbyteries $510 69. Subtracting this last amount from $828 49, we have $317 80 for the amount saved annually. These calculations are made upon the basis of full representation. It is known that the aggregate amounts are greater than ever realized, but it is impossible to tell what proportion of Presbytery will be present during any given year, and also while the aggregate amounts may be less the differences will continue about the same. I have been thus specific in indicating the methods of calculation because some brethren seem to doubt the correctness of these figures as presented last spring. Perfect accuracy is not, of course, claimed; but only an approximation to the truth. Division would increase expenses in that another Stated Clerk would have to be employed and additional record books provided, but this, it is believed, would not require more than $50, so that $250 would be saved annually by division. Now we say that if presbyterial government can be maintained as efficiently within the bounds of Orange Presbytery by two Presbyteries as by one, we ought to divide. We ought to save this money to the churches. What right have we to waste the money of the churches? Did not our Master teach us the lesson of economy when He commanded to gather up the fragments that nothing be lost, after He had fed the hungry multitudes? Ought not ecclesiastical governments to set the example to civil governments of a wise economy? We hold that we ought. We propose in our next to show that presbyterial government can be as well, if not better maintained by two Presbyteries within the present limits of Orange than by one.

BLACKWOOD.

Blackwood's Magazine for June, 1880, contains, among other interesting articles, one on Suicide, which is full of curious and valuable information. The fearful increase of the crime of suicide has been steadily progressing, ever since statistics in regard to it have been kept. And the author wisely concludes that "suicide is increasing, because religion is diminishing." There is no punishment for the self-murderer in this life, and if the fear of future punishment does not restrain his hand, nothing else will. If men will deny the existence of God, they must take the consequence of being forsaken by God. "The increase of the crime all over Europe has been going on, for the last hundred years, with strangely augmenting speed." It is much more prevalent in the north than in the south of Europe—Denmark heading the list, and Portugal ending it;—only one suicide in Portugal for every 35 in Denmark. In cities and towns it is much more frequent than in the country, and the proportion increases as the country approaches the town boundaries. There is only one suicide in the country to every thirty in the towns. It is much more common amongst old people than young and middle-aged people:—more frequent amongst the working than the professional classes. Therefore we infer that the happiest and most natural condition for the human race is country life; and away from the manufacturing centres which create and collect together great masses of the working classes. When every man, if he so wills it, can go out West and enter a farm for himself, why should he form one of the already numerous wage-receiving class whose miseries lead them to such frequent suicides? The vast unsettled regions of the United States and of Canada and other British possessions in various regions offer an independence for the whole world:—yet how few comparatively avail themselves of the blessing offered. Wheat farming and dairy farming, fruit-growing and bee keeping, wool raising and stock growing, all the materials for health and comfort scattering profusion around them—who would be a day-laborer in a town when he could be an independent farmer in the country?

Another most interesting article in this number of Blackwood is headed "The University of the Prairies"—describing the University of Manitoba, a province of Canada, situated midway between the two oceans, Atlantic and Pacific, and immediately north of our two States, Minnesota and Dacotah. Winipeg, the capital of Manitoba, is a city of over 10,000 inhabitants—ten years ago, scarcely more than a fort. The rush of population to this immensely fertile region, is overwhelming. Villages and homesteads are springing up like magic all over the face of this portion of the earth. In describing the University the writer says: "What is absolutely unique is the representation of the denominational colleges. As we said above, they were respectively Episcopalian, Roman Catholic and Presbyterian. Not unnaturally they sent seven Episcopalian, seven Roman Catholic and seven Presbyterian representatives respectively to the council." The English population is Episcopal, the Scotch is Presbyterian and the French Canadians are mostly Catholics. Lord Dufferin visited the University in 1877 and paid a warm tribute of praise to the men who had initiated the movement, and so far had carried it on with spirit and success.

The closing article is entitled "Conservative Reorganization." The Conservatives are very sore on account of their recent defeat, and propose a new plan of organization, which if carried out will certainly be very effective. The plan is to divide the whole kingdom into a certain number of areas. Each area then to be divided into a certain number of districts. Each district to organize an executive committee with a really good secretary who is to be paid liberally for his whole time. Each district committee elects representatives who form an area committee. The area committee again elects from themselves representatives who are to meet in London, Dublin and Edinburgh and are called central committees. Thus a constant communication could be kept up between each district and the central committees in each capital. Do you not see that when intelligent men are thoroughly in earnest, and wish to make their united action as efficient as possible, they instinctively return to the ancient political organization of the Hebrews? I hope the Conservative party in the United States will follow the example of their brethren across the water.

Let us pray for the gift of holy, discerning fear. Then let us go on joyously, adding grace, and love to love, and doubt not of our eternity. Heaven will come soon. It shall be our act of love to wait for His sake. Life is hardship, but not a very grievous one, for it does not hinder our loving God. And short of that, all griefs can be but light.—Christian Union.

BAPTISM BY IMMERSION.

BY REV. R. M'INNIS, D. D.

[Read before Central Mississippi Presbytery, and published by vote of Presbytery.]

IS THE MODE OF BAPTISM ESSENTIAL?

The question to be discussed is not "Is baptism by immersion valid?" This was fully considered by the Westminster Assembly that framed our symbols; and the assertion published to the world, either from ignorance or for a sectarian purpose, that it came within one vote of deciding that immersion only was baptism, is historically untrue. The vote for sprinkling or pouring was unanimous. The only question disputed was, "Should immersion be recognized as christian baptism?" The argument which received a majority of one, admitting the validity of baptism by immersion, was the common sense Scriptural view that mere mode could not invalidate any act of religious worship or christian ordinance. God may be worshipped standing, sitting or kneeling. It is not the mode, the external act, but the inward feeling, the spiritual exercise, that gives validity to worship. So the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of Christ may be received standing, sitting or kneeling, though all admit that they were first received in a reclining posture. It is not the mode, but the spiritual remembrance of the sufferings and death of Christ, symbolized in this ordinance, that enables the recipient to partake of it worthily. And hence to make the validity of christian baptism depend upon mere mode is without scriptural authority, and is inconsistent with the spiritual nature of the Church and the design of her ordinances.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE.

The question, then, to be settled is, Is baptism by immersion Scriptural? Is it the mode commanded—the mode that was practiced in the days of the apostles—and the mode required by the great design of this ordinance, as set forth in the Scriptures?

This question must be determined, not by education, prejudice, conjecture or inference, but by facts recorded in the Word of God. If the authority of ministers to preach the Gospel, the existence of the visible Church, and the validity of her ordinances, depends upon the mere mode of baptism, then that mode must be settled beyond dispute by plain, positive command. Is there such a command to be found in Scripture? I have never seen it, and I challenge the advocate of immersion to show it. In the great commission ordaining and requiring the administration of baptism, there is no mode expressed or implied. The command is, to go, to preach, to baptize. These are all generic words, and exclude mode just as much as the command to work. It would be just as reasonable Poreuthentes (go) always means to ride upon an ass, in imitation of the example of Christ, as that baptizo means in this commission to immerse, or any other definite mode. It was not the external mode of going, preaching, or baptizing, but the great duties, that Christ commanded. There is just as much authority to contend for mode in the one as in the other. It is not true, then, that baptizo means in this commission to immerse.

IS IMMERSION A SCRIPTURAL MODE?

But it is true, as I shall show, that in almost every case of baptism mentioned in the Scriptures, the circumstances and facts recorded forbid the idea of immersion. Hence, in all the translations of the New Testament into different languages, since the days of the Apostles, baptizo was regarded as a generic, technical word, designed to describe a religious ordinance, symbolized by water, without any reference to the mode of applying it, by sprinkling, pouring or immersion. Neither mode expresses the full meaning of the word, as used by the inspired writers. This has been the honest conviction of all the great scholars of the world for eighteen centuries. Hence they did not venture to translate, but simply transferred, baptizo, and in none of these translations was it ever rendered immerse, except in the recent sectarian Baptist version, which is not, and never was, used, even by this denomination, save by a few extremists; and they more privately than publicly, showing that they feel that the religious sentiment of the Christian world has condemned this effort to sectarianize the Word of God. If baptizo means to immerse, and nothing else, then scholars have not ventured to give an honest translation; and more than thirty-nine-fortieths of the Christian world, equally as intelligent, honest, conscientious, and pious, are excluded from the Church of Christ, and all Christian communion with them denied.

And even more: If immerse is the mode, the act commanded as the Baptist argument affirms, then it must mean the whole body and nothing more. The same word cannot mean to knock down and raise up; the argument is, that the command is to immerse the whole body, or there is no baptism. Baptizo cannot mean to immerse and to emerse, two distinct and opposite acts, put under and take out. Hence the ordinance as administered by Baptists is not a compliance with the command. The individual who immerses a part of his body by going down into the water, as well as the administrator who raises him up, violates the command, and according to the argument, vitiates the ordinance. So that if immerse is the mode, the act commanded, and if the mode is necessary to make baptism valid, there is not a valid baptism in the world to-day. No individual receiving this ordinance has any authority to go down into the water himself; and no administrator of this ordinance can raise up, but must leave the person immersed. This is the legitimate logical conclusion to which we are forced by the Baptist argument that the command to immerse is in the Word. Nor will it do, as is now practiced by immersionists, to substitute dip. Greek writers regard this as a very different act from immerse; and in speaking of it, they invariably use the word dypto, never baptizo. In the New Testament baptizo never means to dip.

There is, then, no command to immerse or dip in the word baptizo. Nor is there any such command to be found in the Scriptures. Christ did not hinge the authority of his ministers to preach the Gospel, the existence of his Church, and the validity of everything connected with it, upon the mode of administering an external ordinance. The very genius of Christianity, the spirit and teachings of the Gospel everywhere, forbid the attempts thus to sectarianize the Christian Church. And there is no command to immerse in the Word of God.

CONTRARY TO THE EXAMPLE OF CHRIST.

There is not one single example in the Scriptures of Christian baptism being administered by immersion. The Israelites "passed through the sea, and were all baptized unto Moses;" but could not have been immersed, for they passed through on "dry ground." The Egyptians were immersed, but the record does not say that they were baptized. Nebuchadnezzar "was met with dew of heaven." The Septuagnint, or Greek translation, says he was baptized. Certainly he was not immersed. All the ceremonial washings or baptizings among the Jews were by sprinkling or pouring, applying the water to the person or thing. They could not immerse ceremonially their hands in a basin of water, for the first dipping of the hands would defile the water. They did cleanse them by pouring water on them. These cleansing are called baptisms. None of the divers baptisms among the Jews, of which Paul speaks, were by immersion.

It is reasonable, then, to suppose that John the Baptist, acquainted with the mode of those divers baptisms, would administer his baptism in the same way. Certainly he would not, without an express command, have adopted an entirely different mode. The fact that he baptized at or in Jordan, in Enon, and in the wilderness does not settle the question that he ever immersed. The inspired record does not say that he did. John certainly knew himself the mode he practised, and his uniform language is, I baptize with water. To say that the preposition with should be translated in, is not true, as may be seen by its use in other passages. Christ wiped the feet of his disciples with (not in) a towel. God anointed Jesus with (not in) the Holy Ghost. Moses sprinkled the tabernacle and the vessels of the ministry with (not in) blood. The woman washed the feet of Jesus with (not in) her tears, and wiped them with (not in) the hairs of her head, and anointed them with (not in) the ointment from the alabaster box. John knew the mode he preached, and the meaning of the language he used when he said, "John indeed baptized with water." The expression, baptize with, occurs some sixteen times in the New Testament, while in water is not found in the inspired record. Here, then, we have the plain, positive statement of both John and Christ as to the mode of John's baptism, which settles the question that it could not have been by immersion. For to say that he immersed, dipped or plunged with water would be nonsense.

But, says the Baptist, we must follow the example of Christ; he was immersed in Jordan, for he came straightway out of it. I need not remark that the word apo, translated in this passage out of occurs seventy-eight times in the gospel of Matthew, and is translated sixty-nine times from. This, every Greek scholar knows, is its literal meaning. Jesus did not say, Ye are, apo, out of beneath; I am, apo, out of above. Yet we must go with Christ into the liquid grave. This is the great Baptist argument which rests upon two more inferences, neither of which are true:

1. It is inferred that because Christ was baptized in or at Jordan, that he must have been immersed, which is not stated in the Divine record.

2. It is inferred that because he was baptized that it must have been as an example for us to follow, although he himself says that it was "to fulfil all righteousness." Here is a palpable discrepancy between Baptists and Christ as to the design of his baptism. That such an argument should deceive the ignorant and uninformed, is not strange. But it is surprising that intelligent, Bible-reading Christians could be misled by such an argument. The idea of Christ setting us an example of Christian baptism, by submitting himself to John's baptism, which Paul, in the 19th chapter of Acts, did not recognize as Christian baptism, is absurd. Then as a matter of fact, Christ was not baptized with John's baptism. That was the baptism of repentance. Christ could not repent, and John very properly refused to administer such a baptism to him. Nor did Christ receive the ordinance of Christian baptism. That symbolized the work of the Spirit; he did not need such a work. And then the command to administer Christian baptism was not given till after Christ's resurrection. John had no authority, nor did he ever administer the ordinance of Christian baptism. (See Acts xix. 2, 3, 4, and 5.)

Paul says there were divers baptisms among the Jews—the baptism of repentance, administered by John; the various baptism of consecration, which the law required all to receive who would enter the priestly office. If Christ was ever properly initiated into the priestly office, this was the baptism he received of John; who, when he understood the nature and design of the baptism Christ came to receive, hesitated no longer. For he knew that he, as the eldest son of Zacharias, the priest, and the forerunner of Christ, to introduce him to Israel, was the proper person, in the presence of all the people, when Christ had reached the lawful age of thirty years, to administer to him the baptism of consecration, which he did, and said to the multitude, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world"—your great atoning priest. And for the first time Christ entered the temple with authority, driving out those that polluted it. The chief priests and elders having charge of the temple demanded his authority for doing those things. "Who gave thee this authority?" He answered them by referring them to John's baptism, and asked, "Was it from heaven or of men? If from heaven, I was properly initiated by it into the priestly office according to law, and have authority for what I am doing." They did not dare dispute any further his authority. Here Christ himself rested his claims to authority as a priest upon the baptism he received from John; and the old, bigoted priests and elders were compelled to concede it. If this does not settle the question as to the baptism Christ received, language cannot settle it. (See Matt. xxi: 25, 26, 27.) As to the mode of this baptism, the law is plain and positive: "Thus shalt thou do unto them; sprinkle water of purifying upon them." (Numbers viii: 7.)

Thus Christ was cleansed, that is, set apart, consecrated according to law, with full authority, to the great work of the priestly office. There is no other baptism that could be administered to him. He could not receive the baptism of repentance—he needed no ceremonial cleansing nor purifying influence of the Spirit. The administration of either of these baptisms to him would have been absolutely unmeaning—the fulfillment of no law. Christ, then, was not immersed—He was not baptized, as an example for us, and the idea of following Him down into a liquid grave is a mere fancy of the imagination, founded in ignorance of Christ's baptism, its nature, design and mode. Whether, then, John baptised in or at Jordan, it was not by immersion, but with water. And Christ certainly, if he fulfilled all righteousness, and entered the priestly office according to law, was not immersed, but sprinkled, as the divine law required.

Those mountain forms of giant girth
Are rooted deep in moveless earth;
But lo! their yearning heights withdrawn,
And melting in soft seas of dawn.

What golden lights and shadows kiss
Brown ledge and Titan precipice!
Till all the rock-bound, sullen space
Glows like a visionary face;

Thus frowning truths whose roots are furled
Round bases of some granite world.
May lift their mellowed might afar,
Transfigured by love's morning star.

THE WHEEL HORSE

There is a wheel horse in every family; some one who takes the load on all occasions. It may be the older daughter, possibly the father, but generally it is the mother. Extra company, sickness, give her a heavy increase of the burden she is always carrying. Even summer vacations bring less rest and recreation to her than to others of the family. The city house must be put in order to leave; the clothing for herself and the children seems never to be finished; and the excursions and picnics which delight the heart of the young people are not wholly a delight to the "provider." I once heard a husband say, "My wife takes her sewingmachine into the country and has a good time doing up the Fall sewing." At the time I did not fully appreciate the enormity of the thing; but it has rankled in my memory, and appears to me now an outrage. How would it be for the merchant to take his books into the country with him to go over his accounts for a little amusement? Suppose the minister writes up a few extra sermons, and the teacher carries a Hebrew grammar and perfects himself in a new language, ready for the opening of school in the Fall?

Woman's work is never done. She would never have it done. Ministering to father and mother, cherishing her husband, nourishing and training her children—no true woman wants to see her work done. But because it is never done she needs resting times.

Every night the heavy truck is turned up, the wheel horse is put up into the stable, and labor and care are dismissed till the morrow. The thills of the household van cannot be turned up at night, and the tired housemother cannot go into a quiet stall for repose. She goes to sleep to-night feeling the pressure of to-morrow. She must have had "an eye" over all until everyone was in bed, and must keep an eye ready to open at any moment to answer the need of children, and open both eyes bright and early to see the machinery well started for a new day.

There is never any time that seems convenient for the mother of little children to leave home even for a day; but with a little kindly help from her husband, and a little resolution in herself, she may go, and be so much the better for it that the benefit will overflow from her into the whole household. She will bring home fresh new ideas and will work with the enthusiasm that comes from a fresh start.

One word for the older sister, who makes the salad for lunch and the desert for dinner, who takes the position of wheel horse quite cheerfully while her younger sisters make themselves beautiful and entertaining, and, one after another, find "one true heart" apiece to love them, and leave the maiden to grow into an old maid. However willing her sacrifice, it is one; and nothing but the devoted love and gratitude of the households whose fires she has helped to kindle will reward her for what she has given.—Christian Union.

THE PRINCE OF MISSIONARIES.

When in obedience to the commission of Antioch, Paul separated himself to the work of foreign missions, he inaugurated a movement which was not only absolutely novel but also brave. Even now, in these days when our missionaries have the advantages of steamships and telegraphs, and, above all, the endorsement of Christendom for their work, it is justly thought a heroic thing to become a foreign missionary. But how much more heroic it was in those days of an infantile Christianity and a pigmy sense of brotherhood, especially when the mere fact of recognizing the equality of the Gentiles seemed to subvert the foundations of a divine and exclusive religion already two millenniums old. In fact, the mission of Paul was a reversal of the mission of Abraham. Great was Abraham's call; but it was a call to become the founder of a single nationality and an isolated religion. Greater was Paul's call; for it was a call to become the founder of a universal brotherhood and a cosmopolitan religion. He himself was the first conspicuous illustration of the parable of the Good Samaritan. According to this parable, neighborhood does not consist in local proximity: it is not a matter of ward, or city, or State, or nationality, or kinship, or political party, or religious denomination: it is a matter of the possibility of relieving distress. According to this world's teachers, it was the Jewish priest and Levite who were neighbors of the Hebrew traveler to Jericho. According to the Teacher from heaven, it was the Samaritan foreigner who was the real neighbor of the waylaid Jew. That is to say, every human being who is in distress, and whom I can practically help, whether he lives in Philadelphia or in Calcutta, is my neighbor. And of this doctrine of neighborhood or universal brotherhood, Paul, was the first superb illustration. Being Christ's chosen vessel, to convey as in an elect vase his name before Gentiles, he magnified his office, feeling himself a debtor to every human being, whether Greek or barbarian. And he illustrated the Master's doctrine of neighborhood because he had caught the Master's own spirit. For the Son of God himself was time's great foreign missionary, commissioned by the eternal Father to our far-off and alien race, that he might bind up the wounds of a waylaid and bleeding humanity, and convey it to the inn of his own redeeming grace. As the Father had sent the Son into the world, even so did the Son send Paul into the world. Nobly conscious of this divine commission, he recognized in every human being, however, distant or degraded, a personal neighbor and brother. And so he won for himself the glorious title; "The Apostle to the Gentiles." And for this sublime vocation he had been in an eminent sense very especially fitted. By birth a Jew, he was familiar with the living oracles. By citizenship a Roman, he was allowed a freedom throughout the imperial empire which would have been denied him as simply a Jew. By culture a Grecian, he had the ear of the nations; for Greek was the cosmopolitan tongue. If over there was an instance of divine election, it was the choice of Saul of Tarsus to become the prince of foreign missionaries.—S. S. Times.

THE MAINE LAW.

The Maine Prohibitory Law and its results are just now undergoing examination. It has been upon the statute books about twelve years, and has therefore been sufficiently tested to determine its practical efficiency. "Does Prohibition prohibit?" is the question which may now be intelligently answered. The results already attained may be stated thus:

1. Drinking is not suppressed, but is diminished. The statistics show that not one-tenth as much liquor, proportionately, is consumed in Maine as there was forty years ago, and not more than one-eighth as much as in the country at large to-day.

2. Fifty years ago over two gallons of rum were manufactured in the State to each inhabitant. To-day there is not a distillery or a brewery in the State.

3. The law has worked itself into so great popularity that no political party or class of men are willing to assail it. The only question in the minds of the authorities of the State is how to make the law more efficient and the prohibition more complete.

4. The changes in the rural districts are manifest and most gratifying. The traffic in liquors in these districts has nearly ceased, and the number of drunkards is greatly diminished.

5. The liquors which are sold now are sold in the towns and large villages. But the places at which they are sold are under the ban of the law, just as brothels and gambling-houses are. The sellers of liquor have to do it surreptitiously, and by evasion of the law and concealment of their business from the public eye. They must skulk and dodge, and sell under false pretences. Those who are looking for rum cannot find it at every corner.

6. In the cities there are many cases of drunkenness, but not many from the native population. Three-fourths of these arrested are foreigners, who will have liquor, and generally find out where it is to be had.

7. Occasionally the officials fail to enforce the law and open grog-shops are seen. But they do not thrust themselves into public places, and do not put their wares in the windows.

8. Club-rooms exist where men may call for liquors and have them furnished to them; but this is carefully veiled from those who are trying to enforce the law.

9. Liquor-sellers have diminished in number, and the business has lost what little respectability it had.

These are the general facts; but humanity is still the same in Maine, and liquors are still sold and bought, and used as beverages. The reformation is great, but not total. Meanwhile public sentiment is so strongly in favor of Prohibition that a stringent law has just been passed, during the defects of former laws, which has so discouraged those who have been quietly selling liquors say that they must quit the State or quit the business.—Exchange.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The late Mr. Buist, of Scotland, has left nearly $140,000 to the schemes of the Established Church of Scotland.

A Roman correspondent says very great satisfaction is felt at the Vatican at the Marquis of Ripon's appointment, and means for taking advantage of it are under consideration.

A Roman Catholic merchant in Australia died some time ago, leaving seven thousand dollars to the Church "to deliver his soul from purgatory." The executor refuses to pay the legacy until proof shall be furnished that the soul of the dead really has been delivered.

At one of the noon prayer-meetings in Aberdeen interesting extracts were read from a statement explanatory of mission work in Lapland. In this work, it seems, the Swedish Princess Engénie, sister of the reigning King Oscar II., takes a leading and effective part, in personal labor and by means of self-sacrificing gifts, even to the selling of the greater part of her jewels.

In an address before the Anglican Conference in Madras last February, Bishop Sargent gave some facts about the progress of the Episcopal missions in India during the past few years. The number of converts connected with the Propagation Society is 69,114. Since 1871, with the late accessions in Tinnevelly and taking into account Ceylon and Burmah, the numbers on the part of the Propagation Society cannot be less than 80,000, and the Church Missionary Society perhaps 101,000, i. e., above 180,000 in all, of whom about 46,000 are communicants. Bishop Sargent calls special attention to the value of the zenana work.

The St. Petersburg official circles and press are discussing the project of a General Orthodox Council, to be held at Moscow, to which the Patriarch of Constantinople and other Oriental Bishops are to be summoned. The object professed is to bring about a closer union between the Church of Russia and the Eastern communities for the more effectually resisting the continued attempts of the Church of Rome at proselytising. The real aim, however, is a political one—namely, to extend the Czar's influence upon the Oriental Church. A St. Petersburg journal connected with official circles suggests that Dr. Doellinger and other ecclesiastical dignitaries who deny Papal Infallibility be also invited to the Council.

Rev. Dr. Wilson, Clerk of the Free Church Assembly, said that a letter had just come to hand, in which the writer stated that, as one of the trustees of a lady recently deceased in England, and ardently attached to the principles of the Free Church of Scotland, he was authorized to communicate to the Assembly an extract from the will of the lady in question, which stated that out of the residue of her personal estate she gave the following legacies: For the Foreign Missionary Schemes of the Church, £1,000; for the use of the mission for female education in the East, carried on by the Church, £500; and to the Treasurer of the Original Ragged School, founded by Dr. Guthrie, £1000; these legacies to be paid free of legacy duty. (Applause.) Rev. Dr. George Smith, Secretary of the Committee, supplemented the statements in his report, and mentioned that while the givings of the Church at home and abroad to Foreign Missions amounted to the largest figure ever reached—viz.: £56,000—the total contributions to the various missionary of the Church was £74,342. (Applause.)

From the report of the Committee on the Widows and Orphan's Fund to the Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland it appears that the Fund was in such a flourishing state that an increase of £4 could be added to the widows' annuities of the children of deceased ministers. It was agreed that the widows are now to recive £46 a year, and each of their children under eighteen £24 a year. This is an excellent return for the £7 a year contributed to the conjoined Fund by each Free Church minister. The total accumulated funds of the scheme amount to £255,791. This is a most remarkable specimen of well-directed Christian liberality. The Funds for the Disruption Ministers and for the Aged and Infirm Ministers are also large; but the number of claims on the latter Fund is so numerous that a very considerable increase is required. The stipends of all the Disruption ministers on the Fund provided for them are now £200; but though the Aged and Infirm Ministers' Fund is now £100,000, yielding about £4000 a year, another £50,000 is needed to meet existing and prospective claims. It is not unlikely that this large addition will be provided in the course of a few years through means of legacies and donations.

EDUCATION.

The subject of Education, by which we mean, here, that instruction and training which it is the province of schools and colleges to impart, deserves all the consideration which can be secured for it. First in order in any discussion would seem to be the absolute importance of education in its relation to society at large. Plans can be adjusted readily and modes will be determined wisely and prosecuted vigorously and effectively, when the public mind shall have settled the question of their necessity.

Education lies at the very foundation of the moral and material prosperity of any people. The masses do not possess to any great degree the power of applied thought. It is the work of education to develope the power of mental concentration and enable to continuous and well-sustained thought; beyond this it is for education to induce and promote the habit of mental application, and to train the mind to a discrimination of the false from the true.

In enhancing the faculty of thought and inducing to its proper exercise in the higher forms, a well regulated system of education creates that thirst for knowledge which it enables the individual educated to satisfy; it inspires self-respect, conduces to manly self-reliance, stimulates desires for social, mental and moral elevation, and makes the gratification of these desires possible. No better proof of the last can be adduced than illustrations meeting us at every turn of life, of those coming up through its influence, from the abodes of ignorance with its accompanying degradation, to the prominent walks of useful and honorable life.

It would seem clear that moral questions, the decision of which affects the well being of society, are dependent upon that knowledge, intelligence and wisdom which can come from education alone. The question of sanitary reform can make no progress when addressed to ignorance; the question of liquor license—the great question with which it behooves lovers of mankind to grapple—finds its only hope of a benificent issue in addressing an enlightened moral sense; the various questions affecting the pecuniary development of states or nations, must be referred to those alone who can give to such questions a just degree of rational thought. The spiritual welfare of mankind, humanly speaking, is dependent upon the education of the masses, as enabling to the thorough diffusion of truth and providing for its intelligent apprehension.

We need not point to the histories of nations by comparing them with each other, or at different stages of educational progress with themselves, to enforce the importance of education, but it may be well to bring forward some facts to show the ascertained relation that education and illiteracy respectively bear to health, to wealth and to crime. From an article prepared by Eaton S. Drone we gather the following points: In those sections of the United States where there is least illiteracy there is most wealth, and vice versa. An eminent authority states that "about sixty per cent. of paupers in the United States are totally ignorant, and about 13 per cent. of illiterates are paupers; in other words the proportion of paupers among illiterates is sixteen times as great as among those of common education. As to crime, the same authority (in the report of the United States bureau of education for 1872) says, as a conclusion of investigations: "First, that one-third of all criminals are totally uneducated, and that four-fifths are practically uneducated; secondly, that the proportion of criminals from the illiterate classes is at least tenfold as great as the proportion from those having some education." The philanthropist, Dr. E. C. Wines, who devoted many years of his life to prison reform, reported in 1869 that of the convicts in France 95 per cent. were illiterate, in the English county prisons 34 per cent., in Belgium 49 per cent., in Switzerland 83 per cent., in the United States about 22 per cent. are totally ignorant and about 50 per cent. very deficient. Dr. Jarvis of Massachusetts, in showing that an important relation exists between education and health, divided the marriages for a given period in England into classes, in the first of which from 20 to 30 per cent. of the women were illiterate and in the second from 60 to 70 per cent. He found that 14.65 per cent. of the children born in the first class died under one year old, and 24.87 of the second.

These statements are not conjectural, but are fairly derived and legitimate deductions from well ascertained facts. They render it clear that in seeking the thorough welfare of its citizens the duty of every State is to promote education, even though it may require onerous taxation, and necessitate compulsory attendance upon public instruction. Both these alternatives will be resisted. It is usual to regard taxation, to whatever good purpose it may tend, as tyranny, and parents conceive it an infringement of their liberties to compel them to educate their children. The question, if it can admit of debate on its merits, is not, however, debatable until the State places the means of instruction gratuitously before the people.

We hold that at any cost it is the duty of a State to provide ample means for the thorough instruction of every child and youth within its borders, and, offering this instruction gratuitously, to compel those who are to be its citizens to prepare themselves for the proper discharge of their duties as such.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

To the Moravian Church belongs the great honor of being distinctively the Missionary Church. In view of the smallness of the denomination at home, the results of their mission work are astonishing. Their success is due in great measure to the singleness of purpose that characterizes the Brotherhood; unity of purpose so pervasive that it is said every Moravian child regards it possible that he or she may be a foreign missionary. An article on "The Mission Work of the Moravian Church" by the Rev. J. Max Hark, is published in the April number of the Gospel in all Lands. From this article, mainly, we gather the facts detailed below.

On December, 1732, when the Fraternity numbered scarce six hundred souls, two men began missionary operations in the Island of St. Thomas, among the negro slaves. The very next year three devoted men went to Greenland. Amidst hardships, suffering and danger they taught and prayed for six long years, until 1739, before they gained their first convert. At this time the Moravians have in Greenland, six mission stations, with thirty-nine missionaries, some forty schools, including several normal schools, and a communicant membership of fifteen hundred and twenty-six souls. Lutheran missions now divide with the Moravians the honor of having redeemed the country from intensest barbarism to a high degree of civilization. The nomadic habits of the people have been abandoned, and they are remarkably free from the vices which so generally accompany the opening up a country to commercial intercourse. Liquor is prohibited in all the settlements and Greenland is a Christian province.

In quick succession other missionary enterprises followed. In 1734 a Moravian Mission was commenced in Lapland; in 1735 one in Surinam; the next year one among the Hottentots; in 1739 two—among the Samoyedis on the Arctic shore, and in Guinea. In 1740 three missions were started simultaneously: one in Algiers, one in Ceylon, and one among the American Indians in Georgia. And so at both zones, in both hemispheres, whenever souls were to be saved, Moravian missionaries pressed forward with the Gospel.

The United Brethren in the three home provinces: America, British and Continental (European) number scarcely 19,000 souls, yet they have ninety-six mission stations, with 73,170 converts, 327 missionaries and 1,504 native assistants of various kinds. These Missions are located in the West Indies, South America, Africa, Australia, in the mountains of Thibet, in Mosquito, in Greenland and in Labrador, among the Indians of Canada, Kansas and the Indian Territory.

The system under which this great work is carried on is thus described. The Moravian General Synod, consisting of delegates from all the provinces, home and mission elects an Executive Board which has its seat at Hernhut in Saxony. This Board is divided into four departments one of which, composed of four members is specially charged with mission work, in which it is assisted by a treasurer, a secretary and agents in Germany, England and America. At the head of each of the sixteen provinces is a Superintendent, with these and with individual missionaries the Mission Department is in constant correspondence.

The wives of missionaries are always engaged in the work, and are specially recognized by the Home Board, having specific duties assigned them. As the work progresses Native Lay Readers and Helpers, both male and female are employed. Several days of each week are devoted by the Readers to conducting private or devotional meetings, consisting of Bible reading, prayer, singing and short addresses. In general they are paid a small salary for their services. The Helpers receive no salaries. Their duties are to visit from house to house making themselves acquainted with the spiritual condition of converts; to look after the sick; to labor among their heathen acquaintance; to exhort and admonish their brethren as occasion requires; to settle disputes or report them to the missionaries; and to see that all children are sent to school. Energy, perseverance and that entire consecration which makes arduous toil in the Master's service a delight are required, for the essential condition is increasing work. Personal piety, experimental, individual religion among the converts is the great aim. Converts are divided into classes under a supervisor and the strictest discipline is exercised.

Great stress is laid upon education, and nearly every station has more than one school house. In all the stations there are some two or three hundred schools, not including seven normal schools, and they are all of a very high order. Nearly three hundred teachers are employed, and the number of scholars is 15,000. In Fairfield, Jamaica, a Theological Seminary has lately been established for the training of a native ministry.

The entire expenses of the whole mission field, including salaries, pensions of retired missionaries, the education and clothing of missionaries' children in the best schools at home, traveling expenses, &c., &c., amount to between $250,000 and $260,000 annually. Means for the conduct of missions are supplied by annual grants from Missionary Associations in Europe and America. The entire mission in Labrador is supported by the "Brethren's Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel" established in London in 1741. It raises a great part of its funds by traffic, owning a vessel which makes annual voyages to the coast with supplies. This vessel has been providentially preserved in the work, having made over one hundred voyages.

Besides the grants from societies there are regular contributions from members of the Church and from friends of the cause, and money derived from legacies and from interest on special funds. But the largest revenues are derived from the missions themselves. The mission in Surinam and the mission in the Western Province of South Africa are self-supporting and the West Indian mission is nearly so. Few of the missions fail to contribute liberally; for native converts are not only instructed in the faith but are actively enlisted in the work. They are taught trades and arts, are encouraged and urged to work for a living, and so their self-respect is cultivated and their mental and moral condition elevated. The amount raised by the missions themselves is about $98,000 annually.

SUNDAY LAW IN KENTUCKY.

We have from some kind friend, we would be glad to know who, the most admirable Argument of Colonel Young, in the Circuit Court of Kentucky, in defence of the Sunday laws of that State. The whole argument is based on secular principles and with its conclusive array of decisions of the Supreme Courts of various States is worthy of universal perusal, but we can give but an extract. We presume the argument is in prosecution of the recent violation of law by selling liquor on the Sabbath day in Louisville:

"These gentlemen now appear before this court and ask it to ignore these precedents unanimously established by a long line of judicial decisions springing from the ablest courts of this country; to reject the truths established by man's experience, observation and the results of the researches of the most eminent scientists of this and other countries; to despise all considerations of mercy and humanity, and to trample under foot the venerable customs of that nation and tongue, which has been the great pioneer civilizer of the world, and whose activity, courage, energy and determination have done more than all other human agencies for the improvement, culture, progress and refinement of the world. This day has followed the Anglo-Saxon race to all parts of the globe. It has become part of its history and government, has played no inconspicuous part in its great struggle for religious and political freedom, and it ought not to be despised or lightly set aside.

"And yet, for what is this battle made? Has personal liberty been curtailed? Has religious freedom been tampered with? Have any of the guaranteed rights of a free man been destroyed or assailed? Nay, none of these; but only that the law has said you shall not sell liquor on the Sabbath day; that this traffic, condemned by the laws of God and man, shall stop one day in seven. That when other men cease their vocations, the liquor seller must cease his, and that this day, sacred to this people by a thousand holy and blessed associations, shall not be changed from a day of rest and peace into a day of debauch and crime.

"By what species of logic or provision of constitutional law, or by what demand of society or arrangement for the moral government of this city or State, shall the calling of liquor dealers be elevated to a higher standard than others? The merchant closes his store, the manufacturer his mill, the artisan his shop, the lawyer his office. They go and rest, but the liquor dealer, according to this claim and argument, is higher than law, is above all restraint or limitation, or control, must needs ply his hands every hour of the week day and Sunday, too, in his holy and righteous pursuit. Come now, you able counsel who defend these men and clamor for what you call their sacred rights—come now and tell this court what they have done for mankind that entitles them to such peculiar rights and distinguished privileges over the remainder of their fellow citizens.

"Do they make men better or wiser? Do they make them happier or richer? Do they care for the widow or orphan? Do they teach their patrons how to live and how to die? Do they induce them to be better citizens, kinder husbands, gentler fathers or more faithful friends? Do they elevate and refine human character? Is their mission on earth for good?

"With all the zeal the counsel on the other side have shown for their clients, they dare not answer a single one of these questions in the affirmative. What, then, do they accomplish for those who patronize them?

"The records of this court answer better than I can what their calling accomplishes. I speak now not of the individual, but of the calling; of the influence and effect of liquor upon this city and this State. It criminalizes and pauperizes thousands of the people of this Commonwealth. What it has done and is doing is answered by hundreds of voices saddened by sorrow and crime. The song of ruin comes from hundreds in yonder jail. The Work-house answers back with hundreds more, and the Alms-house responds with a still sadder refrain, with its myriad tongues. Yon House of Refuge takes up the note with its numerous child-like voices—sweet, sad, wretched, plaintive—and the penitentiary answers back with its thousand walls in deeper and louder tones, 'Liquor did it.'

"I need not tell your honor of these things. The daily record of this court is the best witness on this point. Doubtless here, as elsewhere, eighty per cent. of the men you try are brought here directly or indirectly by the influence of liquor.

"Why, sir, this and the other criminal court tells the tale of why these men are so persistent. Already Sunday has become in this city the great crime day—the red letter day. Your statistics show that now twice as many crimes are committed on Sunday as any other day. And what is the reason? Why, it is because the rest of society stops business and liquor sellers do not. Men being idle, are tempted to drink, and when they drink they commit crime. They are persuaded or induced to enter these misery shops, they drink to excess, and then become reckless and then law-breakers.

"Yet in the face of all these facts these liquor dealers cry out: Don't interfere with us. Let us alone. No law can reach us. Our business must go on. It matters not that we destroy the peace and happiness of families, that we make paupers and criminals, that we create orphans and wreck fortunes and the lives, homes, happiness of thousands. Six days in the week are not enough for this great and holy calling. Your institutions are nothing to us. We don't care for Sunday. We must sell seven days: every hour and minute of time is precious to us. Our work must go on. What care we for the health, happiness, rest, peace or well-being of society? Down with your traditions. Down with your Christianity. Down with your Sabbath. Down with your laws. Down with all restraints or limitations upon us. We must be freemen. We must do as we please, and the balance of the world must submit to the necessities of our trade."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Mr. Joseph Potts died in Washington on 26th ultc. as will appear in our obituary column. Such lives are the dearest records of the Church; her surest testimonies to the practical value of Christianity. What would the Church do without them?

Through the courtesy of Rev. John W. Davis we have a copy of Woman's Work in China, a pamphlet of about 75 pages octavo, very clearly printed and containing a large number of articles treating of their work, or recording it—from eighteen or twenty of the lady missionaries. The Woman's Work is published semi-yearly as the organ of the Woman's Missionary Association in China. The subscription price is 60 cents per annum. Of this association we note Miss A. C. Safford of our Church is Vice-President. Rev. H. C. Buhose writes to the Missionary that at present Miss Safford is sole editor of the Woman's Work."

Great Britain at last sees the necessity of taking hold of the liquor question. It is now in the first stages of the irrepressible conflict. A local option law has passed the House of Commons, in spite of the opposition of Gladstone and Lord Hartington. This is not much to accomplish; but it is such progress as in Great Britain indicates further advance. This bill had been rejected repeatedly heretofore. Another temperance victory was the passage of a bill for closing public houses on Sunday in England and Wales. These things point to the growth of a healthy public sentiment. A more marked indication of improvement in the direction we are noting is the fact that the amount spent in Great Britain for drink during 1879 was about $70,000,000 less than for 1878. The consumption of tea and other wholesome beverages increased largely during 1879.

While others are announcing their vacations that are to be, our vacation has come and gone—our vacation short and rugged, but of the pleasantest. As we hurried through it in fact, so we'll dash it off in description.

Vacated editorial chair about 9 A. M. At 11 A. M. had traversed 25 miles of the placid Cape Fear and found ourselves, and company at Fort Fisher point. An hour later along with the ladies of the company a mile or two from the landing tusselling with the Atlantic waves. Two P. M. at the Battery House—kindly surrendered to us—sunburned, tired, hungry and happy. Half hour later, hunger had disappeared before the lunch—which inevitably is where ladies are—and forgetting all the hardships were enjoying the salted breezes that come sweepingly fresh over the ocean's face. Three P. M. on board steamer en-route home? P. M. once more at home under the best government the world ever saw, partaking of the coffee literally made to a tea. 9 P. M., in the land of unpleasant dreams, wrestling with Wilmington Presbytery in reckless debate; from which we are aroused at 7 A. M. to the remembrance that our vacation is among the things of the past and soon the call will be for copy.

Recreation doesn't require rest, but only change of work, and this, while one of the days of hardest work was one of the most enjoyable, we ever experienced.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Correspondents who may have been addressing Rev. E. M. Munroe at Fayetteville, N. C., during the few weeks past, will please note his return to his home at Camden, Ark.

From the Raleigh Observer we note the continued illness, now becoming protracted, of Rev. Dr. J. M. Atkinson, pastor of the Second Church of that city. We hope to have more encouraging news to note in our next.

Rev. R. D. Stimson and Rev. W. R. McLelland, the former from Virginia and the latter from Texas, but both natives of Iredell county, N. C., are at Statesville on a visit.

TARBORO CHURCH IN ORANGE.

The Quarterly Sacramental meeting was held in the Tarboro church on Sabbath, July 4th. Five were received into the communion of the church, two by letter, and three upon examination; and thus the good work goes on.

There is a remarkable fact in connection with this church. While there are accessions to the church from time to time, the number of members continues about the same, as one no sooner unites with the church, than another makes application for a letter of dismission to some distant church. Since the writers' connection with this church, just the same number have been dismissed to other churches as have united with this in the same time.

While we have but twenty-eight resident members, we find by reference to the church register that twenty have gone out from the church; good, substantial members to other churches, so our loss is some one's gain. We have twelve non-resident members, whose names were put on this book by the Evangelist, who reside in Wilson, Weldon, and other places. The church building at Rocky Mount is now entirely completed, and best of all it is paid for too. We want some of the brethren to hold themselves in readiness to come to the dedication of the church after a while. Sabbath before last two elders were elected, and were ordained at night. H.

THE CASE STATED.

Episcopalian.—No, I cannot, commune with you, but you ought to commune with us. My principles will not allow me. I believe in apostolic succession; and therefore that there are no priests among you who have authority to administer the Holy Eucharist. You ought not to blame me;—my principles will not let me recognize you as a church.

Presbyterian.—Your Apostolic Succession dogma is improved and disproved. There are no successors of the Apostles, who were inspired men miraculously endowed to lay the foundation of the Church under the new dispensation. The bishops of the Bible were presbyters, ordained like ours by the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. Your bishops are unscriptural prelates irregularly ordained, and none like them were known in apostolic times or in the primitive Church. Your refusal to commune with us is schismatical.

E.—Why are you Presbyterians so severe against Episcopilans?

(Change of subject for ten minutes.)

P. (opening a new topic.)—Justice seems to be very strangely administered in some sections of the country. Not long since in one of our crowded cities a man assaulted another with knife and pistol, evidently intending to take his life. The gentleman received one or two flesh wounds, of little consequence, and turning upon his assailant he felled him like an ox with a heavy cane. All these facts were proved before the mayor, and yet the murderous assailant was discharged and the gentleman heavily fined for his "brutal violence" as the Judge called it.

E.—The Judge must have been an accomplice of the villain.

P. Precisely!—I am glad to see that you would have decided with wisdom and common justice. You Episcopilans make constant attacks upon our church life. You deny us the right to live. You say your principles require that you should slay us, and you ought not to be blamed. We acknowledge your right to live as a branch of the Church, but in self-defence we naturally enough resist your claim righteously to kill us, and knock you prostrate with rough and disabling argument. What think you of the Judge who reproves our "severity?"

E.—The cases are not parallel. Our fellowmen have a right to their lives, but you are not a fellow-churchman and have no right to church life.

P. Candidly put!—You mean slaughter. Let it be as clearly understood that we mean self-defence, and in such a contest don't blame us if we hit you hard. We don't mean to kill you, but we do mean to disprove your right or ability to kill others. We shall warn others against you and all other ecclesiastical highwaymen. Z.

SHORT OR LONG SERMONS.

The patience with which the disciples at Troas listened to Paul's preaching from dark till dawn of day has been unfavorably contrasted with the modern clamor for short sermons. The difference is thought to argue the decay of spirituality in the Church.

No doubt impatience of what we would now call a long sermon—i. e., a sermon of sixty minutes—does evince a low state of spirituality on the part of many. The undue prominence given the "service" of prayer and praise, and responsive see-sawing, and canting intonation, and the degradation into a corner of preaching, is a return to the dark ages. The esthetic has been cultivated down to a marked resemblance to the intoned cant of the negro when he plunges his fellow under the water, "in obedience to the commands of our heavenly Father." The advocates of the "esthetic" demand a sermonette of fifteen minutes. No doubt, too, all the carnal minded who care nothing for the sincere milk of the word that they may grow thereby are impatient of discourses exceeding fifteen minutes.

But all who clamor against long sermons are not necessarily unspiritual. Some preachers can preach very dry sermons! Moreover, Mr. Dryasdust is incorrigible. He will insist upon it that his monldy crusts are heavenly manna, and if people won't mumble them with him by the hour the responsibility is theirs, not his. Really, are people to blame who murmur against the length of a pointless, insipid, or classical, or metaphysical, or scholastic, or critical discourse, when they are hungry for the bread of life? Religion is not incompatible with common sense.

But furthermore there is reason why people, who themselves do not weary of an hour's sermon, should protest against it. Sermons are preached, not only for the edification of saints, but for the conversion of sinners. The circumstances of the modern preacher are very different from those of Paul at Troas. He preached to the "disciples who, on the first day of the week, came together to break bread," i. e., to partake of the Lord's supper. It is reasonable to infer that the assembly was wholly made up of disciples. The first day of the week was then recognized as a day of rest by the disciples only. Other people were doubtless engaged in their ordinary avocations. When the disciples met (then) to celebrate the communion it was not in open assembly. These disciples were new converts to a new gospel. There were many false teachers who were seeking to pervert the truth of the Gospel. The apostles were itinerant. The disciples at Troas had not many opportunities of hearing him. With eager minds they were anxious to have his authoritative exposition of many controverted points. The whole night was not too long for the summary of an inspired man's preaching, whom they had not seen for years, and whom they could scarcely expect to see again. The audience, the theme, the occasion, all required that the whole night should be taken up mostly in preaching. How different now among us—the tenets of christianity more generally understood, the preacher not an eminent apostle and comparative stranger, the audience largely made up of the unconverted, and to such the preaching was largely addressed. They, unlike the disciples at Troas, are not eager to hear, and, like Eutychus, will fall asleep under a long sermon. We wish their attendance, that they may be converted, but long sermons will drive them away. We wish many opportunities of preaching to them Sabbath after Sabbath. However willingly the disciples may listen for sixty minutes is it not the part of wisdom to limit sermons for the benefit of the unconverted to forty, at the outside, and even to thirty minutes? *

A REMINISCENCE.

In Raleigh, N. C., is living a widow lady now advanced in years, a member of the Presbyterian church, who at the beginning of the war, had a son, who beside herself, was the only remaining member of his family. When he expressed his determination to enlist as a soldier, his mother did her utmost to dissuade him from such a course as he was her all and had but a delicate constitution; but conviction to what seemed a duty led him to go to the front, into active service.

Severe illness brought him back to be nursed by a fond mother's love on two occasions. On returning from the last of these furloughs, he expressed to his comrades a conviction that he had seen his mother for the last time, and he was soon afterwards killed within a few miles of ——————, Va. A comrade from South Carolina was killed at the same time and both having endeared themselves to their companions by their many excellent qualities were not buried in the usual soldier's grave, but were carried to the cemetery of the adjacent town, enough money being found in the pockets of the Raleigh boy to purchase plain coffins. When the bodies were borne into the cemetery, a bright little boy enquiring and finding out the circumstances, ran to his home near by and told his mother, and a young lady friend of his mother, that some soldiers had just brought the bodies of two Southern men to be buried in the cemetery, and that one of them was the only son of his mother and she was a widow. The mother's heart was touched, and she and her companion, accompanied by the little boy, at once joined the party and selected a spot in full view of the window of her room and rendered kind offices in the brief arrangements and burial services that followed.

The Raleigh boy's captain, wrote at once a hurried letter to the bereaved mother, which was soon followed by a sympathetic letter from the kind hearted lady of ——, promising to watch over and keep green the grave of her loved one. When the war was over the mother proceeded to make arrangements to have the body of her son removed to Raleigh, and wrote to that effect; but was importuned so kindly and affectionately to leave the grave undisturbed, that it was determined to allow it to remain; and the Raleigh mother with the South Carolina relatives, joined in erecting monuments just alike, over the two graves side by side.

A correspondence has been regularly kept up and the Raleigh lady who has long been a member of the Tract and Bible Societies, had the little son of her friend, and the young lady friend of his mother's, constituted life members in these Societies by paying the requisite fee, and they in common with all who have such membership receive annually, packages of excellent little books and pamphlets, keeping in mind the sad event which was but one of the many connected with the terrible scenes of war and strife. AN OPPORTUNITY OF DOING GOOD.

Ought it not to be the pleasure, and is it not the duty, of christian people to care for orphan children? See how full the Bible is of promises to those who pity the fatherless. Jehovah Himself chooses to be called "the God of the Fatherless."

The Thornwell Orphanage for nearly five years has been endeavoring to give a pleasant christian home, good wholesome food, clothing and care, and the best of primary instruction to the orphans committed to its trust. Experience has shown us that the very best thing to do for these needy orphans is to teach them self-help, and reliance on God for the rest. They are trained—the girls in all household ways, the boys in certain trades beside. Their morals are carefully guarded and every pains taken to make them all that children and youth ought to be. And well have they repaid the care and pains bestowed upon them. Our little family of twenty-four orphans deserves the nurturing, loving care and aid of christian people.

The Orphanage is a Presbyterian institution and endorsed by the Synod of South Carolina, but it appeals to all christians for aid on the ground that no distinction of denomination is made in regard to the orphans received. We have now children from four different denominations.

The money received is applied just as the donors wish—all in response to this circular directly to the support of the children, and every cent of it.

We need your aid now. Can you not spare a little to help in sustaining this good work? Our only hope for the support of these orphans is the love that christians have for helping Christ's little ones. It may be that you feel unable to do anything, then please place this circular in the hands of some one that you think able and willing to send a gift, however small. On the answers to this circular depends the support of twenty-four orphan children.

Send your gifts in registered letter, or post-office order on Laurens C. H. Small amounts may be trusted to the mail.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Necrological Report, presented to the Alumni Association of Princeton Theological Seminary, at its annual meeting April 29th, 1880. Rev. Dr. W. E. Schenck, D. D., Chairman of Committee. Phila.

Notices are given of thirty-one Alumni, who have died since the last report. One of the oldest was Rev. N. A. Pratt, D. D., of Georgia, who died at 84. The average age attained was 65½ years. We have given a sketch of Rev. Edward Harris, who once supplied Newbern church, and was editor the Presbyterian.

The Sanitarian for June came with its familiar face and careful articles on various health-questions. The one on "Baking-Powders," by Dr. Arnold, will justly scare readers. A. N. Bell, M. P., Editor, New York. $3 a year.

The numbers of The Living Age for the weeks ending June 26th and July 3d respectively, contain the following articles: The English Flower Garden, Quarterly; The Backwoods of Ceylon, Fortnightly; On Ants, Contemporary; Fiction—Fair and Foul; by John Ruskin, Nineteenth Century; What Shakespeare Learnt at School, Fraser; A Lost Poem, by Edward Spencer, Macmillan; A Princess of the Seventeenth Century, Temple Bar; The Civil Code of the Jews, and The Decay of Revenge, Pall Mall; Curiosities of Omnivorous Mankind, Land and Water; The Dynasty of the Romanoffs, Traveler; Milk for Republican Babes, Saturday Review; David Garrick, Chambers' Journal; with instalments of "Bush-Life in Queensland," "The Crookit Meg" and "Mrs. Pierrepont," and the usual amount of poetry. A new volume begins with the number for the 3d of July, making this a good time to subscribe. For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each (or more than 3,300 pages a year), the subscription price ($8) is low; while for $10.50 the publishers offer to send any one of the American $4 monthlies or weeklies with The Living Age for a year, including the extra numbers of the latter, both postpaid. Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

The North American Review for July has, 1, Prince Bismarck as a Friend of America, and as a Statesman, by Moritz Busch; 2. Canada and the United States, by Prof. Goldwin Smith; 2. The Exodus of Israel, by President S. C., Bartlett; 4. The English House of Lords, by J. E. Thorold Rogers; 5. The Ethics of Sex, by Miss M. A. Hardaker; 6. The Panama Canal, by Count Firdinand De Lesseps; 7. Profligacy in Fiction, by A. K. Fiske.

The work of the publishers is beautifully done. No better print or paper meets our eye. The articles of this number are all thin and light—the first is ridiculously so.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Our latest intelligence from Campinas is to the 29th of April. The missionary work in its different departments was going on as usual, and the only reference made to the health of the mission is that "they were as well as usual." The sad affliction that has befallen the Pernambuco Mission is fully presented in a separate article. The long and earnest letter from Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, published in our present issue, was written only two weeks before the death of Mr. Thompson, and deserves a careful perusal by all who love the missionary cause. We hope this earnest call will not fall powerless on the heart of God's people.

We have letters from China to the 11th of May. Several of these will be published in the present number of The Missionary, and will be found interesting. Mr. Stuart writing from Hangchow, says "I have only time to add that we are all well and that our work is going on as usual. We have just received your letter saying that Mr. Sydenstryker might start in May or June. We will be ready to give him a warm welcome." Mr. DuBose, after refering to the improved health of his daughter Paulina, adds "that Miss Safford's work is very hopeful. She is now the sole editress of the "Woman's Work."

From Greece we have letters as late as the 5th of May. We are sorry to learn from these that Dr. Kalopothakes is still a great sufferer, having been confined to his bed for nearly two months with acute rheumatism. His only hope of recovery, as is supposed by his physician, is in going to the Sulphur Springs, which he was preparing to do. A letter written from his sick bed pleads earnestly that a young Greek, who has recently graduated at Princeton College, may be sent out to aid him in the work of translation. A letter in our present issue by Mrs. Sampson will be read with interest. Other members of this mission besides Dr. Kalopothakes have suffered from recent sickness.

A letter has been received from Miss Ronzone as late as the 21st of May. Owing to sickness her school is not as full as it was last year, there being upwards of forty pupils at present. She mentions two persons of note who are now reading the New Testament Scriptures with her every day, from which she anticipates important results.

Recent letters from Matamoras represent the missionaries there as well. Rev. A. T. Graybill was united in marriage to Miss Hattie E. Longbridge, at Marlin Texas, June 1st, by Rev. R. L. Longbridge, the father of the bride. Mr. Longbridge was for many years a missionary among the Cherokee Indians.—Missionary.

THE MINISTER'S SALARY.

As reports to Presbytery come in it is shown that the faithfulness of ministers is attested by the seal of divine grace witnessed in the conversion of numerous souls, and that the membership of delinquent churches is greatly increased, and yet a large portion of the minister's support remains back with little or no prospect of its ever being paid.

There are obvious reasons for this failure to recognize a sacred duty and obligation, which are by no means creditable to the churches themselves. There are mistaken ideas abroad as to the responsibilities of a church when it has pledged support to the preacher in consideration of his services for a certain period of time. Should a man in any of the departments of ordinary business life accustom himself to make bargains and then systematically break them he could not long sustain a reputation for truthfulness and honesty. Nor could such a person retain a respectable position in the community. He would be classed among swindlers and considered unworthy of the companionship of decent people. This would be regarded as a just estimate of his character. Now, while we hope to be always kept far, very far, from intimating that any of our churches have descended to the low level of untruthfulness and dishonesty respecting the duty and obligation of fulfilling their engagements to their ministers, we do say that these churches, by such unjustifiable failures, assume the grave responsibility of at least exciting suspicions as to their integrity in these respects. It is also hard to see how church members can escape the responsibility of becoming stumbling blocks in the way of substantial and permanent blessings upon the church with which they may happen to be connected, and at the same time fail to support according to agreement, the most important instruments of blessings which the Head of the Church has appointed.

These failures not unfrequently result from an erroneous notion to the effect that the preacher is an object of charity, and therefore he ought to accept of what the good people out of their benevolent hearts may see fit to give, and he thankful, though much more has been promised and there are others depending upon him for support. This is a mistake. The minister is a messenger of love, an ambassador for Christ. And while bearing the precious message of salvation should receive a competency for himself and others dependent upon him. For the same reason that a man in the other callings of life should have the means of educating his children and caring for his family, should a minister have the means for educating and caring for his.

By a just comparison it can be shown that the pay of ministers is less than that of persons in most of the other callings in life. The lawyer, the physician, the legislator, and even the ordinary clerk or agent in the service of the government, all receive better pay than those who devote their time to the highest good of their fellowmen.

Among many persons the good which is being done by these servants of the Lord is not taken into the account at all. This is all lost sight of while various methods and subterfuges are resorted to for the purpose of avoiding a plain duty and obligation respecting an adequate support of Gospel ordinances and a stated ministry.—Africo-American Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

A called meeting of Lexington Presbytery was held at Staunton, Va., on 29th ult., Rev. F. H. Gaines moderator, and Rev. Alex. Sprunt temporary. The meeting was called for the purpose of considering a call for the pastoral services of Rev. John A Preston of Pendleton, W. Va., tendered him by the Presbyterian church at Salem, Va. After hearing a very earnest protest from Mr. Preston's congregations, Mr. P. himself leaving the matter entirely in the hands of the court, Presbytery voted unanimously not to grant the dismission.

At an adjourned meeting of Lexington Presbytery, in Philippi, West Va., on June 4th, Licentiate F. J. Brooke was received from South Alabama Presbytery. Mr. Brooke was ordained to the full work of the ministry. Rev. J. W. Watkins preached, and Rev. S. M. Hogne the people.

At the last communion of Rough Creek, Charlotte county, Va., five persons were received on examination; and also on Sunday, 6th ult., at the communion at Providence church, Halifax county, Va., five were received on examination. Both these churches are small, but there is much encouragement to hope for growth. The attendance on public service has gradually improved, and the interest manifested in the preaching is marked. —Central Presbyterian.

A new church was dedicated at Liberty Hill, S. C., on the 20th ult., by Rev. W. W. Mills, of Bethel Presbytery. The building is clear of debt.

Cottage Grove church, in Red River Presbytery was organized on 19th ult., with 33 members. Dr. J. S. Milling and Messrs. S. M. On the first Sunday in June the new house of worship at San Marcos, Texas, was dedicated. The church is supplied by the Rev. J. L. Kennedy, and has thirty-eight members.

A correspondent writes to the Central Presbyterian: We have just closed a delightful meeting at Salem, Fauquier county, Va. Rev. J. Branch preached for us for two weeks in June. Though it was in the midst of harvest, the attendance was excellent, and a spirit of seriousness pervaded the congregations. God blessed his preaching to the quickening of His children and the conversion of souls. There will be several additions to our church.

Changes of postoffice addresses: Rev. A. J. Kennedy should be addressed at Little Rock during the summer; Rev. P. M. Custer has changed his post office address from Harrisburg, N. C., to Harrisonburg, Va.; Rev. R. J. Mecklin from Water Valley to Clayton via Taylor's Depot, Miss.; Rev. J. D. McLean's post office address is at Gadsden, Ala.

The St. Louis Presbyterian says that Rev. J. V. Worsham has changed his Postoffice from Clarkton, Mo., to New Madrid, Mo. His field of labor remains the same.

Rev. W. E. Burke writes to the Texas Presbyterian:

"Rev. W. T. Howiston was duly installed pastor of the church at Hope, Ark., on Sabbath, June 20th."

"Rev. G. F. Robertson, of Washington, had been present and preached on Friday night and Saturday, returning then to fill his own pulpit on Sabbath."

Items from Christian Observer:

Rev. A. H. Price, evangelist, and pastor of Broadway church, Rockingham county, Va., received three persons there at a late communion, and reports the spirituality of his people growing. He preaches besides at a Baptist church, Mt. Zion, Salem, Lacy Springs, and probably will go to New Market occasionally. He is becoming rapidly acquainted in his important field, and is going to do good.

Rev. J. J. Anderson preached his farewell sermon as pastor of the Samuel Davies church, Glover county, Va., on the third Sabbath in June, and has removed to Greensboro, N. C. He takes charge of the Presbyterian church at Greensboro.

Rev. W. S. Bynum, editor of the Church Messenger at Winston, N. C., in returning thanks: "The Church Messenger has now a good and growing circulation, pays its own way, and owes no man anything. Its success seems assured beyond reasonable doubt, and its future as bright as one could desire."

The editorial management is left in the hands of Rev. Aristides Smith, D. D., Rev. M. Marshall, D. D., Rev. F. J. Murdoch, Rev. Johannes Oertel, Rev. J. B. Cheshire, Jr., Rev. Chas. J. Curtis. A managing editor probably will be chosen shortly.

At a late meeting of the Presbytery of Columbus Rev. J. J. Weiss was received by certificate from the Heidelberg Classis of the Reformed church, and the St. John's German Protestant church, of Columbus, Ohio, was received into connection with the Presbytery. This church, organized a few years ago has remained since its organization independent, but now, after a full discussion of our Standards, unanimously adopts them and unites with the Presbytery. The church is flourishing, and numbers one hundred and seventy families.—Presbyterian.

To Travelers by Sea and Land.—The effect of air and of travel is to produce Constipation, which is followed by Headache, Piles and a general disarrangement of the system. The stomach, already nauseated, gags at the very sight of a pill, while other mixtures sweetened or not sweetened, or acid, are revolting. Nothing of the kind is ever complained of in taking Simmon's Liver Regulator. It is always grateful to the stomach, whatever its condition may be—in fact, the slightly bitter taste of the Regulator is pleasant in removing the sick taste from the mouth. A dose of Simmon's Liver Regulator, say from a half to a full tablespoonful, will impart a grateful warmth and glow to the weak and nauseated stomach, will regulate the secretions and gently assist Nature, slowly and surely, without griping and nausea, as though no medicine had been taken.

Finley High School, the advertisement of which appears in to-day's paper—certainly one of the best schools in the Sate—offers board and tuition at astonishingly low rates. See advertisement.

See in another column the advertisement of the old and well-known Horner School at Oxford, N. C. The catalogue which is before us, shows a good patronage. A very complete curriculum of studies is set forth, and the school seems to offer the best educational advantages on very moderate terms. Patrons having sons to educate would do well to send to Mr. J. C. Horner for a copy of the catalogue.

We feel that we are but discharging a duty we owe to the cause of Education, and to her faithful and devoted servants, in recording the triumphant success of another scholastic year, (the most successful in the history of the school) of Peace Institute, Raleigh, N. C. The merits of this school are of the very highest grade, in all its departments, and are not as widely known as they deserve to be. The spacious and magnificently located building is situated in one of the most charming and healthy regions of the South, and in a community distinguished for intelligence and refinement.

The school has been in successful operation for eight years, and the patronage is steadily increasing; the catalogue shows that pupils from six States attended it last session. The course of study is as extensive as any school in the country, and all departments are filled by experienced and accomplished teachers.

The Cooking School is a feature of Peace, and it was the first school in the South to introduce it, and the example has been followed by some of the most prominent schools in the country.

The wolf killed six dogs before he was captured, and Mr. Wallace came near losing his own life while endeavoring to throw a noose over the beast's head.—Roan Mountain Republican.

In Guilford county, June 20th, Mr. ELIJAH DENNY, in the 82d year of his age.

Mr. Denny had been a member of Bethel church for fifty years. In 1841 he was chosen Ruling Elder, which office he continued to fill acceptably till his death. He was a man of sound wisdom, prudent in counsel, firm in his convictions, a good citizen, and a conscientious Christian. He served his community many years as magistrate. He endeavored to discharge all the duties of life faithfully. He enjoyed the confidence of all who knew him.

In Guilford county, June 2d, Mrs. ELIZABETH McLEAN, aged 91 years.

Mrs. McLean had been a professor of religion for nearly 60 years. She adorned her profession by a godly walk. Her hope in Christ was as an anchor to her soul, and greatly cheered her during her declining years. We trust that she has entered her heavenly home, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. S. N. R.

In Rowan county, June 8th, of typho-malarial fever, Mr. THOMAS NEELY SMOOT, in the twenty-fourth year of his age.

Mr. Smoot had been for the past two years a member of the Presbyterian Church, having been previously connected with the M. E. Church, South. He was a quiet, unassuming, humble Christian and citizen; was generally beloved by all who knew him, as was manifested by the number who followed his remains to "the house appointed for all." He leaves a wife and two children, together with many friends to mourn their loss. But we trust it is everlasting gain to him.

Near Davidson College, June 13th, Mrs. J. L. SLOAN, wife of Mr. David Sloan in the 71st year of her age.

Mrs. Sloan had been a worthy member of Ramah church for many years. She was brought to her grave in a full age, like a shock of corn cometh in its season. She expressed her gratitude to that Being who has fixed the bounds of our habitation, that she was permitted, in His good providence, to live to see all her children reach a mature age. She felt that her work on earth was done, that she had made her peace with God. To her death was stripped of its sting and the grave robbed of its victory. May her bereaved family trust in a mother's Saviour, and enjoy the precious consolations of religion, by which she was sustained in the solemn hour of death.

At the residence of her parents, in Selma, Johnston county, N. C., on June 17th, ANNIE STEPHENS NOBLE, only daughter of Albert M. and Mary A. Noble, in the 23d year of her life.

The body was taken to Newbern for interment.

Upon a profession of faith in Christ she was received into the Presbyterian Church and baptized in January, 1875. At the time of her death she was a member of the First church of Raleigh. Ever since childhood she had been an invalid and a great sufferer. At times her sufferings were agonizing, but she bore them without murmuring, in submission to the will of Him whose love was assured through His Son Christ Jesus. In the last few months of her illness the writer had opportunities of hearing this suffering one re-assert her faith in her Redeemer. Her prayer was for patience. She fell quietly asleep, being mercifully spared any paroxysms of pain in her last moments.

"Neither shall there be any more pain."

On the 26th of June, at her home, in Wadesboro, N. C., Mrs. SUSAN (GULLEDGE) MURR.

She was sick for the space of twelve months, all of which time she bore her sickness with Christian resignation.

A devoted household, consisting of husband, son, two daughters, and a nephew, many friends and the church have lost a faithful companion, a fond mother, a sympathizing aunt, a kind friend, and an humble Christian worker. But of her we think it can be truthfully said, that their loss is her eternal gain; for she walked uprightly, and in her silent way, worked the works of righteousness, and spoke the truth in her heart; and neither did she backbite with her tongue, nor do evil to her neighbor, nor take up a reproach against her neighbor. Then loved ones while you weep over the loss of your departed one, rejoice that she, according to the requirements of God's Holy Book, has gone to be a dweller of the upper tabernacle, and a citizen of God's holy heavenly hill. Mrs. Murr was a member of the Church for over twenty years, a part of which time she was a member of the Baptist Church, but her husband joining the Presbyterian Church, she connected herself with that branch of the Church. Her Christian life, like her domestic life, was one of uniformity, free from spasm. It was her daily meat and bread to do her Master's will.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

ROBERT LEE MEBANE, son of Dr. D. C. and Mrs. S. E. Mebane, late of Greensboro, but the latter now of Davidson College, was drowned while bathing near Dr. Beattie's, June 24, 1880.

He died in the faith. For several years he was a seeker after Christ, and a few months ago expressed a satisfactory hope in his Saviour. He was peculiarly innocent and amiable, helpful in the family, earnest in his studies, and faithful in the private duties of religion. We mourn in hope. But his death was so sad. Not quite eighteen, he went out from us one evening full of merry life, and the next evening he was brought back dead to his heart-broken family. It was so hard to believe that this was Robbie, and even yet it seems like a troubled dream. But he is gone, and we wait for a joyful day in the resurrection, believing that Jesus has called him to Himself.

"Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

F. P. R.

At Elliottsville, Harnett county, N. C., June 20th, Mrs. ISABELLA ELLIOTT, wife of the late John Elliott, Esq., in the 57th year of her age.

Mrs. E. became pious in early life, and has since walked humbly with God in a consistent religious profession. She was industrious, frugal, unassuming and cheerful, devoted to her church, giving it her contributions and her prayers; fervent in her attachment to friends, thoughtful of the interests and feelings of others, and self-denying in labor and charity for the poor. She is greatly missed by the whole community, who will long cherish her memory.

In Washington, N. C., Saturday, June 26th, at 2:30 o'clock a. m., Mr. JOSEPH POTTS, in the 85th year of his age.

Mr. Joseph Potts was widely known among the older ministers of the Synod, and especially those of Orange Presbytery. Such can appreciate the well-nigh irreparable loss the Church has sustained in his death. He came to Washington, N. C., early in life from Northumberland county, England. He was married 9th June, 1825 to Ann Eliza, daughter of Abner Burbank, with whom, in rare sympathy and love he lived for fifty-three years; he has now entered into rest, having survived her only 18 months, and thus the chief wish of his heart has been gratified. The Washington Press says of him: "No one has died in half a century better known by the people of Beaufort county, nor more beloved by them, than Joseph Potts. He always filled a large space in the public eye, and was deserving of it. He filled more gratuitous public offices in the county, than any man has ever filled. He was a patriarch in appearance, and a patriarch in fact—a public benefactor who devoted his life to the good of other people. He was successively, under our old system—Chairman of the Board of Magistrates; Chairman of our Special County Courts, Treasurer of the County, Treasurer of Common School Fund and its Distributor, and Chairman of our Committee of Finance. All the financial affairs of the county were under his control, and year by year for many years, he made his reports to the assembled justices, which always met with their approval. No dollars or dimes of public money ever stuck to his hands. He was faithful and just in public as in private matters."

But it was in his religious life that he was chiefly preeminent. He was one of the founders of the Presbyterian church in Washington, becoming a communing member 5th Feb. 1824; he was elected an elder 16th May, 1829 and was immediately elected clerk of session which position he filled as long as he could attend the meetings of sessions. His long life was not only one of rare consistency but rare activity. He was ever keenly alive to all that concerned the Church; as nothing that effected its growth was too insignificant for his attention, so no labor was too arduous or no duty too unpleasant, which advanced her interests. During the absence of a pastor he lectured to the congregation on Sabbath morning and night and conducted the Wednesday night prayermeeting. For many years he was superintendent of the Sabbath School and as long as he could walk to the church he taught a young men's Bible class. Up to the war he regularly conducted a weekly prayermeeting for the colored people. The Bible was his constant study and delight and his familiarity with it was so great that in his conversation he would frequently correct his last pastor when quoting from it. I am informed since his death that it was his custom upon returning from his business at noon invariably to retire to a certain private room and engage in prayer before dinner, and this custom was doubtless one secret of his rare life; so conspicuous for sincere, unaffected, cheerful piety. He endured greater afflictions than ordinarily fall to the lot of man, but his perfect resignation and cheerful submission never faltered, and depite his trials his life was an unusually happy one. His pastor will ever recollect his cheerful smile of greeting, even when confined to his room and bearing in addition to this trial the loss of his eyesight. He was indeed a tower of strength, and only those ministers who have leaned upon him for support can conceive his loss. For many hours before his death he was unconscious. One of his last connected sentences was to ask that the 297th hymn be repeated to him. Upon its conclusion he prayed, "O, God, impress it upon my heart, every word of it, and let it dwell there while I pass through the Jordan of death." Thank God for his blessed life and his glorious rest after its toils and trials! S. M. S.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Little Julia.

Death called a little child one day.
"Oh come away with me,"
Its mother heard and sobbing cried,—
"It shall not go with thee."

Then closer to her aching heart,
Her child she fondly pressed;
When Jesus took it in his arms,
And laid it on his breast.

And now she lives beyond the sky,
In that fair land of rest;
And Julia is an angel's name.
She's happy with the blest.

O mourning ones, new courage take,
How many joys remain!
Your child! she lives, with Jesus lives,
And ye shall meet again.

"Little Miss Stone."

BY MARY WAGNER FISHER.

May Marsh was five years old, and lived in a country village in Central New York, where her father kept a store. Her grandmamma, Mrs. Stone, lived in the same street, four doors away. Little Miss May, as the villagers called her, was a chubby little girl, with a round, pink and white face, a little pug nose, large blue eyes, a pretty large mouth with two rows of small, white teeth, and her hair was "hanged" all around. All day she was as busy as a bee in summer time, swinging in the yard, playing at see-saw with her sister Nelly, or skipping upstairs and down, singing—

"Over the hills and far away,"

which were all the words she knew of a song she had heard somewhere. These words seemed to be, for her, quite enough; and for all the other lines she would hum and then, with all her little voice, as if breaking forth afresh, sing bravely out:

"La, la, la,"

"Over the hills and far away!"

Sometimes she would trudge about so gravely, and with so business-like an air, as to greatly amuse the housemaid, who, suspecting some mischief, would ask:

"Well, what now, little Miss May?"

"Oh, I is very busy to-day! I've my doll's stockings and skirts to wash; they're awful dirty. She's such a lazy doll that, if I didn't make her get up, she would lie right in the dirt on the floor all day long, so that it takes half my time to keep that doll looking 'spectable, it does."

With all her active ways, May was a very good child, excepting one fault, and I am sure no boy nor girl could ever guess what that was. She would sew on Sunday!

Not that she could sew very much; only with a needleful of thread. She would stick it back and forth through a piece of cloth, tangling the thread and making very long stitches. During week days she never wanted to sew, but the moment her Sunday morning breakfast was over, she would give nobody any peace until she had a needle threaded for her, when she would sit as patiently at her sewing as if she was a paid little seamstress. Her mamma was sorry to have her little girl sew on Sunday, but said little about it, thinking she would cease to care for it, after a time. But, as the weeks passed on, May seemed in a fair way to sew on every Sunday, as long as she lived. At length her mother decided to forbid having a needle, and on the following Sunday morning, calling May to her, she said:

"You cannot sew to-day, May."

"Why not to-day, mamma?"

"Because it is Sunday."

"Well, what if it be Sunday?"

"God does not like to have little girls sew on Sunday."

"Who is God, mamma?"

"God made you, dear."

"Where is God, mamma?"

"He is everywhere."

"Then He is here, mamma?"

"Yes, dear."

"In this room?,'

"Yes."

"Then He is in my pocket, mamma?"

"You must not talk so," said mamma, very much startled. "God is everywhere because He sees and knows everything you do. Now put away your sewing."

May slowly obeyed, and took the matter so to heart that she pouted all through church service, and at night, when the maid brought her supper, she said she was not going to live at home any more, but would move to her grandmamma's.

Next morning May appeared at the breakfast table, wearing a very determined look; in one hand she held her night gown, and in the other her doll. Her papa kissed her, and looking at her night-dress asked what she was going to do with it.

"I is not going to live here any more," she replied, winking her eyes very hard.

"And where does little Miss May propose to live?" asked her papa.

"With grandmamma. I is tired staying here."

Her mother smiled; then, looking sad, she said she would then have only one little girl, but that Nelly would comfort her. At this, May looked straight at her plate, and ate her bread and butter very fast without another word. When the meal was over she jumped down, and running into the hall for her bonnet, went back to the breakfast room for her doll and night-gown.

"I is going now, mamma," she said.

"But if you are not going to live here any more," said her father, "you will have no papa, and mamma will not be your mamma. You will have to say Mr. and Mrs. Marsh, and, when you come here you will have to ring the door bell, and you will be little Miss Stone."

May made no answer to that, but stood twirling her bonnet-strings. At last, turning desperately towards the door, she said:

"Well, I don't care! Graudmamma will let me sew on Sunday, I know! Won't she Nelly?"

Nelly said she "guessed not," whereupon May drew her bonnet over her face and, hugging her doll and night-gown, started for her grandmother's. Nelly watched her from the window, laughing at the little figure trudging down the sidewalk, moving as if she already had begun to battle with the hard things of life.

"We won't say anything to her, will we, mamma?" said Nelly, as May turned in at her grandmother's; "and I guess she'll be glad enough to come back before night."

May went in without knocking, and told her grandmamma she had come to "live with her —live with her always.

Mrs. Stone, amused at the child's decided manner, said she would be very glad to have a little girl live with her. When she asked her why she had left home, May replied:

"Mamma 'buees me; I is tired living there."

May very soon was busy giving her doll its breakfast, which seemed to be a vexing task, as often happened; after a good deal of scolding, she shook the doll, and, putting it down hard in a chair, exclaimed: "You ought just to starve, you ought, you naughty little thing!"

But after awhile, tired of being alone, and missing Nelly, she asked her grandmother for a couple of pennies to go to the store and buy her doll a frock. Mrs. Stone gave her the money, and May started for her father's store. Nelly, who saw her coming up the walk, shouted to her mother that May was "coming back;" still, May never once looked at the house, but walked straight past it. She held the two pennies tightly in her hand, and walking to the counter, where she saw her father, said:

"Papa,"—and then stopping, as if remembering something—"Mr. Maish, I want to buy my doll a frock."

Her papa acted as if he did not know her, and taking down some pink calico, asked her if that would do. She said "Yes," and he cut her off a yard. She put her two cents on the counter, when Mr. Marsh told her that the money was not enough; then, looking soberly down into her face, he asked whose little girl she was.

"I is my grandmamma's."

"And what is your name?"

"I is Little—Little Miss Stone."

"Ah, yes, I see. Well, I am not acquainted with any Little Miss Stone, so I'm afraid I can't let you have the calico."

May's lips began to tremble and her brave little stock of bravado to give way, when one of the villagers, who had been standing near, slipped a ten cent piece into her hand; this she quickly placed on the counter, and then, with an air of victory, she walked away with her calico.

Time passed happily enough at her grandmother's until the doll's dress was made, which happened at about five o'clock in the afternoon. May was then anxious to show it to Nelly. Full of this idea, and forgetting how she had left home in the morning, May put on her bonnet and ran back with her doll, rushing into the house without ringing, and exclaiming:

"See, Nelly, my doll's new frock!"

"Ah, what young lady have we here?" asked Mrs. Marsh, in surprise.

"This is Little Miss Stone," said Nelly, roguishly.

"Little Miss Stone? Indeed! And is Little Miss Stone well to-day?" continued her mother.

Poor May was driven quite to her wit's end. She had had the habit, ever since she could talk, of putting her hands over her ears when she wished to say something that a third person should not hear. So, quickly clapping her fat little hands over her own ears, she put her face close to Nelly's, and shouted:

"I is not Little Miss Stone; you is very much mistookened."

"Why, yes you are," laughed Nelly. "I guess you've forgotten!"

Their mother pretended not to have heard May's remark, and continued:

"I think, Nelly, dear, we will go out pretty soon to look all around for a little sister for you. Perhaps Little Miss Stone can tell us where to find a little girl who will be glad to live here; to play with Nelly, and sleep with her, and have the same papa and mamma that Nelly has."

It was plain to see that a struggle was going on in little May's heart, for she looked first at her mother anxiously, then at Nelly, when her eyes caught sight of a beautiful little round pumpkin pie that stood on the table. Now, if there was anything of which May was especially fond it was pumpkin pie, and an aunt of hers often sent her a small one. The sight of the pie drove all the sorrows from her mind, and clapping her hands she was about to seize it, when Mrs. Marsh, who was already tying Nelly's bonnet strings for their walk, said:

"That pumpkin-pie was sent to our house by Aunt George for our little girl who moved away this morning; she got tired of staying here, and went to live with her grandmother, so she could sew on Sunday! Now, we must go out and look for another little May, to be a sister to Nelly, and to eat the pumpkin-pie."

Mrs. Marsh moved toward the door, when May, no longer able to control her feelings, burst into tears, and, hiding her face in her mamma's frock, sobbed as if her heart would break.

"Don't cry, May," begged Nelly, soothingly. "Mamma's only in fun! Mamma, this is May; really, mamma, it is May. I told you all along she'd come back!"

At this moment Mr. Marsh came in and seeing his little girl in trouble, caught her up in his arms, exclaiming:

"Well! And what has become of Little Miss Stone?"

"I guess she's runned away," answered May, her eyes shining through her tears, and turning longingly toward the pumpkin-pie, which she was soon permitted to eat, while her papa and mamma looked on with satisfied smiles. In half an hour, she was quite at home again, and singing her old song:

"Over the hills and far away."

But for a long time the only reproof the happy little girl needed for asking leave to sew on Sunday, or for any other fault, was to remind her of Little Miss Stone.—Presbyterian Journal.

Come Just as You Are.

Have you ever seen a fire escape? It is a long ladder made to go upon wheels, and it is used in great cities when a building is on fire. Brave men place it against the house in order to bring persons safely down into the street out of the flames.

I once heard of a young man who was living in a house when it caught fire. A friend who slept in a room close by found it out and gave the alarm. He went three times into the young man's room and begged him to save himself but he would stay behind and dress himself, for he said there is plenty of time. The fire escape arrived, but the young man did not make use of it when he was told to do so. Suddenly the staircase gave way, and smoke and fire burst into the room where he was. After some time one of the firemen entered, and found him lying upon the floor quite dead, and blackened by the smoke and flames. It was no use to tell him to escape then; it was too late.

Many children in the world stand in worse danger than that young man, for any moment they may die and be lost forever. But to-day we beg of you to escape—escape from that dreadful end which must come upon those who refuse to obey the message of love.

But how can you escape? Where can you fly to? Just as the fire escape was placed against the walls of the burning house and the young man might have fled to it and been taken out of danger, so Jesus stands and bids you come to him, and he will save you, and place you where danger can never come. For he has died for poor lost sinners; has shed his precious blood, which alone can cleanse from sin, and he calls upon you to believe it.

There is no other way of escape from the awful consequences of our sins than that provided by the Lord Jesus Christ, who loved us and gave himself for us.

Do not say you must wait till you are better or older, for it is Satan who tells you this, and if you listen to him, you will never come to Jesus at all, but must perish where love and hope can never enter.

The young man did not like to get into the fire escape just as he was, so he waited to make himself look better. If you wait till you are better before you come to Jesus, you will be lost, so come just as you are, with your sinful heart and all your naughty ways, and trust God's word, which says: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanses us from all sin," and you will be happy forever.—Sel.

Queen Victoria's Girlhood.

The Princess Victoria was born within the homely brick walls of Kensington Palace, on the 24th of May, 1819. When she was only a few months old, her father died, closely followed by his father, poor old King George. Before this, it is recorded that "the regent was not kind to his brother," and when the Duke of Kent died it was found that "the poor Duke had left his family deprived of all means of existence." Thus the position of the mother of the future sovereign, a young German princess, so soon left alone in this strange and not always very genial country, was far from consoling. Her brother, Prince Leopold, hastened to her in her distress, and stood by her in all her future difficulties. Few women have had a severer piece of work to undertake. But for that wise and kind brother the Duchess of Kent, though the mother of the future Queen, was all but unfriended in a home with which she had as yet but little time to get acquainted. She was a foreigner, accustomed to different ways of living, and had not even the easy elasticity of youth which accustoms itself to anything, for she was already over thirty when she married the Duke; and while occupying so great a position she was comparatively poor. Had she withdrawn with her child to her own country, to bring the little princess up among her own people, cheaply and kindly, far away from the criticisms and extravagances, the late hours and bustle, of English life, who could have wondered? But the Duchess had the temperate Coburg blood in her veins, and shared the sound sense and judgment of her race. She never forgot that her eight-months-old baby was the first princess of the blood, English above all things, and imperatively requiring an English education. And she began her long career of self-denial by steadily remaining in England, far from her friends and everything that was most dear to her.

The little family, bereaved, returned to the old palace at Kensington, where the child had been born, and there the early days of the Princess were chiefly spent. More happy than most children in her position, the little heiress of England had the society of an elder sister, whose superior age must, in those innocent days, have neutralized the immense difference of position, and given something of the sweet natural humility of a younger child in a well regulated household to this most important member of the family, all unconscious of her own greatness. This sister, Princess Feodora, afterward Princess Hohenlohe, was the tenderest of friends and companions to the Queen during her whole life. They were brought up together in quiet old Kensington, in the sweeter solitude of Claremont, the house where Prince Leopold had spent his short married life, which belonged to him, and in which he often received his widowed sister and her little girl. They were there in the summer of 1824, and so bright must that summer have been that its brightness still lasts in recollection, though the little Princess was but five years old. "Those days of Claremont," the Queen herself tells us, "were the happiest days of her childhood." The most careful education was given to the young Princess. Over this training Prince Leopold watched with all the interest of a statesman, and all the tenderness of a father. Already, too, other visions of the future were dawning before the far-seeing eyes of the man who, with the sincerest desire for the welfare of England, and a longing, no doubt made all the stronger by the melancholy failure of his personal hopes, to give to the country which had received him a kindly and noble sovereign, had at the same time a natural wish to advance his own family, worthy by constitution and character, as it had already proved itself. Another child, standing to him in exactly the same relationship as the little Victoria, had been born just after her in the little court at Saxe-Coburg, in the cheerful country house of Rosenau. While the children were still in their cradles this idea seems to have communicated itself to all about them. The families were in constant communication, the young mothers exchanging those pleasant experiences and bits of nursery news, as mothers will do as long as the species last. All the doings and growings of "the little Mayflower," as the Princess was called by the kind German kinsfolk, were recorded with fond simplicity for the pleasure of the old grandmother at home. The good German nurse, who passed from one house to another as her services were wanted "could not sufficiently describe what a dear little love" the baby at Kensington was, and the baby at Rosenau had the enthusiastic pen of his mother to do him full justice. Albert was of extraordinary beauty, this impartial historian declared; "he had great blue eyes, dimples on each cheek, three teeth, and at eight months old was already beginning to walk." Great news!—enough to make the other nursery thrilled with emulation as these notes were compared.—Harper's Magazine.

Pere Hyacinth's Wife.

The sketch, republished from the Columbus Herald, of Pere Hyacinthe's wife reminds us of an incident related some years since by Parker Pillsbury, shortly after his return from Paris, which has never yet appeared in print.

Mrs. Merriman was acting in the capacity of Paris corrrespondent for one of the New York papers, at the time Mr. Pillsbury made her acquaintance. In this capacity she began to attend the services at Notre Dame, and in time made the acquaintance of the talented young reformer. The influence very soon acquired by the lady is happily illustrated by Mr. Pillsbury's anecdote.

One evening, he said, a party of friends, among whom he himself was one, were to accompany Mrs. Merriman to Notre Dame, Mr. Pillsbury having some curiosity to hear the man who was moving all Paris with his eloquence. They went early, but for all that the vast building was thronged with people, and the ushers refused to allow another person to enter the building.

It was then that Mrs. Merriman indicated the strength of her resources. Motioning her friends to follow, she made her way to the rear of the building, where the priests enter, and was about to pass in when the attendant there also refused her admission, saying that the service had already begun.

"I shall never forget how her dark eyes flashed in the moonlight," said Mr. Pillsbury, "as she tore off a scrap of paper from the roll she held in her hand, and wrote a hurried note to the priest." This the man bore to Pere Hyacinthe, returning in a moment with instructions to admit the party to the Cathedral. There near the altar, fairly within the sacred enclosure, almost touching the skirts of the priest's garments, sat the beautiful woman with whom the great reformer's destiny was to be so inseparably linked, and with her Parker Pillsbury, one of America's foremost protesters against all influences of church and priest.

"The circumstances, the surroundings, the beauty and brilliancy of the woman and the impassioned eloquence of the man, combined," said Mr. Pillsbury, "to make the occasion one of the most memorable in my whole life."—National Union.

Toughened Glass as Sleepers for Railways.

From a statement made at the last meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute, we learn that toughened glass can be used instead of iron as sleepers for railways. The molten glass is cast in moulds into the several forms required; is afterwards heated to a high temperature, and plunged into a bath of cool oil, "the result being that the glass becomes converted from its own characteristic brittleness to the remarkable tough fibrous material known as toughened or tempered glass." A similar effect, as was stated, can be produced by passing the moulded glass through an annealing oven. The strength and resisting power of the glass thus prepared may be judged of from the fact, that a weight (nine hundredweight) let fall from a height of seventeen feet upon a plate a little more than an inch thick, failed to break it. And where glass sleepers have been laid by way of experiment, they stand wear and tear as well as iron, perhaps better, for they do not corrode. They are made in three-feet lengths, so shaped on the upper surface that the rail when placed thereon shall exactly fit. If glass can be turned to account in this way, why not as tools, implements, and other mechanical appliances? Its immunity from rust gives it an eminent claim to consideration.—Chamber's Journal.

Ague Cure
Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.
It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics" in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.
For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.
We warrant it when taken according to directions.

THE PROFESSIONAL CLASSES.

One of the most charming, prudent, level-headed and clear-brained writers of modern times is Sir Arthur Helps. Perhaps these many good qualities led to the honor conferred upon him of being chosen to edit Queen Victoria's Life of her deceased husband. Like all thoughtful men, his speculations are mostly given to the subject of ameliorating the sufferings of the human race. One thing which harrows his righteous soul from day to day is the quantity of misplaced and unnecessary labor done in the world. "Labor," he says, which does not go into stern contest with the rugged world around us, nor in the endeavor to compel nature to give us our birth-right; but in fighting with "strong delusions" of all kinds; or rather of putting up obstacles which we laboriously knock down again. Law, for example—what a loss is there—of time, of heart, of love, of leisure! There are good men whose minds are set upon improving the law; but I doubt whether any of them are prepared to go far enough. * * * * * There are many things done now, in the law, at great expense, by private individuals, which ought to be done for all by officers of State. "It is as if each individual had to make a road for himself whenever he went out, instead of using the King's highway."

In a review of Sir Arthur's Works in Blackwood's Magazine, the reviewer says: "To throw the expenses of justice on the hopeless suitor is by no means equitable. As far as possible, the whole community ought to take upon itself the burden and the costs of administering justice." The reviewer after setting forth the evils of our present system advocates the daring change of "having a bar appointed and paid by government. In these days of a free press, and a representative Parliament (or Congress) no political mischief could ensue from such a measure. The saving of the fee paid to the counsel, is the least part of the benefit expected from this change. It would ultimately lead to the framing of a simple, intelligible code, both of substantial law and of procedure, and thus, indirectly, sweep away the causes of delay, and of expenditure. The bar, under this system, would consist of a body of men who had thoroughly studied the law, and from whom the judges would be selected, who would act as assistants to justice and not as engaged partizans of the client. Some system of advocacy is required, because the suitor can very rarely state their own case, and the law bearing on it with distinctness—nor marshall the evidence they have to bring into court. But this is the utmost duty of an advocate, if the administration of justice is the true end to be sought for. Zeal for the client which carries him farther than this, is zeal for injustice. The existing system of advocacy presents to us the very immoral practice of a lawyer not only stating the truth and evidence on one side (which is all that justice requires or admits) but exercising his utmost ingenuity to disguise the truth, to distort the law, and to shut out the evidence upon the opposite side. All this leads to a perpetual entanglement of the law itself; whereas the bar ought, in reality, to present to us a cultivated and laborious class of men, who had made jurisprudence their great study, and who were there to expound the law to such as needed advice, to conduct the cases of such as had causes to try, to be the great depositories of the learning and science of jurisprudence, and have it for their object and ambition to advance the jurisprudence of their country. The publicity with which their functions would be performed, the intellectual nature of those functions, and the fact that the judges would be chosen from their body, would be sufficient security that they would not grow sluggish and neglectful in the discharge of their duties."

As for displays of oratory—if oratory be regarded as an appeal to passion—it is boldly asserted that "a court of justice is not a fit arena for it. Such eloquence may be carried into Parliament, and into public meetings of a hundred descriptions; and there is the pulpit and the lecture room for the display of oratory of a reflective cast. But there is an eloquence which consists in lucid, succinct statements of law and facts; this, which has been often described as the eloquence of the bench, in contradistinction to that of the bar, is the only species which it is at all desirable to cultivate in a court of justice."

Wherever an evil exists, I firmly believe that a remedy may be found for it in the Bible. And so nearly allied is the truest human wisdom to divine wisdom that we often find earnestly truthful students, like Sir Arthur Helps and others, stumbling upon the very remedies given by God four thousand years ago. The Levites were the lawyers of the Hebrews, as well as teachers, preachers and physicians. They included in short all the professional classes, and their courts of justice were probably just such as we have described. Rev. E. C. Wines, D. D., LL. D., in his commentaries on the laws of the Hebrews, thus speaks of the Levites, the class upon whom devolves the duty of teaching the laws. "Besides performing the ceremonies of public worship, the burden of the government was in a great measure laid upon its shoulders. It was destined to preserve in its integrity, and to interprot in the seat of justice, the text of the fundamental laws; to teach these laws to all Israel; to inspire the people with a love for them: to oppose all its own authority and influence against any and every attempt to overthrow them; and to bind firmly together all parts of the body politic."

"The Levites were also the literati of all the faculties. They formed a sort of literary aristocracy, whose influence was intended to counteract the hasty measures likely to result from the strongly democratic character of the government. They acted as physicians, as teachers, as writers of contracts and other law papers, as chroniclers and historians, as astronomers and mathematicians employed in the service of the State."

We could not copy the political economy of the Hebrews in making the professional class hereditary, but in all else their system is just what we and every other civilized people need. The people were commanded to pay a tenth of their incomes into the public treasury and this tenth was to be devoted to the support of the professional class, who bore a certain numerical proportion to the entire population. This professional class comprised the preachers, teachers, lawyers and physicians. In the courts of justice the decision always lay both in civil and criminal cases with the jury, who were not Levites, but the lawyers "did the talking" as with us. The entire nation was divided into bodies of ten, fifty, hundred and thousand, with a ruler or more properly, a representative at the head of each division. The smallest division was called a "tithing," the next, a "hundred," and so on up. The court of the tithing consisted of ten private citizens and their foreman. They managed the affairs of their neighborhood. The court of the hundred consisted of the ruler of hundred, two rulers of fifty, and ten rulers of ten, a court of twelve men; or rather a jury and their foreman, before whom the cases were tried, and who decided each case. The Levites, explaining the law, and stating the case.

The body politic as divinely constructed bears a wonderful resemblance to the human body. The heart is the Senate and House of Commons. The arteries, radiating out into minute ramifications, are the gradnated courts down to the smallest, the court of the tithing. As long as the tithing makes no appeal to the next higher court, it is its own sovereign—nobody has a right to interfere in its affairs, unless its neighboring tithings are imposed upon, and then the court of hundred takes jurisdiction. The Levites, including their priesthood, are to this what the nerve system is to the human body, informing the nerve centre, the brain, of what goes on at the farthest extremities. A healthy human body, like a healthy body politic keeps the extremities, (the neighborhood municipalities), active in circulation. A violent democratic fever drives all the blood to the surface and makes anarchy; a congestion of the heart or lungs prevents the blood being propelled at all through the arteries, and thus more danger is incurred, for life (like civil liberty) ceases to exist.

The Jethronian judges (as Wines calls the rulers of tens, fifties, hundreds and thousands) received no pay—neither did the legislative bodies, Senate and House of Commons. The teachers, (including editors), preachers, lawyers and physicians were all officers of the government, and were the only men who were entitled to live at the expense of the community.

One of the oldest, ablest and most experienced American lawyers says that the immensely numerous and expensive body of office holders, both in Great Britain and the United States, are worse than useless. He lays it down as a principle that those who make a trade of politics, must necessarily have conflicting interests with those of the people. By the Hebrew system, the duty of self-government was taught to every individual man, and every man bore his share in the government of the whole. The national revenues were devoted principally to the education of the people, and I suppose no people were ever so well educated as the Jews. Education has continued to be a habit with them ever since, although they have been scattered all over the world. The old lawyer referred to, thinks all public improvements should be left to private enterprise. All banking, railroading, charities, even mail carrying, would be better managed, if taken out of the hands of the government, and placed under the direction of private parties. H. M, J.

REV. JOSEPH COOK ON "IS JUSTICE A PERIL TO CAPITALISTS."

The old theory of wages, viz., the wage fund theory, which maintains that the amount of capital waiting to be paid for labour is a fixed quantity, is, so to speak, a dividend, that the number of labourers seeking employment is a divisor, and that the quotient (which is the rate of wages paid) cannot be materially changed without changing the size of the divisor,—that profits and wages, since they come out of the same fund, must vary inversely, and that the only way to increase wages is to reduce profits, a theory advanced and defended by many leading writers on political economy, including Mill, Fawcett, Ricardo, and in America by Prof. Perry, was attacked by Mr. Cook in his lecture recently. He rejoiced that such men as Profs. Walker, Cairns and Price have rejected and ably combatted this theory, which, if true, would justify Carlyle's designation of political economy as the "dismal science."

That in individual cases employers pay higher wages than they can afford, in order to keep up the quality of their labour, there is strong evidence, and Mr. Cook willingly admitted that large numbers of employers are carrying on their business at starvation rates of profit. Their side of the case should be heard and considered with candour. He then explained by a number of definitions, what he means by natural profits. The definitions are, summed up, somewhat as follows:

Natural profits consist of three parts,—interest on capital, insurance against risk, and remuneration for superintendence. To determine how large each of the fractions of profit ought to be, need not be difficult. The first is the same as the current rate of interest on money. The just compensation for risk might be computed approximately by consulting the authorities in the science of insurance. Proper remuneration for superintendence must be determined by the cost of hiring a superintendent, when for reason the employer chooses not to be his own superintendent. The rate of profit in any business depends on the excess of earnings over expenses, and this excess is governed by the rate of interest charged by banks for borrowed capital, the rate of insurance against risk, the cost of machinery, the state of the market, the rate of wages, and the multitude of other circumstances, chief among which is the efficiency of labour. The rate of profit, therefore, depends on a variety of circumstances of which the rate of wages is only one. Ricardo's doctrine, that it depends on the rate of wages alone, is, therefore, untrue, because it is an inexhaustive statement of the case. On the contrary it is true that when the efficiency of labour is increased by the improvement of machinery, or any other cause, profits may be increased, although wages remain the same. It may happen that from the same causes both the rate of wages and the rate of profit may be increased at the same time. At a given factory ten men can make one hundred yards of cloth in ten hours. Some fortunate inventor makes a machine so complete that the same men in the same time can make one thousand yards. The new machine costs no more than the old one, and the men who run it work for ordinary wages. Profits run up nearly ten fold. Wages and profit might both be largely increased at the same time, and this case is typical of all steady employment.

Here is a merchant on India wharf in Boston, who sends his goods to India and brings back cargoes from there. He may have a fair voyage or he may have a storm, just as the agriculturist may have a wet season or a dry. Now what have the wet seasons or the dry, what have the storms or the calms to do with the rate of wages? Undoubtedly wages are one element in the expenses of every business, but they are not the only element. They are only one finger on the palm. It may be they are the forefinger, but these other expenses—accident, rate of interest for the capital you must borrow, access to the market, efficiency of labor, insurance against risk, a score of circumstances—are the other fingers on the palm. And, after all, your own personal superintendence, your wise combination of details, is the thumb on that palm. Wages, even if they are the forefinger, are evidently not as important a part of the problem as these other circumstances taken together. It is utterly false to go upon the supposition that the hand of industry is only a hook, and that wages are its only finger. Let us open our minds to the whole problem. Let us take into view, as labouring men find it difficult to do at times, all the expenses of the employer; and let the employer take into view all his sources of profit, and it will be seen that there has rarely been taught authoritatively a more mischevious falsehood in political economy than the assertion that wages and capital are of necessity an eternal seesaw, putting the labourer and the employer into a state of constant war.

In the steady trades, it is historically true that wages and profits in the last half century have usually risen together. Bread is cheaper now in England than it was fifty years ago; sugar and tea are cheaper; average prices for clothing are lower; but in most of the steady trades the wages of the labourers have risen in the last fifty years in Great Britain, and not merely their nominal wages, but their real wages, or the purchasing power of their days of labour. At the same time who does not see the prosperity of the manufacturing class in Great Britain, if you take it on the average? Great Britain is wealthy because she is a factory, and prosperous as such. Everybody will grant me the proposition, that taken on the average the manufacturing business of Great Britain is prosperous, and that its profits have risen although the wages of operatives have risen.

It is evident both from history and from correct economical principles, that justice is no peril to capitalists, nor fair wages a diminution of fair profits.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"MUST I JOIN THE CHURCH?"

This was, no doubt, an honest question in the inquirer, but it revealed an enormous weakness. It was a young person who asked the question as he was looking out from a world-life into the new life of a Christian. He had been loitering near the door a long time. He was often greatly moved towards entering. He had long ago learned what Christ taught as to the terms of discipleship. The cross, the yoke, the confession, were familiar terms—even threadbare in public teaching, and yet ever requiring repetition. But this youth had marked out a by-way for himself. It was smooth, well shaded from the sun of trial, and pretty free from the hills of difficulty. His religion he thought to put away secretly in his heart. His charities should be known only to God. His confessions of Christ were to be so indirect and inferential that common people could hardly suspect the real secret of his life.

In some such state of mind as this our young friend saw his companions leaving him to join the church. They were coming to the front of christian living, and were going to find out what cross, if any, might lie in the path of open and honest discipleship. The flaw in his experience was revealed in the question at the head of this article. He had been smothering a christian life, feeble enough at best, under the non-committalism of a secret religion.

Of course, there can be but one answer to the state of mind disclosed in this question. God may, indeed, make exceptions to the privileges of a christian life. He may lay upon us what disabilities he will. But aside from such barriers, nothing is more sure than that real love to Christ is an outpushing, and not a secretive principle. God only knows in what shades it is possible for the plant of faith to live. He only can tell how sickly a christian life may be, and yet be a christian life. He only can tell us how little of courage and heartiness one may use, and yet creep into heaven. But the whole Bible is witness to the fact that Christ's type of religion is one which holds sincerity and purpose and pluck. The feeblest flower seed has to push hard against the overlying clay. And if the world is to enjoy the odor of its blossom there must be quite a battle with scorching sun and sweeping storm.

The real religion of Jesus Christ goes beyond this question, ordinarily with a single bound. It is very sure that all the workings and successes of christianity are achieved by another and a higher principle.

The remedy for such a questioner lies not in answering his query so much as in finding, deep down in his soul, a spring—a nervous, spiritual principle—which pushes itself up and comes to the surface as unconsciously as the seed germ. The religion of Jesus Christ does not wait for a "must," because it is buried in asking, What may I do for Him who died for me?—The Presbyterian.

THE SUN IS SHINING CLEAR.

Above the valleys, ere the shades
Of darkness disappear,
A glow the mountain peaks pervades,
That signal to the everglades,
The sun is shining clear.

Above the mists that thickly crowd,
And make the landscape drear,
Above the vapors that enshroud,
Above the threatening thunder-cloud,
The sun is shining clear.

Above each darkened earthly scene,
That gathers round us here;
Above the doubts that intervene,
In lustre changeless and serene
The sun is shining clear.

Above the shadows of the tomb,
The crape, the pall, the bier;
Above the sorrows and the gloom
That death's habiliments assume,
The sun is shining clear.

Above the din and rude alarms,
That oft grate on the ear,
This sweet assurance dread disarms,
And down each rising murmur charms,
The sun is shining clear.

However dark thy path may prove,
Or hard thy lot appear,
Though faith the mountains cannot move,
There yet is always light above—
The sun is shining clear.

O! let not then dismay oppress,
Nor yield thy heart to fear,
But trusting when in sore distress,
Remember still that none the less,
The sun is shining clear.

—Rev. Oliver Crane, M. D., in Congregationalist.

POOR PREACHING.

It would be hazardous to deny that there is some such preaching. And we will not hold a shield over the head of that man whose feeble faith, sloth or worldliness makes his preaching poor. But there are some causes of poor preaching not found in the preacher.

1. A poor place of worship is apt to make poor preaching. You cannot look round in some of the churches without suffering a chill morally, and a chill physically, if you enter them between November and April. Broken panes of glass or bad ventilation admit the wind, and the conflict that ensues between that and the generators of caloric, if there are any, is like that of him that cometh against ten thousand with an army of twenty thousand. Some of these places of worship are enormously large in proportion to the congregation. The preacher must encounter a frightful number of empty pews in search of a hearer. Then there are large tracts of uninhabited territory in the galleries. Cheerless wastes they are to a preacher. The exterior of the house never had an acquaintance with the paint brush, and looks dark and gloomy, as if frowning at such neglect. What wonder if you have poor preaching in such a sanctuary? This is but putting like and like together. The unhappy preacher studies his sermon with all the undesirableness of his forlorn place of worship stalking like gloomy ghosts before him. What wonder if their footprints are seen all over the sermon?

2. Poor hearers make poor preaching. Some come lingering and late, as if it were a drudgery to come at all. Numbers stop about the church door to chat about everything in the creation but religion, till the preacher's voice, commencing service, wakes them up to the fact that they are at the house of prayer. Some seek the most comfortable place in pews studiously accommodated for repose, and in the very face and eyes of the preacher take their leave of him in the total unconsciousness of deep sleep. Some not disposed of as the last named, examine with curious eyes every visible object but the speaker, and show vast interest in every passing wheel, and the costume of every new comer. Now is there not some tendency in such things to make poor preaching; and would not a prompt and thorough-going reform, that should reach every one in the congregation, have some influence in giving a new inspiration to the preacher?

3. Poorly paid preaching is likely to be poor preaching. It shrivels a man up terribly to be straitened about his temporal support. If he must move in the hampers of all sorts of shifts and expedients to make the ends of the year meet he cannot sail free and joyously on the great sea of truth. He can only play the puny part of creeping along shore. With this kind of care upon his shoulders he cannot rise up to the stature and vigor of a giant. He is crippled and becomes a dwarf. His poor pay makes him feel poor. And it is in poverty of spirit that he undertakes a sermon. His thoughts will have a hue of poverty about them, and then he feels poorly prepared for the pulpit, and what can the result be but poor preaching? Take the lead from his wings, the care from his heart, by promptly paying and meeting all his wants. Give him the chance thus to spread his pinions, and see if his joyful and animated enterprise in his work does not stop the cry about poor preaching.

4. The spiritual poverty of the church is a fruitful source of poor preaching. Mind acts on mind. The glowing and animated minds of the saints are so many agents of powerful excitement to the preacher. Their prayerfulness, zeal, unity and fidelity lift his soul upward as on a rising and powerful tide. Their devotedness to God cheers his mind, and rouses thoughts that breathe, and puts upon his lips words that burn. He must preach good sermons, for the goodness of the saints, enkindling his own, sets his soul on fire, and the sacred flame will be seen as he delivers the messages of the Lord.

The opposite course will be likely to secure an opposite result. A slothful, worldly, stupid church breaks down the spirit of a pastor. It fetters his ardent mind. It chills and cramps his enterprising spirit. A grand inspiration of preaching is gone. Great responsibility rests on those unfaithful saints. Such fallen disciples, moreover, are often the first to raise the cry of poor preaching. The preaching may be spiritual, and searching, and sanctifying, but their moral sensibilities have been benumbed by their worldliness. They are too insensible to Divine things to discern the value of the ministrations they enjoy. They grope, and stumble, and cry "darkness," though it is mid-day. The poverty is all in their own souls, and had they the spiritual and heavenly mind, the true meekness and docility of the Gospel, their despised pastor's doctrine would "drop as the rain, and distil like the dew."—London Weekly Review.

TO ACQUIRE STRENGTH.

If you feel that the life that you are living is an unmanly life; if you perceive that in the end it must terminate in your destruction; if you are conscious that you are perverting your powers of body and mind, and that you are educating yourself for final ruin; if you know that you are not fulfilling the destiny which you had before you in the inspiration of your youth; if, having departed from what God demands of you, and not being able to retrace your steps, you feel the need of divine help in order that you may rescue yourself from the perils to which you are exposed, no mere dreaming or wishing or praying will suffice to bring deliverance; you must take a manly view of your duty, and, at whatever cost, must perform it.

If you do not know how to do this, go to some moral guide and ask for advice, for—that which often times will be a great deal better than mere counsel—sympathy. Members of the same household may be of great service to each other in this matter. The things that husband and wife are loth to talk about to each other are things which are vital to their moral character. Many a man will go and talk to a stranger about his resolutions for reformation when he will not talk about them to his wife. And yet a good counsellor is a wise and prudent wife, as is also a faithful and affectionate husband. But if you have not such a companion near you, who has a right to be a buttress to your feeble will or resolution, there are those in the community in whom you can confide, and to whom, if you mean business, you had better go. If your resolutions are mere dreams or wishes which are to pass away like a morning cloud and the early dew, there is nothing to be said; but if you want to be a good man, and leave off evil, and live a better life, and continue in the true way to the end, then begin by getting somebody to help you who knows the right as you do not know it. Then your weakness will be fortified, and your purpose will prevail.

When you have formed your purpose, and taken the first step by asking for help, see to it that you do not leave out the great Helper. See to it that when you have persuaded God you do not refuse to be persuaded by Him. Your very moral sensibility must come from God's working in you to will and to do of his good pleasure. See to it that when the sunlight of heaven shines on you it shall not shine on a slated roof, upon hard walls, or into an empty space. Let it enter in to influence your soul. Always bear in mind that God sees you. Man may be absent. God never is. The best friend slumbers at times. The Watchman of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. Human love becomes wearied. Divine love never does. You, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children; and yet your very goodness is limited. God's is illimitable and inexhaustible. It is boundless as eternity. It is infinite. There is in creation no other such friend to you as your Maker and as your Redeemer; and if you purpose to go up in life, and to be more manly, more true, more earnest and more spiritual; if you have undertaken so great a thing as the revolutionizing of your character, then when you have taken counsel with your earthly friends see that you take counsel with that Friend who is above all other friends, and that you make it a matter as solemn as everything should be and must be which a man does before the face of Him with whom he has to do. —Christian Union.

SELF-HELP.

Fight your own battles, hoe your own row, ask no favors of any one, and you will succeed a thousand times better than those who are always beseeching some one's patronage. No one can ever help you as you can help yourself, because no one will be so heartily in your affairs. The first step will not be such a long one perhaps; but carving your own way up the mountain, you make each one lead to another. Men who have their fortunes are not those who had five thousand dollars given them to start with, but started fair with a well-earned dollar or two. Men who have by their own exertions acquired fame have not been thrust into popularity by puffs begged or paid for, or given in friendly spirit. They have outstretched their hands and touched the public heart. Men who win love do their own wooing, and I never knew a man to fail so signally as one who had induced his affectionate grandmother to speak a good word for him. Whether you work for fame, for love, for money, or for anything else, work with your hands, heart and brain. Say "I will" and some day you will conquer. Too many friends hurt a man more than none at all.

SIGNIFICANCE OF A LIFE.

At a recent meeting Dr. Z. Eddy said: I begin to see the significance of the life of Livingstone. It begins to unfold now. It is only two or three days ago, that I read what I supposed to be the key to his whole saintly and heroic life, written thirteen months before he died. "My own Jesus, my King, my Life, my All, I have given my whole self to Thee. Accept me, O Gracious Father, and grant that ere this year has gone I may finish my task. In Jesus' name I ask it, Amen." So let it be. There is the key to the life and labors of David Livingstone. It is wonderful to me. Think of the fortitude of that brave and glorious old man; his uncomplaining fortitude. It is something that consecrates all Africa, in the way he was found dead upon his knees.

FREEDOM OF DISCUSSION.

The freedom of the press, one of our inalienable and inestimable rights, one of our ablest safeguards of liberty, and a most effective agent of progress, is subject to substantially the same limitations which govern private intercourse. The press is public, but it is not therefore a vehicle by which every thought of an individual may be carried to the public. It may not be used to vent personal animosity or gratify malice. It may not be used to diffuse immoral sentiments or base passions. It is a conservator of the public welfare, as well as a disseminator or knowledge, and its aim should therefore always be to diffuse wholesome information, to give to the public mind the impulse of pure thought, and also to sustain whatever is true and good.

Every paper has its own peculiar sphere, and is therefore subject to the limitation of its surroundings. It is usually private property, but it has a cause and constituency whose interests it represents. It is therefore in trust for these, and is under moral obligation to conserve and promote these. It thus has a personality of its own, apart from that of its writers and publishers. They do not stand before the public as individuals, but the paper speaks, and is held to a responsibility for its principles and its course.

A religious paper may represent certain general principles, or it may be specially devoted to the principles and work of a particular Church. In the former case, very great liberty of discussion may be allowed, without unfaithfulness to its immediate constituency, so long as it honestly supports the fundamental principles of religion and of good morals.

In the latter case it is more difficult to define the extent to which the freedom of discussion may be carried. Plainly enough there should not be utterance given to anything that would undermine the great principles of the Church it represents, or tend to weaken the love of any of its members. But as plainly its policy and measures, its institutions and agencies, are open to candid and kindly discussion. Minorities, while not factious, may speak, and when a change of sentiment takes place, so that many doubt the propriety of a regulation adopted at a former period as a permanent order in the Church, they should be heard, and the whole subject should be studied in the present light and in a christian spirit.

The proper time for full discussion of questions of this kind is when they are formally opened by what is technically known as an "overture." But manifestly there must be some preliminary discussion to help form the decision as to the expediency of an overture. How far such discussions may be carried cannot be defined by any fixed rule. Honest conviction must be respected, and christian courtesy must be exercised, and with these some discretion allowed, subject, of course, to the correction of the public sentiment of the Church, and, if need be, of its discipline. —United Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Prince of Wales used at the laying of the corner stone of the new cathedral, Truro, the other day, the mallet with which Charles II. laid the foundation stone of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The prayer meetings of Pashkoff, who was converted during Lord Radstock's evangelistic visit to Russia, and who has since been preaching the Gospel in St. Petersburg, have been forbidden by the new Procureur of the Holy Synod.

Recently the members of the Society of Jesus, having bought land in an oasis north of the Sahara in the town of Sahara, foundations were laid for a college in that district, which is likely to prove necessary for the education of youths from Central Africa.

The deed of sale of the Imperial hotel and grounds at Jersey has been duly passed before the Royal Court, the property being transferred to the new owners for the purpose of turning it into a Jesuit seminary for boys. The purchase has been made for £8,000 cash, with ground-rent of about £150 per year.

A postal of June 22d, from French Camps, Miss., gives the sad intelligence that on the night previous the residence of Rev. A. H. Mecklin was consumed by fire. Scarcely anything was saved.

The French Jesuits have offered $800,000 for the buildings and land in Cairo, Egypt, reserved by Ismail Pasha for a military academy, and have also been bargaining for the palace occupied by the late Mustaphe Pasha at Alexandria.

The London Church Missionary Society has under its control in India twelve institutions for training pastors and teachers, seventy for higher general education, and about one thousand primary schools for girls and boys. It costs not less than $50,000 a year to support these schools, and India raises as much more for this purpose.

Here are two missionary items. 1. The Karens of Burmah raised last year for mission work upwards of $31,000, and expect to raise more than $25,000 the current year. 2. Native Christians on the islands of New Hebrides recently shipped to London some 3,700 pounds of arrow root to pay for an edition of the Old Testament now being printed for them in their native tongue.

There are already signs that the famine in Eastern Turkey will be followed by spiritual results like those in China and India. Mr. Browne, of Harpoot, reports that one of the youngest pastors in Koordistan, in a place from which a few years since the missionaries were driven by a mob of women, speaks of crowded prayer meetings, and of Sabbath congregations of from seven to eight hundred, the number on one occasion rising to one thousand.

One of the results of the days that have been specially set apart during each of the past few years by the authorities of the Church of England for services on behalf of the missionary cause was observable on Friday last (St. Barnabas Day), when twenty-two candidates for missionary work were presented to the Bishop of London, in St. Paul's Cathedral, for ordination. Twenty of the candidates had been educated and trained by the Church Missionary Society in their college at Islington. One of them, a native African, had been brought over by the society from Lagos, and he had proved himself apt and intelligent in his studies.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland met in Belfast on the 8th of June. The attendance was large. The Rev. Dr. Smyth, of Armagh, was chosen Moderator by acclamation. After the new Moderator had delivered his opening address various matters of detail were disposed of and the Assembly adjourned. The deputation from the Free Church of Scotland was heard on the Tuesday evening, and the Report on the State of Religion received and discussed. From the latter it would appear that while there has been nothing of a very remarkable character to record the state of matters has been upon the whole encouraging. The report on temperance was very encouraging, showing a marked diminution in the consumption of intoxicating liquors and a marked growth of opinion in favor of prohibition by Local Option. The state of the funds was encouraging though a slight diminution in income had to be noted. The next meeting of Assembly is to be in Dublin.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14, 1880.

JESUITISM.

In obedience to the edict of the French Chambers that the Jesuits must go, these chronic disturbers of the peace of governments have been expelled from France. In some quarters a disposition to resist was manifested, but in general the law was executed without opposition. They are expelled for political reasons merely. What may be the effects to accompany or result as to the Roman Church, time alone can tell. In the days of the Second Empire they enjoyed a high degree of power and influence, but since, they have been justly regarded as the worst enemies of the State.

The history of Jesuitism illustrates the power which flows from a singleness of purpose that commands thorough consecration of every faculty of the mind and every affection of the soul. Its influence is represented alike by the victories and defeats, the heights of popularity and the depths of public hate, which are among the vicissitudes of the past three centuries. Its principles have been so manifested as to make Jesuitism express all that is heartily cunning and coldly, calculatingly selfish.

Macaulay, while according to the Jesuits courage, and other characteristics which challenge admiration, writes this of them:

"But with the admirable energy, disinterestedness and self-devotion which were characteristic of the society, great vices were mingled. It was alleged, and not without foundation, that the ardent public spirit which made the Jesuit regardless of his ease, of his liberty and of his life, made him also regardless of truth and mercy; that no means which could promote the interest of his religion seemed to him unlawful, and that by the interest of his religion he too often meant the interest of his society. It was alleged that, in the most atrocious plots recorded in history his agency could be distinctly traced; that constant only in attachment to the fraternity to which he belonged, he was in some countries the most dangerous enemy of freedom, and in others the most dangerous enemy of order. The mighty victories which he boasted that he had achieved in the cause of the Church were, in the judgment of many illustrious members of that Church, rather apparent than real. He had, indeed, labored with a wonderful show of success to redress the world under her laws, but he had done so by relaxing her laws to suit the temper of the world. Instead of toiling to elevate human nature to the noble standard fixed by divine precept and example, he had lowered the standard till it was beneath the average level of human nature. He gloried in multitudes of converts who had been baptized in the remote regions of the East; but it was reported that from some of these converts the facts on which the whole theology of the Gospel depends had been cunningly concealed, and that others were permitted to avoid persecution by bowing down before the image of false gods, while internally repeating Paters and Aves. Nor was it only in heathen countries that such acts were said to be practiced. It was not strange that people of all ranks, and especially of the highest ranks, crowded to the confessionals in the Jesuit temples, for from those confessionals none went discontented away. There the priest was all things to all men. He showed just so much rigor as might not drive those who knelt at his spiritual tribunal to the Dominican or the Franciscan Church. If he had to deal with a mind truly devout, he spoke in the saintly tone of the primitive fathers; but with that very large part of mankind who have religion enough to make them uneasy when they do wrong, and not religion enough to keep them from doing wrong, he followed a very different system. Since he could not reclaim them from guilt, it was his business to save them from remorse. He had at his command an immense dispensary of anodynes for wounded consciences. In the books of casuistry which had been written by his brethren, and printed with the approbation of his superior, were to be found doctrines consolatory to transgressors of every class. There the bankrupt was taught how he might, without sin, secret his goods from his creditors. The servant was taught how he might, without sin, run off with his master's plate. The pander was assured that a Christian man might innocently earn his living by carrying letters between married women and their gallants. The high-spirited and punctilious gentlemen of France were gratified by a decision in favor of dueling. The Italians, accustomed to darker and baser modes of vengeance, were glad to learn that they might, without any crime, shoot at their enemies from behind hedges. To deceit was given a license sufficient to destroy the whole value of human contracts and of human testimony. In truth, if society continued to hold together, if life and property enjoyed any security, it was because common sense and common humanity restrained men from doing what the society of Jesus assured them that they might with a safe conscience do."

The history of Jesuitism has been a series of triumphs and reverses. No kingdom or state has escaped their malign influence and none has long endured them. Even the Popes alternately, in trying to use, have tolerated and, failing to use, have discarded them.

"It was some years after Loyola and his first companions and followers had resolved on their enterprise and after strenuous efforts, that they succeeded in getting a confirmation of their order from Paul III. The Jesuits were banished from Venice in 1606 and it was fifty years before the Pope could effect their restoration. In 1773 Pope Clement XVI. suppressed the order of the Society of Jesus in all the states of Christendom. This suppression was brought about by the demand of France, Spain, Naples and Parma; France, Spain and Portugal expelled them about the middle of the eighteenth century. Pius VII restored the order in 1814, and in the same year they were formally restored to Spain by Ferdinand VII. They were banished and restored repeatedly in alternation by Spanish administrations. But after the revolution in 1868 they were banished, probably forever, from Spain, and have had a tolerated existence merely in the Spanish colonies. Germany closed, as we suppose, its dealings with the order by the expulsion of 1873. The vicissitudes of Jesuitism as represented by the Society of Jesus were terminated in Italy in 1870, when Rome became the capitol and the suppression of all religious orders was decreed. In Portugal there have been no recognized organizations of Jesuitism since 1835. France, after the revolution of 1830, which brought Louis Phillippe to the throne, decreed the absolute and total expulsion of the Jesuits. Until now that law has not been enforced, nor would be now if the members would accept the terms offered them. In Great Britain Jesuitism has never received more than tolerance since the days of Elizabeth.

The establishment of Jesuitism in Florida was attempted as early as 1566, but the colonists were massacred by Indians in 1570, and the entire settlement was abandoned. Jesuitism flourished in California from 1683 until its suppression in the Spanish Provinces, 1767. A French mission was established in Canada in 1611 and thence, for half a century or more, missionaries were sent to all quarters, even as far as Arkansas. Louisiana, soon after its settlement, was visited by Jesuit missionaries who colonized on the Lower Mississippi, and in time extended their influence and efforts as far as Missouri. They accompanied Lord Baltimore to Maryland. The number of Jesuits in the United States is not now, probably, much over 1,000, but their influence is disproportionately great. They have establishments in several States. The independent Mission of New York embraces the State of New York and the Canadian Dominion, has three colleges with a novitiate, and maintains a mission among the Indians on Lake Superior. The New Orleans mission has three colleges and several flourishing houses. A mission for the German population in Western New York and Ohio is well sustained. Besides those named they have eleven colleges in this country.

On entering the order every member assumes the following obligation:

"I, A B, now, in the presence of Almighty God, the blessed Virgin Mary, the blessed Michael the Archangel, the blessed St. John the Baptist, the holy Apostles St Peter and St. Paul, and the saints and sacred host of heaven, and to you, my ghostly father, do declare, from my heart, without mental reservation, that Pope —— is Christ's Vicar General, and is the true and only head of the Universal Church throughout the earth; and that by virtue of the keys of binding and loosing, given to his Holiness by Jesus Christ, he hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths and governments, all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, and that they may safely be destroyed: therefore, to the best of my power I will defend this doctrine and his Holiness' rights and customs against all usurpers of the heretical or Protestant authority whatsoever, especially against the pretended authority and Church in England, and all adherents, in regard that they be usurped and heretical, opposing the sacred Mother Church of Rome. I do renounce and disown any allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince or state named Protestant, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers.

"I do further declare the doctrine of the Church of England, of the Calvinists, Huguenots and other Protestants to be damnable, and those to be damned who do not forsake the same. I do further declare that I will help, assist and advise all or any of his Holiness' agents in any place wherever I shall be; and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestants' doctrine, and and to destroy all their pretended power, legal or otherwise. I do further promise and declare, that notwithstanding I am dispensed with to assume any religion heretical for the propagation of the Mother Church's interest, to keep secret and private all her agents' counsel as they entrust me, and not to divulge, directly or indirectly, by word, writing, or any circumstance whatsoever, but to execute all which shall be proposed, given in charge, or discovered unto me by yon my ghostly father or by any one of this order. All which I answer by the blessed Trinity, and blessed sacrament to perform and on my part keep inviolably."

Under this oath it is not strange that Jesuitism has been a record of conspiracies with assassinations and all other villanies, nor that France and all other governments duly regardful of their own interests should expel all members of the Society of Jesus from their territory.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

An esteemed friend writes under date July 5th, that Miss Painter is now in Statesville and preaches in the Court House. He expresses surprise that the novelty and excitement which so tend to disorganize, derange and demoralize had no effect as to the drawing away of any of Dr. Wood's congregation from their accustomed place of worship.

We are not surprised, Presbyterians, this is our observation, do not leave their church, for such novelties; this from a sense of duty, and an additional reason in the case before us is that stated by the correspondent that "Dr. Wood is a good man and the people all love him."

Our friend thinks that the steadfastness of the congregation ought to encourage Dr. Wood. Undoubtedly it does. All such evidences of appreciation are gratifying to a pastor.

Tennyson is just now running the gauntlet of editorial criticism, and it is a pretty rough road. "De Profundis" has broken him down. The Pall Mall Gazette of London says that "it is a mere commonplace, put into the poorest and most unmelodious language, and that it lacks rhythm, rhyme, and everything goes to make up true poetry. The Herald and Presbyter adds: "Had Mr. Tennyson sent this production, unsigned, to any well-conducted paper or magazine, it would have found a place with the waste paper. Sent with his name it commanded, we suppose, a good price. This latest poem is not the only sign of Mr. Tennyson's failing powers. His pencil began to grow blunt years ago." The latest named paper is right as to the final resting place of "De Profundis" if it had been sent without Tennyson's name. A vast deal of poetry gets into print solely on the reputation of its author, just as a great many sermons and addresses are landed to the skies for no better reason. This is an age of shams.

The late disaster on Long Island Sound has naturally furnished a subject to those preachers who feel called upon to follow, though it be at an immense distance, such lights as Beecher and other sensationalists.

The pastor of a Methodist church in Jersey City on a recent Sabbath announced that on the next Sabbath his discourse would be on the steamboat collision on the sound. In the course of his sermon, so called, the preacher denounced the captain and crew of the Narraganesett as cowards. Whereupon the captain arose and said: "Any man is a liar who says that the crew of my boat were cowards."

The captain was hailed to the judge for disturbing the services, and the judge decided that as the Methodist Church allows the response of "amen"—which is approval—it cannot forbid an expression of disapproval. Moreover, which it strikes us is vastly nearer the proper point, the judge decided that the preacher's position did not justify him in the indulgence of gross personal abuse.

We think if both preacher and captain could have been punished it would have been well. The captain was not wise. He might have known that in the case of some preachers, the presence of those who are not exactly according to their taste—whether the difference in taste be the result of opinion or conduct—the presence of such objectionable persons in a church affects some very able and very pious preachers like the flaunting of a red flag in the face of an infuriated bull. Concentrated wrath is expended, verbally, upon the victim; wrath, however, which carries with it no damage and expresses a courage exceedingly cheap.

In the case before us we are not prepared to think that the minister was either very able or very pious; in any event it would have been as well not to have tapped the cloud to draw the electricity.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

The Raleigh Observer says that Rev. Dr. Atkinson is decidedly convalescent, though not sufficiently restored to preach on last Sabbath.

Rev. Alex. Sprunt, pastor of the Old Stone church in Augusta, Va., is, with his family, now on a visit to his relations, who are spending the summer on the seacoast near this city.

Rev. J. F. Latimer has arrived at Leipzig, Germany. His postoffice, formerly Post-restante, will be permanently Berliner-strasse, 115.II, Leipzig, Germany.

Two persons were received into the communion of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C., a few days since upon examination.

The First Presbyterian Church of Raleigh, N. C., received four persons to membership at a recent service—three by certificate and one by profession.

Lately, one person by profession and one by certificate, were received into the Presbyterian Church of Winston. Rev. F. H. Johnston is off at present on a short preaching tour in Surry and Yadkin counties.

Rev. C. M. Payne, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Wilmington, N. C., has left his post for a few week relaxation and rest. During his absence Rev. Dr. Wilson, of the First Church will minister to both churches.

Rev. B. W. Mebane, pastor of Graham church and stated supply of Company Shops church, has announced to his churches his intention of tendering his resignation at the next meeting of Orange Presbytery. Until that time he has asked and obtained leave of absence. His address for the present is changed to Madison, N. C.

Rev. W. E. McIlwain writes from Rutherfordton, N. C., on the 5th of July:

"Being in delicate health, with the full consent of my people, I am en route for Franklin, where I propose spending a month or six weeks. During my absence my pulpit will be supplied for one month by Mr. L. H. Robinson, a recent graduate of Columbia Seminary. Our young brother, J. L. Williams, and myself spent last Sabbath with Bro. McGilvary, and I hope to be with Bro. Gammon at Asheville next Sabbath.

God's word at Hopewell, I am glad to say, is not returning to Him void. At our last communion season, which embraced the 4th Sabbath of June, we received six accessions on profession of faith, and among these were three young husbands. I was assisted by Revs. J. T. Plunkett of Steele Creek and M. E. Kirkpatrick of Franklin, N. C."

CLUSTER MEETING.

The Rowan and Davie Cluster will meet at Bethesda church, July 25th, at 11 o'clock A. M., and be opened with a sermon by Rev. J. A. Ramsay—Subject, "What is implied in being a Christian?"

Subjects for discussion: 1. How far is the membership of a church responsible for inefficiency and unfaithfulness in her pastor, elders and deacons? Opened by Rev. R. W. Boyd and elder and deacon from Unity. 2. What is the best method of developing the working power of the young Christian? Opened by elder and deacon from Back Creek. 3. The duty of church members with regard to the cause of temperance. Opened by elder and deacon from Thyatyra. 4. The necessity of utilizing the social intercourse of Christians with each other and the world for the good of the Church. Opened by pastor, elder and deacon from Salisbury. A full attendance is desired.

MEBANEVILLE, N. C.

Dear Bro.: The Lord's Supper was administered in our church at Mebaneville last Sabbath. It was a time of much enjoyment and communion with God. Three persons united with the church on profession of faith in Christ.

This church is steadily growing. The Sabbath school has increased very much in the last few months. A few weeks ago a Sunday school was organized about two miles from the church. It is very prosperous. I preach to this school, and other persons who come in from the neighborhood, every first Sabbath, in the afternoon. The session of Mebaneville church released me from any obligation to preach at night when I preach at other points in the afternoon. Such preaching is appreciated more than ministers have any idea of. It is carrying the Gospel to them; it is going out into the highways and the hedges and compelling them to come in.

Brethren, let us branch out more and make our church aggressive as well as conservative. Let the churches send out their pastors often to build up the waste places and enlarge the borders of our Zion.

T. J. ALLISON.

Mebaneville, July 8.

OAK FOREST CHURCH, MECKLENBURG.

Seven miles southwest of Asheville, towards the beautiful blue heights of Pisgah and about one mile from the Haywood road where it enters the Hominy Valley, crowning the long, wooded ridge called Sandy Hill, stands one of the few Presbyterian churches in Buncombe county. In one sense of the word Oak Forest is a weak church. That is to say, it is young, having been organized only seven years; and small, numbering only about fifteen members; and unable to enjoy the stated ministrations of a regular pastor, having been supplied for several summers by young candidates. But in another and better sense of the word it is not weak, that is to say, the brethren are "stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." They exercise that grace whose excellence moved logical Paul to poetry, the grace which he eulogizes as better than the eloquence of angels or the learning of men, better than faith or almsgiving or martyrdom; "the love of Christ constraineth them," and they have "shown unto us and before the churches the proof of their love and of our boasting their behalf." They have built a neat, substantial brick church, which was dedicated last September by Rev. Dr. A. W. Miller. They have just finished the plastering and seating, and will before the summer is ended build the pulpit and supply it with a suitable Bible and Hymn Book. They pay as they go. On the first Sunday in July Brother Gammon was with us and we observed all the ordinances of the church, save one, in a single service, including Baptism and the Lord's Supper. It was a delightful "season of refreshing from the Lord." We realize the truth of David's description of the communion of saints: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." It is fragrant like the precious ointment. It is vitalizing as the dew of Heaven. There is no spirit of contention in this church. Charity rules. It is a privilege to commune with them. Oh that all of our churches had the spirit of love and liberality and diligence! Brother Gammon preached for us again in the afternoon with more than his usual fervor and unction.

The Asheville church is undergoing repairs and was necessarily closed for that day. On the second Sunday in July the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered in that church. Rev. W. E. McIlwain is expected to assist the pastor.

CELEBRATION OF RAIKES' CENTENNIAL.

The celebration of "Raikes' centennial" by the Sunday schools of Winston, N. C., we may well believe, was in admirable taste and excellent order. The Rev. C. H. Wiley, president of Forsyth County Sunday School Association, presided. We give the following detailed description of the exercises from the Western Sentinel:

"The assemblage of the Sunday schools of Salem and Winston in the Moravian church, Sunday evening, was a grand success in every way. The occasion was the celebration of the centennial anniversary of Robert Raikes, the founder of Sunday schools, and the exercises were greatly enjoyed by the large crowd that thronged the grand old church. The programme for the evening opened with music from the choir, "Great is the Lord," a very pretty and appropriate selection. Rev. C. H. Wiley, the presiding minister of the evening, then made a brief statement, regretting very much the absence, by sickness, of Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Baptist church, and Rev. Mr. Page, of the M. P. church. The same gentleman then read in a clear and lucid manner a portion of the 68th Psalm, followed by Rev. T. J. Zorn in a very appropriate prayer. Rev. E. Rondthaler was the first speaker, his subject being the occasion, which was very interesting and included a brief but precise history of Robert Raikes, concluding with interesting statistics of the Sunday schools throughout this and other countries. Rev. Mr. Johnston came next and delivered a telling address upon the true origin and nature of Sabbath schools, which was listened to with strict attention and was truly an able effort on the part of this talented divine. Rev. E. Rondthaler rose again and spoke this time to the children, in his usual pleasant and affable manner, upon the army of Sunday school children: what it is and what it can be. His illustrative allusion to the manufacture of coin and the sailor boy story, founded on facts, did not fail to call the closest attention on the part of the little folks, the moral of the subject being plainly shown, and was certainly good fruit sown in fruitful places. Rev. Mr. Carraway, next in turn, addressed his remarks mostly to the S. S. teachers, what they were and what they should be. His advice in regard to punctuality and a system of normal school training for teachers was well received, and his address throughout interesting and instructive. Rev. Mr. Johnston, in behalf of the subject, "The army of the Lord in the Sunday schools," allotted to one of the absent speakers, concluded the remarks of the evening. The Doxology was then sung, and after the Benediction by the president the exercises came to a close. The lower portion of the church was filled with the scholars and teachers of the several Sunday schools of the towns, and the number, though unknown to us, could well be estimated at eight or nine hundred. The audience filled the galleries. Moody and Sanky songs interspersed the addresses, and the selections were sung with great spirit and power, accompanied with good effect by cornet and organ. Truly it was a grand sight to see this large assembly of children, all enlisted, more or less, in the good work of the Sunday school. It could not fail to forcibly remind us of that great day when, regardless of creed or sect, the assembled hosts of earth shall stand before the Great White Throne, all, we trust, prepared to enter life eternal, and joys that never end."

HINTS ON EDUCATION.

"The poor that hath understanding searcheth Him out."—Prov. 28: 11.

Mr. Editor: The signs of the times confirm this proverb. The masses of the people are searching out the men in high places. Your editorial last week on "Education" was timely and thoughtful. Will not the readers of this paper think seriously on this matter, and let their influence be felt in selecting representatives to the next Legislature of North Carolina who will study the Public School System in this State, and demand a law which will secure some intelligent, responsible management of the Common School Fund? The appeal to the laboring men, and poor, honest, industrious men, whose votes place representatives in places of responsibility, is most earnestly urged, that they search out the men who wish their votes. Let every one keep a sharp eye upon the dangers through which we have come. The words of one of the most reliable statesmen of our times—Senator Bayard—deserve careful consideration: "With prudent counsels, well considered economies, and steadily prosecuted reform, with suspicions and ill-will between our own people discouraged and put an end to, we shall have before us an era of prosperity which should gladden the heart of every man who loves this country. The conviction grows stronger and clearer daily that such a government as ours can only be maintained by the exercise and employment of the higher and better qualities of human nature. It is a government of laws emanating from popular will, but that will must be for honest and worthy ends, accomplished by honorable means. It is controlled by public opinion, but that opinion must be the intelligent result of knowledge, carefully acquired, and deliberation, and not the unstable froth of tumult and gusty passion. And to make public principles secure, they must be engrafted on private honor; the wishes of an intelligent and upright constituency must be reflected by intelligent and upright representatives. To maintain this government of ours such are some of the conditions, and it is upon the self-protecting elements of society that we must rely."

The poor man that hath understanding, the common people, who are educated, be they white or black, are the ones who can and must search out deceit and fraud, and maintain and protect good society. We have no protection in our country against rich monopolies and corrupt leaders, except as we rely, under God, upon the intelligence and Christianity of our people.

Mr. Monroe, perhaps the wisest President we have ever had, said in his inaugural address (1817). "Usurpation is easy, and a usurper is soon found, among an ignorant and corrupt people. Let us by all wise and constitutional means promote intelligence among the people as the best means of preserving our liberties."

It cost $12,000,000,000 to set the negroes free. One-half of this sum would have paid for them and provided homes and some education for them. It now costs the government about $20,000 to kill an Indian. One-tenth of that sum will educate him so he will not need to be killed. It costs our State about $1,000, to arrest, convict, and punish in the penitentiary the average convict. Half of this perhaps would have opened his eyes and made him a tax-payer.

All this may seem to be tedious and commonplace; and here is our present danger—disregard and indifference to old and well-tried principles.

TRIP TO WEST VIRGINIA.

QUINNIMONT, FAYETTE CO., W. VA., July 8, 1880.

I reached here this week. Left Richmond on the 1st inst., at 11 p. m., via. the Chesapeak & Ohio R. R. By daylight next morning I found myself well-nigh surrounded by the Blue Ridge mountains. In every direction there was beautiful scenery, causing the soul to swell with adoring admiration of the mighty works of Him who has been our dwelling place in all generations; who existed before the mountains were brought forth, or the earth was formed. Those who have been accustomed alone to the monotony of the pine and oak forests of the Atlantic coast know nothing of the variety of beauty which Nature exhibits in our mountains and valleys. To the grandeur and beauty of the Blue Ridge and the Alleghanies no pen can do justice. Through the human eye the inspiration must reach the soul and awaken a sense of the wisdom and love of Him Who "weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance."

Not only the rich feast to the vision is denied our Eastern people but many comforts as well. The fresh invigorating air, the cool nights so delightful for rest after daily toil, the atmosphere of the early morning bracing and strengthening for the duties of the day, and then, not to be overlooked, the tender lamb, the juicy beef, the rich milk and butter.

In Western Virginia people seem to live in more comfort and with less labor than on the plains. For growing and raising stock the lands are very fine. In the limestone portion blue grass grows luxuriantly, and to make a pasture nothing more is required than to clear the ground of timber. No planting the seed or cultivation is necessary. The grass grows summer and winter.

At Alderson, a little town in Monroe county, I made my first stop. This town has sprung up in the last few years. There I met the Rev. U. R. Laird, who ministers to the people of that place and Fort Spring, seven miles up the road. Brother Laird has not been there a great while, but has a promising little Presbyterian church and a devoted, working people. They have a neat little church building, which is about completed. He is an earnest Christian minister, full of zeal and energy.

At Fort Spring there is no Presbyterian church building, but the organization of thorough-going Presbyterians anticipate building a house of worship shortly. Brother Laird expects to have quite an interesting school next fall. With his enterprise, zeal and self-denial the prospect for Presbyterianism is encouraging.

Quinnimont, "five mountains," which I make my dwelling place, is a rugged locality. I shall have more to write about it again. My home will be with Mr. Lewis, who is the genial superintendent of a large iron furnace at this place. With Quinnimont, Hinton and Coal Valley below here will constitute my field.

CALLS FOR PREACHERS IN SOUTHEAST TEXAS.

Mr. Editor:—I wish, through your columns, to call the attention of brethren in the Eastern States to some fields in Eastern Texas, where we urgently need preachers.

1. There might be gronped together in charge of one minister the following points: Nacogdoches, in the county of the same name, Homer and Cheeseland, in Augelina county, and Jasper, in Jasper county. A minister could live at Homer, and preach once a month at each of these places. All of these communities are expecting to have the benefit of a railroad in a short time. They are all situated in the pine belt of Texas, where the timber business is developing and likely to be very large in a few years. The region is quite healthy.

2. The other field where we are in immediate need of a minister at present, includes the following places: Moscow, Lexington and Indian Village, in Polk county, and Woodville, in Tyler county. A railroad from Houston is nearly completed to Livingston, and is expected to reach Moscow this year. Moscow and Livingston are eighteen miles apart. Indian village is sixteen miles from Livingston, and Woodville is thirty-five miles from Moscow. A minister living at Moscow could supply all these points, preaching once a month at each place. At Indian Village of this group, there are about three hundred friendly Indians, who are truthful, peaceful and honest, but in the darkness of heathenism. They sadly need a preacher, and also a missionary teacher, or, better, a male and female Christian teacher. This field is also considered a healthy region. It is also in the pine region—much of it heavily timbered with long-leaf pine.

To supply these fields at present a minister would have to ride considerable on horseback, or travel in a buggy, at least until the railroads progress a little further. We need ministers in the prime and vigor of life for this work, full of energy and zeal and self-denial and faith. Young ministers, or with small families. Such men, willing to labor in faith and prayer in these fields for the Master's sake, will be successful, and will be supported.

I am ready to correspond with any brethren who may think of coming to these fields, and will give them such particular information as I can in regard to support, etc.

It is important that our Church should act promptly and take her part in these fields. The territory included in this work will soon be connected by railroad with New Orleans, Galveston, Dallas, and other important commercial centres. Let us more promptly and speedily help to make these fields as the garden of the Lord. While serving as an evangelist for the Presbytery part of my time, I have recently visited all these places, but the work is too great for me to undertake to supply all these fields.

"Hark! the voice of Jesus crying,
"Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white and harvest waiting:
Who will bear the sheaves away?'
Loud and strong the Master calleth,
Rich reward He offers thee;
Who will answer, gladly saying,
"Here am I; send me, send me?'"

CROCKET, TEXAS. S. F. TENNEY.

P. S.—I may add that good teachers who are likely to settle permanently and build up efficient schools, and who can furnish good recommendations, would find promising fields at Woodville (Tyler county), Livingston (Polk county). I would suggest that teachers interested in this correspond with Dr. Manning, of Homer, Dr. J. N. Goolsbee, of Woodville, and Judge J. M. Crosson, of Livingston. Perhaps ministers who could teach and preach would suit in some of these places.

THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT STILL PRESENT AMONG US.

Rev. Delacy Wardlaw of Nashville, Tenn., who has just completed his theological studies at Union Seminary, was appointed a missionary to Pernambuco a few months since, but was not expected, in consequence of the want of funds, to sail for that station before next January 7th. Upon hearing of the death of his friend Mr. Thompson, whom he ardently loved, and whom he expected to be his fellow-laborer for life in the mission field, he immediately telegraphed to the mission office to the effect that he was ready to sail by the next steamer for Brazil, to lift again the banner that had fallen from the hand of Mr. Thompson in the hour of death, if the committee were prepared to send him forward so soon. The response of Mr. Wardlow is just what we would expect from a good many of our young men who would like to engage in the missionary work but are kept back from doing so from the want of means. The voice of God's Providence, when it speaks, as in the case under consideration, brings them to their feet, and they are willing to follow where the great Captain leads. We are glad to know that there is such a spirit among us. It always shows itself in circumstances of trial, and it shows, at the same time, that the spirit of God still dwells in the bosom of our beloved Church. Thanks to Almighty God for evidence of the presence of that spirit, though it require the fiery furnace to bring it to view. It will not be possible for Mr. Wardlaw to leave by the July steamer, but we hope it will be possible for him to get away by the first of August.

Two other brethren, Rev. Messrs. Phipps and Sydenstriker, the first designated to Greece and the latter to China, expect to sail about the same time for their respective fields of labor. Now who among our christian friends will aid in this great and heaven-appointed work by sending on special contributions to the mission treasury? Honor, glory and close association with the blessed Saviour, all invite us to share in this great work. We hope to hear of many hearty responses to the solemn call during the summer months. The Master Himself is calling loudly upon us—stretch out our hands and help forward the great but struggling cause.—N., in Missionary.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE ON THE STATE OF DAVIDSON COLLEGE, JUNE 16, 1880.

From a careful examination of the papers submitted to them, your committee are persuaded that this Board have reason to be thankful to God for the large measure of prosperity which He has vouchsafed to this Institution. The increased number of its students, their marked diligence in study during the past year, the large number of candidates for the ministry gathered within its walls, the high tone of morals prevalent generally among the young men who resort to this fountain of learning, and the flattering attestations to the scholarship displayed among them from distinguished Professors of Princeton College, the University of Virginia, and Vanderbilt University (who decided upon the merits of the various papers competing for the prize)—all these circumstances, together with the healthful condition of its finances, stamp the present as a very flourishing period in the history of Davidson College. And we should add, as another feature of this Institution, which ought to encourage its friends to stand by it, that it is giving every year a large amount of gratuitous instruction to indigent worthy young men. Exactly one half of its students during the past year have paid no tuition, amongst whom there are fifteen ministers' sons, besides nineteen candidates for the ministry.

Having referred to the condition of the finances as healthful, we may properly particularize, and state that there has been both an increase of income and a decrease of debt during the past year, and that the general result is that our assets are both enlarged in their bulk and improved in their character. This reflects honor on the skill and faithfulness of our Treasurer and our Finance Committee.

The collections from interest and bank dividends are this year $6,026.74 more than they were last year. The increase in this particular is due, in part, to the collection of overdue coupons, belonging to previous years. The debts of the College are this year $515 less than they were last year. The income which is reasonably counted on, and expected for the year to come, exceeds our anticipated expenses. The whole debt resting upon the College is only $1,812.00, and we think there is good reason to hope it will all be lifted in the course of the next two years. And that there is an increase of available assets to the amount of $2,360.00. These stand now at the figure of $88,500.00, while the real estate is estimated to be worth not less than the sum of $150,000.00.

These statements we think, should greatly cheer the hearts of all the friends of Davidson.

(Signed,) Jno. B. Adger, Chrm.; R. Marable, M. McN. McKay, T. R. Eng[illegible], A. R. Banks, Committee.

ECLECTICISMS.

RICHES TRANSITORY.

Christian Observer:

All the agencies of nature are at work destroying the accumulations which men seek to lay up. Fires burn them; the moisture of the air and the changes of the weather cause them to decay; insects consume them; thieves steal them; the mistakes of friends destroy them; war sweeps them away as as a desolation:—all the powers of this world are combined to destroy whatever of property man lays up; and experience shows that of those who spend their lives and bend all of their energies to the accumulation of wealth, not one in a hundred dies rich.

THE BEGINNING.

Northern Christian Advocate:

It is a prophetic moment in the life of the child when he first takes into his hand the family paper and manifests the first intelligent interest in its contents. It is the beginning of a contest between amusement and the printed page for the control of his leisure moments. That act will be repeated again and again, until it becomes a habit, forming deep channels for his thought and shaping into firm outlines the mold of his character. At such a moment it is of some importance what that family paper may be, and especially what is the nature of the portion which it has provided for the children. It has no higher or holier ministry than that in which it becomes the companion of the child and the tutor of his imagination.

OUR DUTY.

S. S. Times:

We have no right to worry over mistakes of the past, when we did that which seemed best in view of all the light then available to us, but we have a duty to get all the knowledge and all the counsel we can secure to enable us to do that which is best for ourselves and for ours in our present conditions or in future emergencies.

ASSURANCE.

Central Presbyterian:

This "assurance" is not the presumptuous complacency of the christian worldling, who thinks that merely putting on the uniform of the Church will save him—and who really never practices on himself any self-examination into his spiritual state. It is a consciousness of union with God, of thorough consecration to His will, of a longing desire to be conformed to His likeness.

THIS GRACE OF GIVING.

Christian at Work:

This grace of giving is the soul of church life. Where there is no giving there is only leanness. It is not what is retained, but what is given that makes for riches both to him who receives and him who gives. Yet throughout the land this grace—is it not almost a lost virtue? Suppose every christian believer should give as he could to the Lord, and put his heart in his beneficence—would not the Lord's work be hastened, and might we not look for the speedy dawn of the Millennial Day?

HUMAN TRADITIONS

Central Christian Advocate:

There is no more helpless condition for the human mind than to surrender itself to the ecclesiastical dogmatism which substitutes church organization and ritualism for spiritual religion. The moment men begin to rely upon anything else than living faith in Christ they are at the mercy of any delusion which has for the moment gained public attention.

POWER IN THE PULPIT.

The Methodist:

"After all, the chief power in preaching must lie in personal character. We want, in the pulpit, a personality. The truth is all in the Bible, and church-goers have that at home. In the church they want to meet a man whom the Bible has transformed by its influence—whose personality conveys the truth, who is a living truth. Say what you will of intellectual battles to be fought, of infidels to be convinced, the main question is to prove the possibility of a life on earth, and to make that supreme demonstration, the preacher must have that life in him.

CHRISTIAN DUTY.

Western Christian Advocate:

If political leaders are wont to cater to the lowest classes of society, knowing that they are vigorous in the assertion of their alleged right to violate the Sabbath and to deal in beverages that desolate society, they should be made to feel that the religious element is equally positive in demanding the promotion of virtue and sobriety. There should be no warfare in caste or nationality, but everywhere an earnest, persevering, and prayerful maintenance of what is pure and good. If we have swerved from the path laid out by our fathers, let us return thither, imploring God's pardon for the past and his help in the future.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Twelve communicants have recently been added to the church at Gainesville, Ga.,—eleven on profession of their faith, and one by certificate.—Southern Presbyterian.

Washington and Lee University has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on the Rev. M. L. Lacy, of Lewisburg, W. V., and the Rev. Wm. Dinwiddie, of Alexandria, Va.

Items from the Christian Observer:

The Presbytery of Louisiana is called to meet at Baton Rogue, La., July 24th, at 11 A. M., to consider a call from that church for the pastoral services of Rev. R. F. Patterson.

Rev. George L. Leyburn passed through Louisville last week on his way to Virginia for a visit to his relatives. While in this city he delivered a lecture on Palestine at the lecture room of the First church.

Items from the Central Presbyterian:

On last Sunday there were communion services in the church at Farmville, Va. Mr. C. R. Morton (formerly an elder in the Buffalo church) was installed, and Col. J. P. Fitzgerald was ordained and installed as elder. There were two additions to the church.

The Presbyterian congregations of Windy Cove and Millboro', in Bath county, the late charge of Rev. George Brown, have extended a unanimous call to Rev. C. S. M. See, of Monterey, Highland county, and it is thought that he will accept.

On Sunday, July 4th, ten persons, recently received by the session of Manchester, Va., on examination, made a public profession of faith before the congregation, among them two of the pastor's children. Some of these were awakened and led to Christ by the very able, earnest, and acceptable preaching of the Rev. Dr. Pryor, during protracted services which he conducted some time ago. Others were impressed more recently by the death of a lovely young lady of the congregation, and were led to a profession of faith by means of special services following this sad event.

On the afternoon of the same day, eight children were baptized, and one hundred prizes for punctuality distributed to those of the Sabbath school scholars that had merited them.

Rev. E. M. Palmer writes to the St. Louis Presbyterian, July 2d: "As an item of interest you may say that at a meeting of about two weeks continuance, in Weston, Mo., ten persons united with the church, most of them in their youth, but one husband and wife in their 73d year. She, however, had been a church member before. Good prospect for greater good, for all of which the Lord, and He alone, be praised."

Rev. H. Moseley writes that the church of Mexia has recently been painted inside and out, and a neat fence built around it. Prospects encouraging. Also that the Marlin church, to which he preaches, hopes to be able to build in the fall.—Texas Presbyterian.

NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Samuel R. Wilson, D. D., formerly well known in the Southern Church, was installed pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, Madison, Ind., on June 20, by a committee of the Presbytery of New Albany.

Throop Avenue church in Brooklyn, N. Y., has increased its membership since 1873, under the labors of Rev. Lewis R. Foote, from 100 to 550.

Twelve persons were received into the Presbyterian church at Salt Lake City recently, eleven on profession of faith, of whom nine were of Mormon connection.

The Presbyterian Orphanage of Philadelphia has a Seaside Home at Cape May Point, N. J., which is designed for the reception of either sex who need the benefits of sea air and bathing. Some women, with or without children, will also be received.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

In Philadelphia on July 1st, the Rev. Edward Wilson was consecrated as Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church of Canada.

EPISCOPAL.

There are now eighty-five Episcopal churches and chapels in New York City, the number having doubled in the last twenty-five years. In all of them the interest in Sunday schools has grown year by year, and the number of scholars, now 24,000 has doubled in the last ten years.

BAPTIST.

A converted Catholic Priest, a christian of high character and ability is preaching in Las Vegas, New Mexico.

METHODIST.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has in New Orleans seventeen churches, with a membership of 3,500, and church property amounting to $131,050. The New Orleans University is now well established, and promises to be an increasing power for good, and has a property located in the heart of the city worth $20,000.

It was our mistake. The Select Boarding and Day School of Misses Nash and Miss Kollock, at Hillsboro, N. C.,—and an excellent school it is—opens on the 30th day of July, and not on the 3d day of July, as the types last week made it.

On Wednesday, 15th of September next, the school of Mrs. Chapman at Goldsboro, will be re-opened in the commodious and suitable building formerly occupied as a residence by the late Mr. Herman Weil. The educational advantages of this school are unsurpassed, and Mrs. Chapman is deserving of greatest patronage, and should be encouraged in her efforts to build up a good school. Completeness and thoroughness are the distinguishing characteristics of Mrs. Chapman's teaching.

INTOXICATING liquors produce diarrhœa or constipation and a torpid condition of the liver, resulting in general debility and inertness of mind. To overcome this prostration, appeal is again made to the liquor as a stimulant, only to increase the gastric disturbance. The judicious application of such a tonic as Simmons' Liver Regulator would strike at the very root of the evil by correcting the condition of the liver, exciting the bowels to action, or correcting their looseness, stimulating the kidneys and removing the feeling of general depression and with it the craving for liquor.

"This is to certify that I suffered with the Gastritis for four months, and could not be relieved until I procured Dr. Simmons Liver Regulator, and was entirely cured in a short time.

A dispatch from Kamensk reports that the locust has invaded the steppes of the Don, and the wheat crop is regarded as lost. Complaints of the ravages of the insects are universal throughout the country.

The Russian Minister in the Interior, on a tour of inspection, telegraphs from Astrakhan that, owing to the want of hands, the plague of locusts can not be effectually eradicated. Many other insects are injuring the crops.

In Jackson, Tenn., on 28th ult., Mr. ALEX. D. REID, aged about 25 years.

Many years ago he received a severe fracture of the skull, from the effects of which he never entirely recovered. Not long since a serious fall aggravated the ill effects of the former trouble, and caused protracted paralysis of the lower limbs, with total blindness. His sufferings for a few days preceding death were intense.

There is hope in his death.

In this city, on the 8th inst., MARY LOVE, daughter of Sylvester and Lucie A. Petteway, aged 9 years, 6 months and 2 days.

A child of the covenant, and a member of the Sabbath School, she early manifested an interest in sacred things and was noted as an obedient, dutiful and gentle little girl. Her long and painful sickness was endured with a patience and fortitude as striking as it was beautiful. We believe "It is well with the child." PASTOR.

In this city, on the 7th inst., ADA SHAW, infant daughter of John R. and Augusta Melton, aged 1 year and 7 months.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such is the Kingdom of God." PASTOR.

At Melville, June 27, 1880, ALEXANDER WILSON, M. D., son of the late Alexander Wilson, D. D., in the 57th year of his age.

To the Hawfields church Dr. Wilson was a most important elder, member and worker. He was a man of gentleness, truth, humble faith and purity. He understood fully his situation and spoke and acted with beautiful and unfeigned resignation.

We have a message for mourners, from the skies: "Write: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." They have conquered; they are resting the rest of God, and the rest of Christ; they shall put on incorruption, and immortality; they are at home within the city whose portals shut back the sound of sin. PASTOR.

In Baltimore, Md., on the 15th ult., Mrs. L. ADELINE TATE, relict of Dr. William Tate, of Morganton, N. C. She was better known to some as Mrs. Massey, the mother of Mrs. Victor C. Barringer, now in Egypt with her husband, a judge of the Khedive's International Court.

Mrs. Tate was a lady greatly esteemed by all who knew her. Her friendships, which included many of the young, were warm and constant. She had the faculty of binding others to her with strong and lasting ties. For a number of years she was a member of the Presbyterian church, and her profession was no mere form. The pastor whose ministrations she enjoyed through months of suffering testifies that he never knew one who derived more benefit from religion. Her trials were great and many, but she meekly bore them all. She longed with all the love of a mother's heart to see her only child once more. But the wish could not be granted, and so with submission to the divine will, she gently passed away. R. B. A.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Her Work Was Done.

Anear fourscore and seven well-rounded years
Were drawing to a close. Her work was done.
The very house missed her familiar step;
The antique clock, companion of her life,
Ticked slowly in its long-accustomed place;
Her saintly face was turned to greet the first
Pale beams of dawning day; she gently raised
Her head, and resting it upon her hand,
The rosy lips of morn kissed lightly then
Her aged brow and silver hair. "The morn
Is beautiful," she said, then closed her eyes
And sank to rest. Grandmother dear was dead!
And yet the clock ticked on—the sun still shone.
—Selected.

Little Allie.

BY FANNY FERN.

The day was gloomy and chilly. At the freshly-opened grave stood a little delicate girl of five years, the only mourner for the silent heart beneath. Friendless, hopeless, homeless, she had wept until she had no more tears to shed; and now she stood, with her scanty clothing fluttering in the chill wind, pressing her little hand tightly over her heart, as if to still its beating.

"It's no use fretting," said the rough man, as he stamped the last shovelful of earth over all the child had left to love. "Fretting won't bring dead folks to life. Pity you hadn't got no cousins somewhere to take you. It's a rough world, this 'ere, I tell ye. I don't see how ye're going to weather it. But I'll take ye round to Mrs. Fetherbee's; she's got a power of children and wants a hand to help her, so come along. If you cry enough to float the ark, it won't do you no good."

Allie obeyed him mechanically, turning her head every few minutes to take another look where her mother lay buried.

* * * * * *

The morning sun shone in upon an underground kitchen in the crowded city. Mrs. Fetherbee, attired in a gay colored cotton dress, with any quantity of tinsel jewelry, sat sewing some showy lace on a cheap pockethandkerchief. A boy five years old was disputing with a little girl of three about an apple; from big words they had come to hard blows; and the peace was finally declared at the price of an orange apiece, and a stick of candy—each combatant "putting in" for the biggest.

Poor Allie, with pale cheeks and swollen eyelids, was staggering up and down the floor under the weight of a mammoth baby, who was amusing himself by pulling out at intervals little handfuls of her hair.

"Quiet that child, can't ye?" said Mrs. Fetherbee, in no very gentle tone. "I don't wonder the darling is cross to see such a solemn face. You must get some life into you somehow, or you won't earn the salt to your porridge here. There, I declare you've put half its eyes out with those long curls dangling round. Come here and have 'em cut off; they don't look proper for a charity child;" and she glanced at the short, stubby crops on the heads of the little Fetherbees.

Allie's lips quivered as she said, "Mother used to love to brush them smooth every morning. She said they were like little dead sister's; please don't," said she beseechingly.

"But I tell you I do please to cut 'em off; so there's an end of that!" said she, as the severed ringlets fell in a shining heap on the kitchen floor, "and do, for creation's sake, stop talking about dead folks. And now eat your breakfast if you want it; I forgot you hadn't had any. There's some of the children's left; if you're hungry, it will go down; and if you ain't, you can go without."

Poor Allie! The daintest morsel wouldn't have "gone down." Her eyes filled with tears that wouldn't be forced back; and she sobbed out, "I must cry if you beat me for it, my heart pains me so bad."

"H-i-t-y, t-i-t-y! What's all this?" said a broad-faced, rosy milkman, as he set his shining can down on the kitchen-table. What's all this, Mrs. Fetherbee? I'd as lief eat pins and needles as hear a child cry. Who is she?" he asked, pointing to Allie?" "and what's the matter with her?"

"Why the long and short of it is, she's a pauper that we've taken in out of charity, and she's crying at her good luck, that's all," said the lady, with a vexed toss of her head. "That's the way benevolence is always rewarded. Nothing on earth to do here but to tend the bady and amuse the children, and run to the door, and wash the dishes, and dust the furniture, and tidy the kitchen, and go for a few errands. Ungrateful little baggage!"

Jemmy's heart was as big as his farm, and that covered considerable ground. Glancing pitifully at the little weeper, he skilfully said, "That child's going to be sick, Mrs. Fetherbee, and then what are you going to do with her? Besides, she's too young to be of much use to you. You'd better let me take her."

"Well, I shouldn't wonder if you was half right," said the frightened woman. "She's been trouble enough already. I'll give her a 'quit claim.'"

"Will you go with me, little maid? said Jemmy, with a bright, good-natured smile.

"If you please," said Allie, laying her hand confidingly in his rough palm.

"Sit up closer," said Jemmy, as he put one arm around to steady her fragile figure as they rattled over the stone pavement. "We shall soon be out of this smokey old city. I always feel as if I was poisoned every time I come into it. And then we'll see what sweet hay fields, and new milk, and clover blossoms, and kind hearts will do for you, you poor little plucked chicken. Where did you come from when you came to live with that old Jezebel?"

"From my mother's grave!" replied Allie.

"Poor thing! poor thing!" said Jemmy, wiping away a tear with his coat sleeve. "Well, never mind. I wish I hadn't asked you. I'm always running my head agin' a beam. Do you like to feed chickens, hey? Did you ever milk a cow, or ride on top a hay-cart, or go a-berrying? Do you love bouncing red apples, and plumbs as big as your fist? It shall go hard if you don't have 'em all. What's 'come of your hair, child? Have you had your head shaved?"

"Mrs. Fetherbee cut it off," said Allie.

"The old vixen! I wish I'd come in a little quicker. Was it your curls them young 'uns was playing with? Well, never mind," said he, looking admiringly at the sweet face before him; "you don't need 'em, and they might get you to looking in the glass ofteuer than was good for you."

"Well, here we are, I declare; and there stands my old woman in the door-way, shading her eyes from the sun I dare say she wonders where I found you.

"Look here, Betsey; do you see this child? The earth is fresh on her mother's grave. She has neither kith nor kin. I've brought her from that old skinflint of a Fetherbee's and here she is. If you like her it's well and good; and if you don't, she'll stay here just the same. But I know you will," said he, coaxingly, as he passed his brawny arm around her capacious waist. "And now get her something that will bring the color to her cheeks; for mind you I'll have no white slaves on my farm."

How sweetly Allie's little tired limbs rested in the fragrant lavendered sheets. A tear lingered on her cheek, but its birth was not of sorrow. Jemmy pointed it out to his wife as they stood looking at her before retiring to rest.

"Never forget it," Betsey," said he. "Harsh words ain't for the motherless. May heaven forgive me, if she ever hears one from my lips!"

Darwinism in Dress

The individual on the look-out for a subject of curious interest would be likely to think of a good many things before it occurred to him to inquire into what we may call the archæology of his own garments. Where, in the name of all that is tasteful and convenient, did Western Europeans get the idea of a chimney-pot hat? Who first invented a pair of trousers, and what inventive genius first set society in a roar of laughter by appearing in a swallow-tail coat? Who first conceived the idea of putting on a hat-band when his wife's grandmother died, and where did we get the notion of gloves? There was a highly interesting anthropological collection exhibited in Bethnal-green Museum four or five years ago, from which it was made evident to the meanest comprehension that uncivilized man never invented anything—that all his implements of warfare, his articles of clothing or domestic utility, his tribal emblems and his musical instruments, were the gradual outgrowth of rudimentary ideas sometimes furnished by some natural form evident enough, but sometimes lost in the obscurity of unhistorical times. Highly civilized people, such as nineteenth century Londoners, could not of course but wonder at the puny powers of these infants of nature as displayed in their relics. To how few of the spectators would it occur that from their hats to the soles of their shoes everything about them bore witness to the same want of inventiveness, and the same gradual growth out of rudimentary ideas! A very cursory study of such a book as Fairholt's "Costume in England" suggests that this really is the case, and Mr. G. H. Darwin, son of the famous biologist, has in a very interesting manner proved that it is so, at any rate to a very great extent.

The hat presents a remarkable illustration of gradual transition. Pugin says, in his "Glossary of Ecclesiastical Ornament and Costume," that hoods are the most ancient covering of the head. They formed part of the principal outer garment of the body, and it is not difficult to understand that the idea of a hat would arise in the mere separation of the hood for convenience. This is quite consistent with what Mr. Darwin says, "that hats were originally made of some soft material, probably of cloth or leather, and, in order to make them fit the head, a cord was fastened round them so as to make a sort of contraction." All the early hats, he says, seem to be provided with some sort of band, which survived the gradual stiffening of the material of which the hat was formed, and is observable in the strings of the Scotch cap and even in the mitre of the bishop, which thus proves itself to have had a common origin with the layman's ordinary headgear. The common buckled band on a black hat has been retained probably because it has served the purpose of hiding the seam between the brim and the upper part, and it was no doubt the existence of this narrow ribbon that originated the mourning band, which is merely the original ribbon widened and made of suitable material. But this is not all. The stiff material of which in course of time it became the fashion to make hats precluded the possibility of tying them so as to make them fit the head. Still the idea of such tying and of its desirability survived, and was actually perpetuated in the lining, which, as everybody may see by taking off his hat, still presents a little silk cord threaded through a series of slits in the upper edge of the thin band of leather fitting on to the head. Nobody, of course, ever thinks of tying this lining to his head, but there is the surviving idea, and so plainly obsolete, that it is not unusual to see the edge of the leather merely indented, and a small bow of silk cord alone testifying to the old form of hat. It is certainly a very amusing proof that it is not only savages who lazily develop and adapt rather than invent.

Paradise Lost and its Author.

In whatever respect "Paradise Lost" was examined, it answered the test of the surperlative. Was it the conduct of the story—was it the sustained elevation of the style, and the perfect texture and finish of the wording; was it the music of the verse, varying from the roar of hurricane and the tramp of bannered hosts to the charm of bees and birds; was it the plenitude of gem-like phrases and of passages memorable individually, and sure to be quoted forever; was it wealth of maxim and weight of thought; was it the incessant suggestion of subjects for other forms of art, whether of single figures and statuesque monuments for the sculptor, or of groups, incidents, and landscapes for the painter? In any or all of these aspects, what a poem it was! Then through all, and imparting to all a sense of difference from anything known before, who could miss that tone of a certain personal something—that boom of self-conscious magnanimity for which we have no name yet but the Miltonic? Even the occasional languors and lapses into the prosaic, as when some doctrine of Puritan theology had to be expounded in set terms, might give pleasure to many. What were they but the rests or sinkings of the eagle, that he might prove his strength of plume the next moment by again soaring to his highest in the sunbeams? * * * On a comparison of the poem with all that was then recent or current, what can have been the impression? The last things even nominally of the heroic or epic kind in English poetry were Cowley's "Davideis," Davenant's "Gondibert," and Dryden's "Annus Mirabilis." None of these, of course, could stand within the sight of such an epic as his; nor in going back through previous English poetry in search of the latest book, nominally of the epic order, worthy of being named with this in respect of general importance, could one bestow even a passing thought on Drayton, Daniel, or any of the rest of that century, or stop short of the "Faery Queene."

Then the view enlarging itself, and the distinction of poetry into kinds ceasing to be relevant for the future purpose of estimate, the recollection would be that the English nation had hitherto possessed but three poets of any kind that all the world could regard as really consummate. Chaucer, Spencer, and Shakespeare were the trio of England's greatest, with none later or intermediate that could rank in their company. And now what had happened? A fourth poet had stepped out who must be associated forever with these three predecessors. He had stepped out—who could have expected it?—in the person of a blind man, domiciled in an obscure suburb of London, who, though there was a dim remembrance that he had professed poetry in his youth, had been known through his middle life as a Puritan pamphleteer, a divorcist, and iconoclast in Church and State, and who seven years ago, when Charles came to the throne, had been so specially infamous for his connection with the Republic and the Regicide that he had barely escaped the gallows. Chaucer, Spencer, Shakespeare, and Milton were henceforth to be the quarternion of largest stars in the main portion of the firmament of English poetry. Nay, if there was to be a discrimination of degree among the four, was it not Milton that was to be named inevitably whenever, on any plea of co-equality of poetic genius visible through difference of modes, the supreme radiance of Shakespeare was to be challenged by the contrast of a peer or second? That is the understanding now, and it was formed with unusual rapidity we shall find in Milton's own generation.—Professor Masson.

The Stinger of the Bumble Bee.

Did you ever stop to consider the immense power possessed by a humble bee? An insect weighing no more than the tenth of an ounce is capable of "raising" a man weighing 220 pounds from a bench in the public park, and then have lots of lifting material left. Just stop and think of it! The stinger of the bee is not near as large as the finest needle, but such is the force behind it that it can be driven through heavy pants cloth, backed by merino drawers, and into the flesh about sixteen feet. If a man could wield a crowbar in comparison he could drive it through seven sawmills and a distillery at one blow. Nature could not give the bee teeth and claws without spoiling its beauty, and in compensation she gave him this sting as a weapon of attack and defence. If the bee had no weapon, of attack, ants, beetles and bugs could cuff him around as they pleased; but, as it is, he is the boss of the walk, and won't take a word from any of them.

The bumble bee is not naturally of a quarrelsome disposition, but he can't sit down over half an over without feeling as if some one was doing him a great wrong. If left to himself he will crawl up your coat-sleeve, look around, and crawl down and go about his business; but if welcomed with a blow between the eyes he is going to be revenged if he breaks a leg. He invariably closes his eyes when he stings, and you have only to look a bee square in the face to see when he is fooling around, and when he means fourteen per cent. per annum.

The hayfield is a favorite resort of the humble bee, but you can find him almost everywhere else if you try hard. Having no pair of long hind legs he cannot build his nest in a marsh like a frog; and having no beak in which to carry straw he cannot nest in a tree like a bird. He therefore takes to the grass, and under the roots of an old stump, or among a pile of old rails, he rears his gentle young, and gives them printed instructions as to the difference between stinging six inch stove-pipes and runaway boys. The knowledge of old bees is powerful. They know where the school-house is. They knew when the school is out. They can sail miles away from home, get in their work on a farmer's son weeding out corn, and return home without missing a fence corner, or in need of an afternoon nap. As a rule they are early risers. Barefooted boys driving up their cows at daylight will find the humble bee out of bed, and ready to begin the arduous labors of the day. Along about sundown he quits work, counts noses to see if the family are all in, and then stows himself away for a night of calm and peaceful repose.

The legs of the bumble bee are very crooked. This seems too bad at first sight, but you will soon discover that nature was level-headed. His legs were thus shaped to enable him to hang to the brim of a boy's straw hat. Were his legs straight he could not walk a fence rail in a high wind, nor could he turn round after reaching the top of a mullein stock. The stripes on a bee look like a waste of material, but such is not the case. They furnish an extra covering over his ribs to keep the frosty air off, and they stiffen his spinal column in his flight through the air.

A humble bee can fly at the rate of twenty miles an hour if he wants to, but there is no cause for him to fly faster than a boy can run. He sometimes lives to be three years old, and is sometimes stricken down before he has traveled at all. His life is a precarious one. He may run a farmer out of a hayfield to-day, and be the big tree in the nest, and to-morrow a country school-ma'm may knock his head off with her umbrella. Nothing in natural history weighs more for his size than the bee, and nothing in science works easier without cog-wheels or rubber rollers than his stinger. It is always ready, never out of repair, and satisfaction (to the bee) is guaranteed in every case.—Exchange.

The Marriage of Luther.

Catherine von Cora was the daughter of one of the minor nobles of the Saxon Palatinate. Her father's fortune was not equal to his rank, and this circumstance disabling him from giving Catherine a dowry, he placed her in the convent of Nimptsh, near Grimma, in Saxony. Along with the eight nuns who were the companions of her seclusion, she studied the Scriptures, and from them the sisters came to see that their vow was not binding. The Word of God had unbarred the door of their cell. The nine nuns, leaving the convent in a body, repaired to Wittemberg, and were there maintained by the bounty of the elector, administered through Luther. In process of time all the nuns found husbands, and Kate alone of the nine remained unmarried. The Reformer thus had opportunity of knowing her character and virtues, and appreciating the many accomplishments which were more rarely the ornament of the feminine intellect in those days than they are in ours. The marriage took place on June 11th. On the evening of that day Luther, accompanied by the pastor Pomeranus, whom he had asked to bless the union, repaired to the house of the burgomaster, who had been constituted Kate's guardian, and there, in the presence of two witnesses—the great painter, Lucas Cranach, and Dr. John Appella—the marriage took place. On June 15th, Luther says, in a letter to Ruhel, "I have made the determination to retain nothing of my Papistical life, and thus I have entered the state of matrimony, at the earnest solicitation of my father." The special purport of the letter was to invite Ruhel to the marriage feast, which was to be given on Tuesday, June 27th. The old couple from Mansfield—John and Margaret Luther—were to be present. Ruhel was wealthy, and Luther, with characteristic frankness, tells him that any present he might choose to bring with him would be acceptable. Wenceslaus Link of Nuremberg, whose nuptials Luther had blessed some time before, was also invited; but, being poor, it was stipulated that he should bring no present. Spalatin was to send some venison, and come himself. Amsdorf also was of the number of guests. Philip Melancthon, the dearest friend of all, was absent. We can guess the reason. The bold step of Luther had staggered him. To marry while so many calamities impended! Philip went about some days with an anxious and clouded face, but when the clamor arose his brow cleared, his eye brightened, and he became the warmest defender of the marriage of the Reformer, in which he was joined by not a few wise and moderate men in the Romish Church.—History of Protestantism.

SECULAR NEWS.

Mr. Joseph B. Worth of Wilmington has established a steam laundry. In connection with the washing machine there is a starching machine capable of starching one hundred dozen pieces per day; an ironing machine, which will turn out about three hundred dozen collars and cuffs per day; a drying room, in which all the articles washed and ironed during the day will be dried by artificial heat; five ironing tables, with double blankets, covered by two thicknesses of muslin, and a concern in which starch is made by steaming, etc.—Condensed from Wilmington Star.

A good yield. Dr. R. L. Payne, of this place, reaped this harvest, from 4½ acres of land, 112½ bushels of wheat, an average of 25 bushels per acre. No commercial fertilizer was used.—Lexington Exchange.

Miss Kate Devereux, of this city, won the first prize offered by the New York World for answers to its series of queries ending the 27th of June. This is the second time this young lady has won the first prize in these contests, besides which she has won the second or third prizes in almost every one of the contests.—Raleigh News.

The crops in this section of the State have never been more promising. The yield of the wheat crop has been far greater than for many years, and in fact all small grain has done remarkably well, and the corn crop has never failed in Pasquotank. The stand of cotton is pronounced good by all the farmers.—Elizabeth City Falcon.

Gov. Jarvis has received a reply to his letter requesting the use of Fort Macon for the encampment of the First Regiment in August. The Secretary of War says that the use of the fort and barracks is granted, provided that the troops do not use any of the buildings now occupied, that the police regulations are not violated, and that the troops do not use the supply of drinking water, but provide themselves therewith.—Raleigh Observer.

THE BEST REMEDY
FOR
Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

◆Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

YELLOW FEVER

That this terrible disease has for years held a despotic sway, at certain seasons of the year, in portions of our own fair land, and in other countries, is known by each and every one. As well known is it, that a cure, or even a preventive, has not been, heretofore discovered.

It is known to every intelligent man and woman, that the reason for this fearful scourge is neither more nor less than the malarial poison that emanates from low marshy lands—whether adjacent to salt or fresh water—especially in certain stages of the drying process, under a hot sun; as well are these familiar with the fact, that uncleaned cess-pools, insufficient drainage, unremoved filth of any kind or character, are generators of this same death-dealing miasma. Observations of centuries has made every person, blessed with the least faculty of discernment, acquainted with the effect of this subtle malarial poison. Each and all know that Typhus and Intermittent Fevers are the lesser natural consequences of an inhalation of this poisonous exhalative, and that Yellow Fever is the greater.

After a careful reading of the late report of the National Board of Health, no other conclusion can be drawn, than that if the blood is kept in a healthy condition the birth, growth and spread of yellow fever is materially lessened, if not actually prevented. It is a matter understood by all and every one, that if the kidney and liver the organs that filter and cleanse the blood—are kept in a wholesome and sound condition, this same vital fluid will ever be clear from impurities. That these organs, the kidney and liver, can be kept free from disease, and at all times in a condition to well and faithfully perform their duties, is a matter beyond dispute, cavil or argument, and equally is it true, that a free use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills, will actually compel these same organs to perform their allotted functions.

Testimonials by the thousands are in the hands of the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure vouching for its curative qualities in all diseases of kidney and liver, and hence as a cleanser of the blood, and as well a preventive to yellow fever, we have no hesitation in offering it to the public.

WARNER'S
Kidney and Liver Cure.

The Stubborn Convinced.
In writing of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Bitters, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, the Sentinel, Weedsport, N. Y., has following: "That these possess all the remedial qualities claimed for them is a matter beyond dispute; bona fide testimonials by the thousand from well known citizens in public and private life are evidences strong enough to convince the most stubborn doubter, that they are the best medicines for the diseases for which recommended, ever yet known to the public or the physicians.

Game Played For.
The Republican, Omaha, Nebraska, says: "In the game of life the 'stake' played for is health, wealth and happiness. Each of these can be obtained by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetis Cure, Warner's Safe Pills, Bitters, Nervine and Tonic."

Gratitude Lavished.
Is clipped from the coumns of the Journal-Courier, New Haven, Conn., the following endorsemen: "Gratitude of character strong, earnest and impetuous, is daily, in person and by letter, being lavished upon H. H. Warner & Co. for the introduction of, and the making so extensively known, their wonderful cure, named as Warner's Kidney and Liver Cure."

Mental Strain Relieved.
The Washington, D. C., Critic says: "It is intimated to us that numbers of the Senate and House are freely using Warner's Safe Nervine and relief of nervous prostration incident upon the severe strain upon their mental powers."

Not Open to Argument.
The testimony of the Sunday Herald, Rochester, N. Y., is taken from their columns and is to the effect "that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is a positive cure for disabilities for which it is a specific, there is no disputing; neither is there the 'ghost' of a chance to call into being a negative to so positive an opinion."

Honorable Men.
The Sunday Tribune, Rochester, N. Y., in one of issues prints the following: "The proprietors (of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies), each and all, are men born here, and here have lived the whole period of their stay on earth, and are men who have the unbounded confidence of all who know them."

Speedy and Sure.
The Journal of Commerce, Boston, says: "As a speedy and sure cure this (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure) remedy is 'safe,' and the cases wherein it misses are those beyond the reach of human relief."

Faith and Confidence.
The following is clipped from the News, Marysville, Kansas: "In calling the attention of our readers to 'Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and other Safe Remedies,' we do so with a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good and said of them."

Good Advice.
The Daily Advertiser, St. Albans, Vt., has the following: "We feel sure that if much of our friends as are sufferers from diseases of Kidneys and Liver would but use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, they would be benefitted."

Quality Maintained.
The Rochester, N. Y., Express says: "So far as the standard of quality is concerned, parties can rest assured the same will be maintained up to the present high character. As a remedy for the speedy cure of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and all complaints of the Kidneys and Liver, no article of any kind or character can equal it (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure).

Wonderful to Contemplate.
From the columns of the Republican, Springfield Mass., is taken the following: "It is a settled fact that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are all they are represented to be by the proprietors, H. H. Warner & Co. The way they go into the habitations of those afflicted with disease for which recommended is truly wonderful to contemplate."

"Bona Fide."
The following is taken from the columns of the York Daily, York, Pa.: "The testimonials in possession of H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, are not manufactured to order, are bona fide, and have attached date, time, place and signiture of the writers thereof."

Dividend-Paying.
The following is found in the columns of the Standard, New Bedford, Mass.: "Parties, after using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, pronounce it the best dividend-paying (in health and happiness) property they ever handled.

Evidence Corroborated.
The Sun, Indianapolis, Ind., has the following: "Testimonials, not numbered by hundreds, but by thousands, are in hands of H. H. Warner & Co., all furnishing ample corroborative evidence that as curative, for specific diseases for which recommended, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies are unqualified and pronounced success."

Unbounded Confidence.
Peck's Sun, Milwaukee, Wis., in referring to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, has the following: "H. H. Warner & Co., Rochester, N. Y., are the sole proprietors, we have a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good, and said of them."

Surest and Best.
The Journal, Battle Creek, Mich., thus puts it: "The surest safest, best blood purifying medicine known is Warner's Safe Bitters, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills. Regular practitioners prescribe them as a remedy for impure poisoned blood."

Confident, Reliable.
"In writing of the Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, of which H. H. Warner & Co., are proprietors, the Evening Dispatch, York, Pa., says: "We say all this that is good of them as we have a perfect faith in the efficiency, the preparation, and unbounded faith in the truth of all that is said good of it."

Deserve a Monument.
The Standard, Syracuse, N. Y., is the journal from which the following extract is cut: "That the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are entitled to a monument is unmistakably true. It is an indisputable fact that these parties be and are looked upon as Good Samaritans."

SHALL THE PRESBYTERY OF ORANGE BE DIVIDED?

In our last article we showed that the division of the Presbytery by the line proposed last spring would secure an annual saving to the churches of about $250 in the item of traveling expenses. This saving is our first argument for division. It is not an argument of much force, perhaps, if it could be shown that it is necessary to the preservation of efficient presbyterial government that the Presbytery should be continued as it is. But if it can be shown that as efficient presbyterial government can be maintained over the churches within the present limits of the Presbytery by two presbyteries as by one, then the saving of this money becomes a strong argument for division. It shall be our object in this article to show that this can be done.

The proposed division would form two presbyteries, the least having thirteen or fourteen ministers and twenty-four churches. Now let the minutes of the General Assembly be examined, and it will be seen that this is about the strength of the Orange Presbytery of our Southern Church. Many are smaller. We hear of no complaint that any of these presbyteries are too weak to maintain presbyterial government. We never hear of one of these weaker presbyteries asking to be united to a neighboring one; but we do not infrequently hear of larger presbyteries being divided into smaller ones; for instance, the Presbytery of Bethel in South Carolina, which consisted of 28 ministers and 37 churches, was last year divided, Bethel retaining 22 ministers and 29 churches, while the new Presbytery of Enoree has 14 ministers and 30 churches, the Presbytery of South Carolina also having given it some ministers and churches. Also, year before last Cheapeake Presbytery, which consisted of 26 ministers and 21 churches, was divided, and the new Presbytery of Maryland was formed. Other instances might be mentioned in Florida, Texas, &c. We hear of presbyteries being divided, thus forming smaller ones, but we do not hear of presbyteries being united to form larger ones.

Our constitution does not seem to contemplate that presbyteries shall cover a large extent of territory or be very large. It requires that a presbytery shall meet twice a year, but this of course involves large expense if the presbytery covers much territory, when if the territory is compact the expense is comparatively small. Again it makes a quorum of presbytery to consist of three ministers and an elder. This shows that the actual functions of a presbytery can be discharged by even as small a number as four persons; hence, therefore, that it can never be necessary to make the bounds of a presbytery extend over a large extent of territory in order to secure a very large presbytery.

We have several small presbyteries in the Southern Church: for instance, in Kentucky, Presbytery of Muhlenburg, 5 ministers and 12 churches; Presbytery of Paducah, 5 ministers and 15 churches; in Synod of Georgia, Presbytery of St. John's, 7 ministers and 11 churches; Presbytery of Macon, 8 ministers and 20 churches, &c. We do not mean to say that it is not desirable to have larger presbyteries if they can be secured without too great expense; hence, we have not proposed to divide Orange Presbytery into more than two presbyteries; but we do contend that it is not necessary to force the churches of Orange Presbytery to maintain a presbytery of 30 ministers and 60 churches, when two presbyteries could be formed, each as large as the average presbytery of the Southern Church and maintained at much less expense. What are the main functions of a presbytery? They are to receive and issue appeals and complaints from church sessions, to license, ordain, install, remove and judge ministers, to organize churches and to superintend and promote their spiritual interests, to set apart evangelists and concert measures for the enlargement of the Church within its bounds, to bear testimony against error, &c. We maintain that a presbytery of 13 or 14 ministers and 24 churches can do all this as efficiently as one of 30 ministers and 60 churches. It is proved by the fact that we have many efficient presbyteries in the Southern Church which consist of 15 ministers and 30 churches. We all know that the business of a presbytery is done by a few. If a candidate is to be examined for licensure, a licentiate for ordination or a minister for reception into presbytery it is usually done by a committee appointed for the purpose. If a church is to be organized, a minister to be installed, a church to be visited, it is usually done by a committee of the nearest ministers and elders. A great part of the work of presbyteries is done by committees or the chairmen of committees. In many cases the majority of a presbytery vote upon the simple recommendation of the committees, and of others who are better acquainted with the matters in hand, and in these cases the additional number of presbyters is of no practical use or advantage.

The affairs of the churches of the East are for the most part regulated by the eastern men, the western men simply concurring, and vice versa. We maintain that numbers are sometimes a disadvantage. We hear reports on the state of religion from all our churches at every meeting, but there are now so many churches reporting that it takes a good deal of the time of Presbytery to hear these reports, and Presbytery frequently tires of them before they are through. Again, there are so many session books to examine that we have to have four committees to examine them, and Presbytery gets tired of hearing the numerous exceptions, which are brought in by those committees. In short there were so many reports brought in from the numerous churches of Presbytery that a committee had to be appointed to reduce the routine work of Presbytery, and a good deal more work than formerly was thrown into the hands of committees. If we had two presbyteries we would have more time to hear the reports on the state of religion and other reports from our churches. We maintain again that every member of Presbytery would have a better acquaintance with the churches under the care of this Presbytery than at present. For instance I know more about the churches nearest to me and can vote more intelligently upon questions which concern these than with reference to churches at a distance. The same is true no doubt with reference to most members of Presbytery. We visit neighboring churches oftener and become acquainted with their condition and wants. I believe a compact presbytery is more efficient on this account than one which is more scattered. Then, in a smaller presbytery, we have our meetings oftener with the churches, and in that way become better acquainted with them and give them the benefit of our presence and preaching. If we were to rotate in our churches more we would meet in each about once every 25 or 30 years, i. e., if we could meet in all, but some are too weak to entertain such a large Presbytery. If the Presbytery were divided we could meet in each once every 12 or 15 years and we could meet with much weaker churches than at present. We conclude then that two presbyteries would be equally if not more efficient in governing the churches within the present limits of Orange than the one Presbytery is at present.

But it is said one duty of presbytery is to concert means for the enlargement of the church within its bounds. It is necessary that the Presbytery hold together in order to reach the destitution within its bounds. We think this is a mistake. In the first place, it is too expensive, as we have seen, to maintain such a large Presbytery. In the second place, it is not the only way to conduct evangelical work. The Presbyterian Church in the United States, of which the Presbytery of Orange is a constituent part, is endeavoring to support evangelistic work within its bounds, and has an executive committee to distribute the money of the churches to the Evangelists within her territory where they seem to be most needed. For our own part we should like to see the two presbyteries after division co-operate with the General Assembly. We regard the church as one and feel willing that our money should be expended wherever the Assembly's committee, who have the whole field before them, think it would do most good. We believe they would maintain an evangelist in Eastern North Carolina. But third if presbytery prefers to conduct its own evangelistic work, we believe that the two presbyteries will do equally as much as the whole Presbytery is now doing or has ever done. What is the presbytery now doing? It has two evangelists each supported as evangelist only one-fourth of his time, and it is struggling to pay off a debt which it has incurred in the conduct of evangelistic work. What has it ever done? It once had two evangelists engaged wholly in evangelistic work, one in the East and one in the West. These evangelists did good service, especially the eastern evangelist. We will not enter into the details of this work. But if the presbytery is divided equally cannot each presbytery support an evangelist? If the whole supported two, cannot each half support one? The East can support an evangelist. It will have some of the strongest churches of presbytery, as the First Church Raleigh, Newbern and Washington. To have one evangelist is as much as it can expect even if the presbytery is not divided. If the presbytery supports two evangelists as it can do, the West as before will demand one. There is abundant need of an evangelist in the West. The counties of Yadkin, Stokes and Person have not a Presbyterian church in them. Surry has only one, Elkin being nearly extinct. Randolph has only one. Forsythe has only one. Chatham has three weak ones. There is great need of several evangelists in the West as well as in the East. Let us then divide the presbytery equally, each assuming half of the debt, then if we determine to continue independent as to our evangelistic work let each presbytery support its own evangelists, and may God spread this good work. In conclusion, I would say that I love my eastern brethren, and enjoy communion with them. I am glad I will still have the privilege of meeting them at Synod. I appreciate the kindness and hospitality of the East I certainly feel grateful to the kind friends in Washington and Newbern for the pleasant entertainment they gave me last Spring. I love to visit the East and on this account will regret to divide presbytery. I think, however that these are questions that ought not to enter here. Nor do I think that too much sadness ought to be felt at dividing the Presbytery of Orange. It is in the nature of things, and honorable for a mother to be replaced by two daughters—Orange replaced by East Orange and West Orange. C. M.

LIQUOR LAW.

I rejoice to see the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN so emphatic on the subject of the liquor traffic. It is a question from which the Christian cannot stand aloof. Politics and the ethics of Christianity intersect at some points, and when they do the Christian citizen must bring his influence into politics. We have been compelled heretofore to fight for the very life of free constitutional government. We hope confidently that the next Presidential campaign will secure our imperiled birthrights and leave us free to make new advances without jeopardizing old interests. We sincerely hope that the hour is near when we may say to such politicians as have contemned enlightened Christian sentiment, "Party or no party, you cannot get my vote." The last Legislature, in extra session, reduced the tax on liquor and laid it on books. Such legislation was a brutal affront to every enlightened moral citizen. Let it be clearly understood hereafter that caucuses and conventions may nominate men who have given themselves such a record, but they cannot compel our votes; that our influence is more potent than that of cross-road grog-dealers. The liquor traffic must be handled with gloves off. It is monstrous, rapacious, impudent, conscienceless; it antagonizes the pulpit; it remorselessly sacrifices every interest dear to man—the worship of God, the hope of heaven, the purity of youth, the affections of parents, the happiness of wives—to put money into the pockets of the very offscouring of the earth. Over the whole length and breadth of this fair State, and at every cross-road, the groggery is to be found, though built of clap-boards and dry goods boxes, presided over by empty-pated indolence, too lazy to win an honest livlihood. It is a shame that this combination of pauperism, illiteracy and diabolism should be permitted, in a Christian land, to resist successfully the influence of culture, wealth, refinement and piety in the press, the pulpit, the Sabbath school and the family circle. Where are the Christians of the land that they tolerate it? Where are the 5,000 Episcopalians, the 10,000 Lutherans, the 25,000 Presbyterians, the 90,000 Methodists and the 175,000 Baptists? We see mothers and fathers and wives praying and teaching and toiling for sons and husbands and weeping scalding tears over their graves, which have been dug by the dirty-handed miscreant at the corner groggery. Why not crush the infamous traffic as one would a viper? As a pastor I have seen so much anxiety—reasonable anxiety—on the part of Christian parents and wives, and have known so many bitter tears to be shed, that I wonder Christian citizens do not rise up in their might and dictate to party that the liquor traffic shall be suppressed. To them it is more important than any other State issue. Let this antagonism to the infamous traffic be organized, and compel recognition at the hands of political parties.

Give us the Maine law. Twelve years experiment has proven it to be efficient.

UNCLE TIM'S WAY.

Uncle Tim held up his saw, and squinted along the teeth to see whether it was "losing its set." He failed to decide, in his surprise at finding that he was taking aim at the minister, who stepped in range just at that moment on the street side of the fence. His eyes came into gear again as he laid his saw on the woodpile and stepped up to the fence, saying, "Well, it is queer. It's only a minnte ago I was thinkin' about you. I was thinkin' what a good sermon that was you gave us last Sunday mornin', an' how I would tell you so the first time I saw you."

Uncle Tim was the wood-sawyer and day's work factotum for the village. Unlearned as he was, the minister always missed him if he was absent from church—he was such a helpful listener. And to Uncle Tim's compliment he replied:

"You told me what you thought of it at the time in the way you listened to it; though, for that matter, you always seem to be interested. I don't suppose you know what a comfort such a hearer is to a minister. If all the congregation were like you I think it would turn my poor sermons into good ones."

"Thank you," said Uncle Tim. "I don't always get the hang of everything that's said, but I should git less if I didn't give attention. An' I always says to myself, 'The minister, he works hard to write his sermons, an' if folks don't listen to 'em its pretty discouraging,' and I says, 'You can't put much into the contribution box, Tim, an' you can't talk in prayer meetin', but you can count one in listenin'; you can try to 'preciate what other folks do.'"

"The talent for appreciating is an excellent one to have," remarked the minister.

"Well, as I look at it, it's one as isn't denied to anybody," said Uncle Tim. "An' if it's the only one I've got I'll try not to wrap it in a napkin. When Deacon Mason does me good by one of his experience talks in prayer meetin' I think it's no more'n right he should know it. P'raps he has times of thinking that he can't say anything worth while, an' it stands to reason that he can talk better if he knows he's doing somebody some good. An' when widder Hatch is makin' such a gritty fight to keep her children together, an' give 'em an education, I think mebbe it makes it a little easier for her to stand up to it if a neighbor drops a word of 'preciation once in a while."

The minister said nothing, but there was a look of "precoiation" on his face, and Uncle Tim continued, "The other day I see the young schoolma'am was lookin' worn ont and sober like. I 'magined them big boys from the Holler was worryin' the life ont of her. An' I didn't know how I could help that. But at noon I just went down to the schoolhouse a purpose to tell her how nice our gran' son was gettin' along with his 'rithmetic. An' she said it was better than half a dozen cups of tea, for cheerin' her up—she did. An' when I see Sanford's boy take a little Irish girl's part that the other boys were tormenting, an' they jeerin' him, I went up to him, an' I says, 'Uncle Tim's nothin' but a woodsawyer, but he knows enough to know that you've got the stuff of a gentleman in you.' You see old folks don't notice the boys enough. An' there's Jim Brady, a drinkin', card-playin', shootin'-match creetur', who goes around a good deal like a dog without any owner. He knows folks despise him. But Jim's right handy with tools, an' when I take my saw to him to have it filed, an' tell him he does that job better'n any other man I know, I think it helps him to have a little more respect for himself, I do. You see its dreadful easy to look at faults—at faults in children, an' faults in hired folks, an' faults in tavern-keepers, an' faults in prayer meetin's. But as I look at it we'd do a great deal better to think more about the good things in 'em."

"To have the talent for appreciation as you call it," said the minister.

"I dunno as that's quite the thing to call it," responded Uncle Tim. "My wife, she says to me once in a while, 'It's nigh onto fifty years that you've been tellin' me that you love me. An' I know you do. But I don't want you to stop sayin' it. I want you to keep tellin' it as well as livin' it.' An' I guess it's not only a talent of 'preciation that's needed, but a talent of tellin' it."

Uncle Tim screwed up his face for another squint along his saw teeth, and the minister walked away reflecting how much brighter and better the world would be if all of us had the talent for appreciating the good things in others and added to this appreciation Uncle Tim's "talent for tellin' it."—Sel.

TIMES AND SEASONS.

"And He said, it is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in His own power."—Acts 1: 7.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

'Tis not for me to know each time
And season known
To Him alone who sits sublime
Upon the throne:
Enough for me, that though unseen
He governs still,
And not an arm can intervene
To thwart His will.

Not mine to ask explained to me
The plans He makes;
Enough for me to know that He
Makes no mistakes;
What He ordains in His decrees
I cannot tell,
But well I know that He in these
Makes no mistakes.

His judgments, deep on either hand,
I cannot plumb;
Amid their mysteries I stand
Before Him dumb:
But these, though wrapped to human ken
In gloom throughout,
Shall yet be solved, and naught shall then
Be left in doubt.

I, through the veil that intercepts,
Ask not to see;
If He but show my way by steps
Enough for me:
Though round about me all be dark,
With Him is day,
And at His word unawed my bark
I launch away.

Though night its shades may darkly lay
On hill and lakes,
Yet this I know, that day by day
The morning breaks;
So let life's lights and shadows drear
Be what they may,
His voice enjoining faith I hear,
And I obey.

Here though I oftentimes in tears
Forsaken seem,
And fleeting all on earth appears
As in a dream,
Yet, with His presence ever nigh,
I onward tread,
And leave to Him the reason why
Without a dread.

Then ask I not to have revealed
My future lot;
But though the way be all concealed
I falter not,
Since my Redeemer bids me go,
In him I trust,
And though inscrutable I know
His ways are just.

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

BY REV. H. B. PRATT.

It is a singular example of the facility with which words acquire factitious meanings, that most Episcopalians use this expression as if it meant the abode of the blessed dead—intermediate between earth and heaven; while even intelligent Presbyterians will tell you bluntly that they don't believe in any intermediate state at all. The State of South Carolina is a place, and a place of abode; but only in this accommodated sense can the word have any local signification. The intermediate is a condition, not a place: the condition or state of being which is proper to souls during their temporary separation from the body. Not to believe, therefore, in the intermediate state is not to believe in the separate existence of souls during the interval between death and the resurrection; so that every man must believe in such a state, unless he believes either that man has no soul, or that his body has no resurrection, or that the soul sleeps with the body till the last day. This question, which causes a great deal of perplexity to many persons, will clear up wonderfully by simply keeping in view, what is so strangely forgotten in this case, that the expression means, and can only properly mean, a state of being intermediate between two states of bodily life: the life that now is and that which is to come; the one temporal, the other eternal; but both bodily forms of life—the only form of life that we know anything about. That intermediate state of soul life, of disembodied being, is a form of existence of which we cannot form the remotest conception, and this is one reason (the reason, perhaps) why the Bible tells us so little about it. It must ever remain an impenetrable mystery till we, each for himself, make trial of it.

The holy dead are in heaven, no doubt; since they are with Christ, and He, we know, is in heaven. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!" While dead they are blessed; more blessed far than we in this state of mortal life; but incomparably less blessed than they will be when "death is swallowed up in victory;" which the Apostle plainly says will not be till "the mortal shall have put on immortality and this corruptible incorruption." The crown and kingdom and reward are in Scripture ALWAYS reserved against that day (1 Peter i: 5, 7, 13). Meanwhile Christ Himself is waiting (Heb. x: 13), and they wait with Him, till He "comes the second time without sin unto salvation."

Errors are to the soul what poisons are to the body: some bad, others worse, but none good. So it happens, on the one hand, that the intermediate place, about which High Church Episcopalians have so much to say—a half way station between earth and heaven—perpetually gravitates toward the Romish doctrine of purgatory, of which it was, and is, the germinal idea. If disembodied souls stop so long this side of heaven that holy Abel has not got there yet, why not believe they fill up the time in completing there their unfinished preparations for heaven? And why not (in view of the short time allotted to the business and pleasures of earth, and the long time we shall stop at the half-way station) why not put off intentionally large part of your preparations till then—when we will have nothing else to do? You see the idea is one that takes well with worldly people, who most abound in worldly churches.

On the other hand, when a man says he does not believe in the intermediate state, he often, perhaps generally, means to say he believes that the souls of believers are at their death "made perfect," not only "in holiness," as our Catechism says, but in everything else: that they are at their journey's end; have come to their crown and kingdom and reward and promised glory—about everything, in fact, which the divine promises hold suspended upon Christ's coming, the resurrection of the body, and the awards of the day of judgment. And so it happens that among such as do not believe in the intermediate state, there is in many quarters a rapid drifting in the direction of a complete denial of these things: while many plainly say, they believe in a state after death, but nothing beyond that. Everywhere we find persons who see no use for a day of judgment, and make their own death the coming of the Lord.

Error is poison; and of the two errors indicated, it is not easy to say which is the worse.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

THE CULTIVATION OF A DEVOTIONAL SPIRIT.

BY DAVID A. WALLACE.

A young minister writes as follows: "The great question with me is how to cultivate a devotional frame of mind. The Word is little appreciated, and the weakness of the flesh is so great, that I seem seldom to get near to God." "There seems a great failure to realize the exceeding excellence of the Word, its power and preciousness. There is a coldness in my devotions and other religious duties which I have striven against and prayed against, but seem to make little or no headway. If you can suggest something to assist me in devotional exercises, etc., it would give me great satisfaction."

With the view of helping our young brother and others similarly troubled, I take as my subject this week, "The cultivation of a devotional spirit." Every reader whose state of mind is similar to that described above may look upon this article as personally addressed to him.

1. First of all, settle the question of your personal interest in Christ. Do not rest in a state of doubt and uncertainty. Seek to be able to say, "Jesus is mine and I am His." Until you have made this attainment and are able habitually to look upon yourself as a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, you will not make much progress in divine life, or be able to maintain a very satisfactory frame of mind.

2. Examine carefully all that is said in the Word of God about believers. In this way you will find out the position you occupy, your standing in God's sight. Among other things, you will discover that you are a friend of God, a saint, a king, and a priest unto God, a child of God, and that the Holy Spirit dwelleth in you—in a word, that you are sitting in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Meditate on these facts, seek to take them in, to be filled with an abiding realization of what they mean. There are not many more profitable subjects of thought than what we are by the grace of God in Christ Jesus.

3. Look up the promise to believers, and ascertain exactly what you have a warrant to trust in your Lord for. Fix in your mind exactly how far you may go in the exercise of trust without presumption, and trust accordingly.

If you have never examined this subject carefully you will be amazed at the discoveries you will make. Now, seek to trust your God and Saviour for everything set down in these promises. Let your faith conform to the warrant, no matter to what heights you must go up in so doing, nor to what depths you must go down. No matter how bold you may seem to be, remember that the promise of God is a sufficient warrant for the fullest trust, the most unwavering confidence.

4. Study the fullness that is in Christ. Look up every scripture in which anything is said to be in Christ. Look into every passage of that tenor closely. Seek to form some conception of the unsearchable riches of Christ. Then remember that He is yours, and more, that all His is yours, and that you have warrant to draw on Him for the supply of all you need. Remembering these things, come boldly to the throne of grace that you may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need, and of His fullness shall you receive grace for grace. Every grace that you exercise must be imparted to you by our Lord. We often make the mistake of trying to work ourselves into desired frames of mind, instead of coming to Him and trusting in Him and waiting on Him in the use of appointed means, that He may supply our need according to His riches in glory.

5. In addition to this searching of the Scriptures to ascertain the mind of the Lord on special subjects, read in course frequently, deliberately, thoughtfully and prayerfully, the more devotional books, especially the Psalms, the words of our Lord and the epistles. Every now and then you will come to a verse or passage that will appear to you radiant with light. Stop there. Meditate on it long and carefully, seeking to get at its full meaning. Commit such verses carefully. Mark them in your Bible, so that you may see them at a glance as you turn over the pages. In times of darkness and coldness, look over these passages, and you will find that they will help you wonderfully. In reading the Psalms you will find Mathew Henry helpful, and much more, Spurgeon's "Treasury of David."

6. Be much in prayer. Let your prayers be specific for particular things which you know you need. Have regular times of private prayer, a stated place, and pray on your knees and aloud. Don't be too brief. Many times one begins cold and heartless, but ends with a full glow of affections. Before preaching, spend some time in special prayer and special devotional reading of the Word. When you find that you have become cold and formal, and that you are not enjoying communion with God as you ought, set apart a day for fasting, self-examination, humiliation, meditation and prayer, and give the day wholly to personal dealing with your God. I think such seasons of special prayer are commonly found very precious.

7. Remember that you are a temple of the Holy Ghost. He dwelleth in you as a friend and helper. Now, be careful lest you grieve Him, and hence deprive yourself of the blessings which He has come to impart. Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God; but, on the contrary, honor Him, trust Him, submit to Him, obey Him; walk in the Spirit, live in the Spirit. Ps. lxxxi: 10-16.

I think that you will find these thoughts helpful. They have been tried and proved. You may depend on them as correct. "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage and He shall strengthen thine heart; wait, I say, on the Lord."—United Presbyterian.

CARELESS WIVES.

It is very common to hear the remark made of a young man that he is so industrious and so economical that he is sure to be thrifty and prosperous. And this may be very sure of him so long as he remains single. But what will his habitual prudence avail him against the careless waste and extravagance of an uncalculating, unthinking wife? He might as well be doomed to spend his strength and life in attempts to catch water in a sieve. The effort would hardly be less certainly in vain; Habits of economy, the way to turn everything in the household affairs to the best account—these are among the things which every mother should teach her daughters. Without such instruction, those who are poor will never become rich, while those who are now rich may become poor.—Selected.

MOTHERS AND CHILDREN.

Many a poor mother, in an humble cot, with no money or position, has struggled to feed and clothe her little ones, to train them to be an honor to their country and a blessing to the world. Most of our useful, prominent men came from such homes. Our churchyards are full of such sleeping mothers, whose hands are folded over their breasts. No worldly eye ever saw the records of their lives, only God and the angels. No tall monuments and high-sounding epitaphs mark their resting place. What a responsibility rests upon the mothers of this country! Life is too short to be spent in accumulating the things of this world, that must perish.

The children do not stay with us long enough to permit us to waste our hour in the pursuit of fashion and gayety. What we sow now we shall reap hereafter. How many who sow in tears will reap in joy. God give to all mothers grace and strength to fulfil their duties aright, and their influence for good may be felt from generation to generation.

The shortest and surest way to live with honor in the world is to be in reality what we would appear to be; and, if we observe, we shall find that all human virtues increase and strengthen themselves by the practice and experience of them.—Socrates.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Jesuits expelled from France have purchased a house at Prague at a cost of £5000.

The conversion to Roman Catholicism is announced of Lady Anne Isabella Blunt, the only granddaughter of Lord Byron.

City Road Wesleyan Chapel, London, rich in hallowed historical associations with the Wesleys and the earliest race of Methodist preachers, and which was greatly damaged by fire a few months ago, has been reopened for public worship by the Rev. Dr. George Osborn. There was an overflowing congregation. The restoration of the building and the entire reconstruction of what was known as "The Morning Chapel" have been efficiently carried out, all the chief features of the edifice have been preserved, so as to carry forward to future generations as nearly as possible the building as originally erected. The monuments of the ancient Wesleyan worthies have been replaced as nearly as could be effected in the same positions as before.

The Committee of the Congregation de Propaganda Fide at Rome, having decided that the claim of the Roman Catholic Bishops in England to exercise jurisdiction over the members of religious bodies should be rejected, the Pope directed that judgment be deferred, and that all the documents on the subject be submitted to him before the Cardinals met to pronounce upon the matter. The Cardinals were to have assembled on the 15th instant, but on the morning of that day received counter orders from his Holiness. It is pointed out in clerical circles that canonical and judicial objections would prevent the congregation of Cardinals from admitting the claim of the English Catholic Bishops, while on the other hand its rejection might prejudice the interests of the Church in England. The Pope is therefore stated to be considering the expediency of issuing a special Bull sanctioning the episcopal jurisdiction with certain limitations.

The outlook in France is thus described by Evangelical Christendom:—Atheism, clericalism, and Protestantism are in full conflict, and the clashing and flashing of swords are heard and seen more than heretofore, thanks to the freedom of print, meet, and lectnre granted almost universally. Hitherto the noise of the battle seems to be above the heads of the great mass of the people. Millions of quiet souls hear it not, or if they do, impatiently wonder what it is all about; and millions more shrug their shoulders and ask, Cannot we be let alone? Yet the long, persevering sowing that has been going on for years has, in many instances, prepared soil where souls are ready to hear and live. Some places where crowded meetings have taken place, and Romanism has been demolished, have turned a cold shoulder to the humble colporteurs, with the Bibles and Christian books. Some, on the contrary, where Christ has been exalted, and a clear Gospel proclaimed, have willingly read, studied, and eventually called for instruction. In some places the sale of Scriptures after the lectures has been large, and followed with good result; in others the effect has been the contrary, enemies having suggested mercenary motives in the sale.

A circular of the Spanish Minister of Justice informs all the civil authorities that in consequence of numerous recent applications, the Government has resolved that in the provinces bordering on the territory of the French Republic, no convent, college, or seminary, belonging to religious orders expelled from France by the Ferry decrees shall be tolerated; and that only with permission from the Government, and in very special cases shall authorization be granted in the other provinces of Spain. The Jesuits possess a few schools in the Southern provinces, and are allowed to reside in their founder's house at Loyola, in Guipuzcoa, by exception. Convents of women are pretty numerous, but the laws that abolished the religious orders in 1833 were never repealed.

OUR DISSENT.

In the course of political campaigns principles are avowed to which it behooves the religious papers to enter a solemn dissent; as we do now to a claim set forth by an exchange a few days since that when any one fails to attend a primary convention of his party it is his duty (duty was the word used) to support the nominees of that party.

In the claim of duty as set forth by the journal referred to there is this involved: That it is the duty of every citizen to attend the primaries of his party; that it is the duty of such citizen to support the nominees that may be chosen—this without regard to qualifications or character, and further without regard to the morality of any principles or plan of action that may be adopted; and lastly, that it is the duty of every citizen, even if he shall not have participated in the conventions of the party, to abide by their decisions and act upon them.

This principle, if indeed it be a principle, if indeed it be not a sad negation of all principle, must be general; it must apply to one party as to any other or all other parties, and if duty requires this absolute subserviency to party where would the changes of votes come from? Nominations of the dominant party would be elections; nominations of the party in opposition would be defeats. Why, under such ruling, should there be any discussion whatever of measures or men? Why should business be disarranged, bad blood be stirred, and every interest, secular and religious, be made to suffer by prolonged and passionate discussion, if every man's duty is to vote according to prescription? Of what use the trouble and expense of holding formal elections when primaries may and should decide all? Political journals may, for a purpose, announce the doctrine in question, but in practice they totally ignore it, and proceed on the common sense and only truly republican principle that every man ought to give earnest, thorough, conscientious consideration to the questions which may be involved in any political campaign, and to the characters of the men who advocate these questions, and should vote accordingly.

Our only justification, perhaps, in touching this subject at all is to be found in our claim, counter to the one under discussion, that every Christian citizen in determining what is duty is to have regard to the principle, that loyalty to Christ is first and supreme. It may be his duty to attend the primary or other meetings of any political party, and of this each individual must be allowed to judge; but he certainly can never have a right to enter a political meeting of any kind to lay down his loyalty to Christ, on the altar of party, nor to hold that at any time loyalty to party requires him to advocate and defend, or even to support by his vote, measures which tend to the subversion of morality. This would be to elevate loyalty to party above loyalty to God. No Christian could avow anything like this; the avowal would fix his proper status among the enemies of his Savior.

The great hope of our country is that Christian people will awake to a sense that it is their duty, independently and thoroughly, to study political measures, and conscientiously to act on their convictions.

We believe that the sentiment is becoming established not only that Christians have solemn obligations resting upon them, but that when they impress it upon the politicians of the country that bad men and bad measures cannot secure Christian votes, they can largely control the selection of candidates and influence the adoption of measures.

GRATUITOUS CIRCULATION.

In the Earnest Worker for July, Dr. Hazen, the Secretary of Publication, states that "the ministers of our Church receive, free of cost, either for subscription or postage, all our Sabbath-school papers, the total value of this gratuitous circulation being not less than $1,100 per annum." In his annual report to the Assembly it is put at $50 more.

"In the annual report of the Committee of Foreign Missions, the Missionary is said to have been a tax on the mission fund, of $325. But "if it were not that something like a thousand copies are sent gratuitously to ministers, it would not only have been self-supporting the last year, but would have added, two or three hundred dollars to the general missionary revenue." As the subscription to the Missionary is 50c a year, this thousand copies represent $500.

"Thus it appears that $1,650 of the church collections go to furnish the ministers with its papers. Is this a judicious or advisable expenditure? To say the least, it is very questionable. Our ministry are interested in church operations, and ought to have these official organs, and valuable aid. They would cost about one dollar and fifty cents a year. Generally the ministry can pay for them; or they might be sent to any pastor, whose church contributed so much to the committees. If any are unable to pay for them, then supply such from the benevolent gifts of the church; or send an extra copy, provided so many are taken in the church. When only about $8,000 is contributed by the Church for Publication, is it not too large a tax on the work of the committee to send more than eleven hundred dollars' worth of its issues gratuitously to our ministers, not as a charity which is not asked, but to create a wider circulation? A few copies, sent occasionally will advertise their existence, price and value."

Above are given the views of persons who feel that great injustice is done to the causes of Publication and Foreign Missions by the course which is criticised. The presentation is not made in a faultfinding spirit, but for the purpose of bringing the subject prominently before the attention of the Presbyterian public. It will be conceded that the matter on its very face, is of sufficient importance to demand attention, and that the Secretaries so regard it is plain from the prominence which they assign to it.

Some things very proper to be remembered may be overlooked in connection with thought on this subject. First, that in speaking of the circulation among ministers as gratuitous, the term is restricted to mean, not recompensed by a money payment. Dr. Hazen is precise in this. The ministers in general, we must believe, do by service pay many times over, the value of the papers; in fact that this expense, large as it is proportionately, is fully justified, appears from the continuance of the plan, year by year. The Executive Committees have it in their hands to discontinue or to modify as they deem best. If disposed to question the wisdom of their policy, we should not fail to recognize the force of the general truth, that those in charge of any business enterprize, as acquainted with all the circumstances and details and having the advantage of practical experience, are especially qualified to judge and determine as to any policy or course of action. Presuming equal natural power of judgment and equal probity in those who favor and those who oppose any plan, the odds are always vastly in favor of those who have precise information and enlarged experience.

We believe then, that our committees would be glad to have this very serious item of expense reduced, but at the same time they do not see how without serious damage to the causes of the Church they can undertake to reduce it. If this is so those who bring up the subject are doing a good work in pushing the matter forward, and we are assisting by laying it upon the minds of our readers.

If ministers can help by their subscriptions in addition to putting forth their efforts, they will feel that they ought to do so, but those in charge, we venture to say, would esteem it a sad loss to receive a minister's subscription in lieu of his earnest efforts in behalf of the causes referred to.

Some ministers, possibly, receive the issues of our committees as a pure gratuity, making no recompense either in money or service. We can say nothing to break the force of any appeal to the consciences of any such persons; nor would any words from us add stress to the simple call of the facts to their remembrance.

THE NEWSPAPER GUERILLA.

We are consistent advocates of free discussion and our columns are always open to it to any reasonable extent when conducted in a decent manner, but all personalities must be avoided. In these friendly encounters we nail to our masthead the motto, "Principles, not Persons," and the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN will not knowingly publish any communication containing unpleasant personal allusions. There is entirely too much of this sort of thing in the public press, and we intend to make an honest effort to keep our skirts clear of it.

Moreover, we emphasize the fact that all anonymous communications especially should be above the suspicion of personality. Where any writer, over his signature or well known initials, publishes a contribution it is in bad taste for any one to reply under a nom de plume, and it is worse than bad taste, it is positively cowardly, under such cover to insinuate a personal allusion, it is stabbing a man in the dark, and this is a degree of meanness which we cannot tolerate. To allow our columns to be used for such a purpose we consider a prostitution of our high position. In this we will "magnify our office."

We notice in a recent exchange a communication over a nom de plume, in the body of which occurs this grave reflection against one who has held a high office, and in the judgment of his brethren adorned it: "It is well for the Church that 'the relations' of this sophistical preceptor to its candidates have ceased—better for it had they never existed." The connection of the sentences indicates the preceptor as plainly as if his name has been given and when we reach the termination of the article we are confronted with a nom de plume! When such insinuations are uttered thus through the public press, we submit that the party taking the responsibility of so doing should avow himself boldly, and not attack a man under the shelter of a disguise.

PROF. ROBERTSON SMITH.

The Free Church of Scotland hoping to escape trouble by a course of compromise with error, finds itself, as all are like to do under similar action, involved yet deeper in the toils. Professor Smith will again come up before the Assembly, indeed steps have already been taken in that direction, and there is little doubt that the noble Church, which he has so sadly misrepresented will vindicate her honor and the cause of truth by doing the right.

The London Weekly Review thus traverses the new situation:

"For some little time after the decision of the General Assembly it was generally understood that the agitation excited by the proceedings against Professor Smith would gradually subside, and that the Church would be permitted to enjoy again her wonted peace. Doubtless certain leading ministers who were profoundly dissatisfied with the result of the case, meditated the publication of some manifesto to give expression to the principles which they and many of their friends considered to be the verdict of the Assembly. They felt encouraged to take such an unusual step by the consideration that a decided majority of the Assembly had been in reality opposed to Professor Smith's retention of his chair, and that only by a singular and unexpected combination of circumstances in connection with the voting he had got off with a mere admonition. But while the contemplated manifesto was in course of preparation, and was daily expected to make its appearance, a new volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica was published, containing two articles by Professor Smith, one on the "Epistle to the Hebrews," and the other on the "Hebrew Language.', The first article was found to contain nothing peculiarly reprehensible. As might have been expected, however, Pauline authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews is unceremoniously denied in it, and an unrestrained style of critical conjecture is indulged in by the author. But in the second article to the dismay even of his own supporters, there is an exhibition of a kind of criticism which appears to be worse than anything that has yet proceeded from Professor Smith's pen. According to this production Moses had little to do with the composition of the Pentateuch; it is, on the whole, probable that he wrote or arranged the Ten Commandments; but beyond this there is the utmost uncertainty as to the nature and amount of his literary efforts. Thus not merely Deuteronomy, but the books with which it has so long been inseparably connected, may not be literally Mosaic in their origin.

"In a similar destructive style the Professor traverses the whole area of the Old Testament Scripture, knocking down one book after another, and leaving almost nothing whatever standing in its old place. We hesitate to write down what he says of some of the sacred contents of that Bible that was acknowledged by our Lord and His Apostles. Ruth is a lyric; Jonah is a fiction woven round an historical name; the Song of Solomon comes down to us in such a corrupted state that nothing decided can be said about it; Isaiah did not write a great part of the book that goes by his name; the Books of Chronicles are spoken of as poor literary performances; the prophet Amos is complimented as writing in a refined style wonderful in a herdsman; as for the books of Esther and Daniel, they are certainly not what they have been popularly thought to be. All these sweeping judgments, with more of a like kind, unsupported by a particle of solid proof, are given forth with the confidence of a man inspired to proclaim them to the world.

"This startling article was, it is stated, corrected in proof by the author and printed off half-a-year ago. It cannot be said, therefore, that it is a new offence committed by Professor Smith since he was reproved from the chair of the Assembly. But when he stood at the Assembly's bar, and expressed his regret for at least the ungnarded manner in which he had ventilated his critical opinions, he knew that an article he had written, as daring and ungnarded as any of its predecessors, would make its appearance in a few weeks. It may even be fairly surmised that the publication of the volume of the Encyclopædia containing the article was delayed till after the meeting of the Assembly. Now this incident of a new article, as offensive to most of his brethren as any he has yet published, may not substantiate a moral charge against Professor Smith; but it shows him to be obstinately attached to the new style of criticism he has imported from Germany, and to be quite out of sympathy with the Church he is expected to serve. We hoped that after what took place at last Assembly the Free Church would not again be disturbed by the writings of Professor Smith; and we strongly counseled all parties to suspend hostilities and pursue a policy of conciliation. But the Aberdeen Professor is irrepressible, and, we fear, incorrigible. His peculiar criticism, destructive in every sense, has eaten into his constitution, and entered the very marrow of his bones. He has completely isolated himself within his own denomination. He has not persuaded any of his own personal friends and ecclesiastical supporters to embrace his views. The men of his own circle only frame apologies for him and contend for his liberty. The great majority of his ministerial brethren in the Church utterly abominate his peculiar theories, and regard them as either the fruits or the germs of virtual neology. At last Assembly his opponents were in a majority, though they were in a strange way prevented from pronouncing upon him an adverse judgment. As it was, he only escaped deposition from his chair by the narrow majority of seven. No fewer than 292 members of Assembly, in spite of many obstacles thrown in their way, declared that, in their opinion, Mr. Smith was not a fit person to occupy a chair in a Free Church College. And now the publication of another article, that revolts the feelings and convictions of his brethren more deeply perhaps than any of his former publications, has immensely aggravated that want of confidence in him of which he must have long been sensible. It cannot be denied that the Church at large utterly distrusts his judgment and deeply laments his obstinacy. In these circumstances, we wonder that Professor Smith can retain his chair. Many a man in his place would have resigned it long ago, before a tenth part of the suspicion and opposition he has encountered. The orthodoxy and even the critical prudence of a theological professor should be beyond doubt or suspicion. When he is a suspected man, and not without reason, half his usefulness is gone. Only a few weeks ago we charitably hoped that Professor Smith would not in a hurry trouble the Free Church again; but we confess that now we have little hope indeed that he can retain his chair either with credit to himself, or with advantage to the Church whose servant he professes to be, although he is so unwilling to be corrected or to obey orders."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Secular news made up for another paper last week got into the form of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN. The mistake was not discovered until some hundreds of copies were off. Though there was nothing improper in what was thus published, the selection of news may have struck some of our readers as singular. The presumed perplexity of our readers seems to require this explanation.

A friend sends the following as "A FACT":

"A few weeks ago a Methodist minister urged a young man who made application to be admitted into the Presbyterian church in L—: 'Don't let those Presbyterians corrupt you; don't study that Shorter Catechism.' He had himself been taught it by his Presbyterian mother, now deceased."

Ordinarily we cannot publish addresses of any kind, at least in full, but we have been more than once requested to publish the address delivered by Rev. Wm. S. Lacy before the Alumni Association of Davidson College. We are well assured, from reports that have reached us, that the address will prove interesting to our readers and serve to promote the cause of education. If the author will forward us the manuscript the address will be duly served to our readers.

"There is a report made in some of the papers of a college where the professors pushed the boys so hard in their studies that they had really no time for 'athletics,' and the college has not a prize to glitter on the walls of its boat house. It is also said that some parents are inquiring for the name of this college."—Presbyterian.

As to this last we shouldn't wonder.

We clip the following from a letter to the Raleigh News from the venerable E. J. Hale, so well known and so highly esteemed among us:

"In grateful remembrance of my old Scotch friends on the Cape Fear I went up yesterday to Dr. John Hall's church on Fifth avenue and Fifty-fifth street, to hear the latest eminent minister from 'the land o' cakes,' the Rev. Principal Cairns of Edinburgh, and I was well repaid by listening to one of the most able sermons that I remember on 'the Man Christ Jesus, the name that is above every name.' Dr. Cairns is probably more than 60 years of age, with very gray hair, beard and whiskers, of stout frame, strong voice, Scottish accent, and vehement rather than graceful gestures and manner. In movement and in speech he reminded me of his countryman the Rev. Dr. Taylor of the Broadway Tabernacle, who has made so much reputation as preacher and author, and whom, no doubt, many of your readers have heard."

Assuredly the St Louis Presbyterian has brought to the front a matter that ought to be well considered:

"A private note has a sentence that describes what is true in many congregations. It is a reproof to the derelict and an encouragement to the timid. This voice from the pews says: 'In our church there are great possibilities of work and usefulness, if there were only some one to bring them out. We can be got to do almost anything if there were some one of executive ability among us.' And so in other churches there are those who are waiting to be led—those who long to be doing something, and will rejoice if the pastor or elders will only set them at it. Some professors of religion really delight in giving and doing for the kingdom and glory of Jesus Christ. This is a fact! Let pastors and sessions believe, and develop these 'possibilities of work and usefulness.'"

For the benefit of orphans and as a matter of interest we publish the following announcement from Mr. J. H. Mills, Superintendent of the Oxford Orphan Asylum:

"For several months we have been postponing the admission of orphans in order that the Orphan Asylum might be entirely freed from whooping cough and measles. As we now have no contagious disease of any kind, and have discharged a large number of boys and girls, we feel at liberty to invite others, and especially those who have been patiently waiting, to enter at once. So far as we know, we have written private letters of instruction to the friends of all applicants. Correspondence in regard to other orphans is invited."

And while on the subject of the Orphan Asylum we think it well to help in correcting what Mr. Mills introduces under the caption of "Some Mistakes."

"The Orphan Asylum is not 'a home' for young tramps Sometimes children are neglected and mismanaged until they are competent to annoy a whole neighborhood. Then for the public relief they propose to send them to the Orphan Asylum. They ought to be sent to a house of correction. This institution is intended for none but the 'poor and promising.' Children so worthless that no one wants them, are not 'promising.' The Orphan Asylum is not a hospital for diseased children. If they are not able to attend school or are too feeble to study, this is not the place for them.

"The Orphan Asylum is not 'a home' for any one. Children come here to learn, not merely to live. They are not allowed to live here any longer that they are improving.

"The Orphan Asylum is not a finishing school. Let us illustrate: A man worked his orphan niece on the farm till she was engaged to be married. He thought it a shame to let her marry without being able to read. So he brought her here. We told him his conduct was absurd, and the girl could not be content. He begged for a trial which was reluctantly granted. In a few days the girl told us that a man wanted her for a wife, and that she would rather get married than learn a spelling lesson. So she put her foot in the road, forded Tar river, and married her man. That uncle should have sent his niece to the neighborhood school before she was old enough to love the boys."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

We are pleased to see from the Raleigh papers that Rev. Dr. Atkinson, pastor of the Second church of that city, has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to preach.

The eighth annual meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association will be held at Big Rockfish church, Cumberland county, on the first Saturday in August. Maj. James C. McRae of Fayetteville will deliver the address. We acknowledge the courtesy of an invitation to attend.

Hawfields church, in Orange Presbytery, has lost within the past year, two elders—Mr. D. W. Kerr and Dr. Alexander Wilson. These gentlemen were useful and prominent, not only in the church, but in the community in which they lived. Our obituary columns contain Resolutions of Respect to Dr. Wilson.

In a private letter of July 16, Rev. F. H. Johnston writes us:

"Had a very pleasant trip of about a week in Surry and Yadkin. Rev. J. C. Alexander, our agent of Sustentation, was with me. We visited Mount Airy, Elkin and East Bend, preaching at each place to good and attentive congregations. This field is an important one, in view of projected railroad improvements opening to the world one of the finest sections of our State. It has not been occupied by a minister since the death of Bro. Baird, more than two years since. He accomplished much good, and his memory is dear to the feeble Presbyterian flock in Mt. Airy and Elkin. If it can be prevented our Church should not allow the fruit of his labors and of those who preceded him to be lost."

INSTALLATION.

Rev. A. McFadyen writes us: After having served the South River Chapel congregation for nine years as Stated Supply, I was on last Sabbath, in the presence of a large and attentive audience, installed Pastor of that church. Rev. Colin Shaw presided, and with his usual earnestness, preached an appropriate sermon. The charge to the pastor by Rev. James Kelly, was admirable, and Rev. K. McDonald was unusually happy in the delivery of a charge to the people, that I would like to hear repeated in all my churches.

During my term of service as Stated Supply, of this church there has not been a jar between minister and people. We hope by the help of God that the relation just formed, bringing us closer to each other, may be even more pleasant and successful than the past.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Sunday Magazine for August. This capital periodical is again before us. We can only say what we have often said, that it is the best thing of its kind published. 53 57 Park Place, New York.

Appleton's Journal is on the table. August number contains the following: Edge-Tools; Health at Home; Some Thoughts on Shelley; The Influence of Art in Daily Life; German Dialect-Poets; Michael and I; The Historical Characters of the Spanish Stage; Landscape Painting; "The Cook's Oracle;" Goldwin Smith's "Cowper;" Swinburne's "Songs of the Spring Tides;" Captain Oratis' Booty; Briefs on Recent Novels; Editor's Table. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

Mister Horn and His Friends, or Givers and Giving. Standard series No. 32. (Mister Horn—the Mister to be written in full, as if it were part of the name, just as much as the Horn). This is a very good book and is calculated to set the mind on giving as well as getting. It shows the character of a pious man who preaches very good sermons by his godly walk and talk. It is well worth the price, 15 cents. I. K. Funk & Co., New York.

We have from D. Appleton & Co., New York, Memories of My Exile, by Louis Kossuth. All who are interested in the somewhat romantic career of the author will hardly fail to read this book with pleasure. We lay it aside and may refer to it again when we find time to give it more attention.

The Orations of Demosthenes. Vol. 1. I. K. Funk & Co.'s Standard Series, No. 33. Price 20 cents. New York.

Popular Science Monthly for August is before us. Contents: The Kearney Agitation in California; The Interior of the Earth; On the Method of Zadig; The Medicinal Leech; Geology and History, and many other very fine articles. D. Appleton & Co.

S.; Heroes of the Reformation, by Louis M. Gray; Notes of the Day; General Survey. A. D. Randolph & Co., New York.

Scribner's Monthly for August comes to us in a new dress, which we do not consider an improvement. However, it contains some very able articles, and among them are: Our River; About England with Dickens; The Plain Story of Savonarola's Life; Will the French Republic Last? Midsummer; Jim Allthings; The Western Man; The Dominion of Canada; Peter the Great; At Night, and many more which we would like to mention, but have not the room. Scribner & Co., New York.

SOURCE OF PERSONAL BEAUTY.

A beautiful person is the natural form of a beautiful soul. The mind builds its own house. The soul takes precedence of the body, and shapes the body to its own likeness. A vacant mind takes all the meaning out of the fairest face. A sensual disposition deforms the handsomest features. A cold, selfish heart shrivels and distorts the best looks. A mean, groveling spirit takes all the dignity out of the figure and all the character out of the countenance. A cherished hatred transforms the most beautiful lineaments into an image of ugliness. It is impossible to preserve good looks with a brood of bad passions feeding on the blood, a set of low loves tramping through the heart, and a selfish, disdainful spirit enthroned in the will, as to preserve the beauty of an elegant mansion with a litter of swine in the basement, a tribe of gypsies in the parlor and owls and vultures in the upper part. Badness and beauty will no more keep company a great while than poison will consort with health, or an elegant carving survive the furnace fire. The experiment of putting them together has been tried for thousands of years, but with one unvarying result. There is no sculptor like the mind. There is nothing that so refines, polishes and ennobles face and mien as the constant presence of great thoughts. The man who lives in the region of ideas, moonbeams though they be, becomes idealized. There are no arts, no gymnastics, no cosmetics which can contribute a tithe so much to the dignity, the strength, the ennobling of a man's looks as a great purpose, a high determination, a noble principle, and unquenchable enthusiasm. But more powerful still as a beautifier of the person is the overmastering purpose and pervading disposition of kindness in the heart. Affection is the organizing force in the human constitution. Woman is fairer than man because she has more affection than man. Loveliness is the outside of love. Kindness, good will, a prevailing desire and determination to make others happy, make the body a temple of the Holy Ghost. The soul that is full of pure and generous affections fashions the features into its own angelic likeness, as the rose by inherent impulse grows in grace and blossoms into loveliness which art cannot equal. There is nothing on earth which so quickly transfigures a personality, refines, exalts, irradiates with heaven's own impress of loveliness, as a pervading prevailing kindness of heart. The angels are beautiful because they are good, and God is beauty because he is love.—Scottish-American Journal.

JOSEPH R. WILSON, Stated Clerk.

ECLECTICISMS.

ACTIONS THE TEST.

Texas Presbyterian:

A man's actions are a better test than his words of what he really believes. This is everywhere recognized in human affairs. When we see a man thoroughly devoted to any object, we say he believes in it. Because Abraham obeyed God, we have the record that he believed, and that his faith was imputed for righteousness.

WHERE THE DANGER IS.

Covenant:

We hear much of the danger of the Church of Christ! Well, if there is danger, it comes, not in the line of the assaults of Infidelity, but in the failure of its professed members, to live a Christian life. One inconsistent Christian works greater harm than a thousand Ingersolls. And yet he only proves the truth of the doctrine which his life denies!

"The foundation of God standeth sure!"

A BOTTOM FACT.

Ral. Christian Advocate:

We need consecrated piety in the Church. If cold, indifferent Christians would consecrate themselves entirely, the Church would spring into a new and higher life.

A MISTAKE.

United Presbyterian:

It is common to speak of the inefficiency of the eldership and to credit it, also, with a good degree of that Adamic spirit that makes it more a hindrance than a blessing. It is a mistake. There are poor elders, just as there are inefficient ministers and unworthy church members. But taken as a whole, the eldership of the churches is composed of as creditable a set of men as can be collected from those associated in any cause or calling. They are, for the most part, men of intelligence, piety, real concern for the prosperity of the Church and blessing of the people, and in some instances exhibit a zeal and self-denial in the work of the Lord that is an example to many who are disposed to find fault with them.

IT IS WELL.

Zion's Herald:

It is a great and pious work to set men really to thinking for themselves, and to inquiring the relation of national policies to the well-being and perpetuity of the country and to the glory of God. The nation is greater than men, and the rights and happiness of the people are of infinitely higher importance than the spoils of office. It is well to let in the beams of divine truth upon all these themes, and to settle our personal duties in the light of God's countenance.

CULTIVATE CHEERFULNESS.

Presbyterian Journal:

Let a man have a gloomy visage and converse in a dolorous strain, and he soon will be shunned. People don't like to have intercourse with one whose mien is melancholy, and whose very look and manner are marked with a heavy shadow. If it be true that "misery loves company" it is also true that company doesn't love misery. Most persons have trouble and sorrow enough of their own, without being obliged to carry the load of a neighbor.

RESIGNATION.

Baltimore Presbyterian:

Resignation to the will of God is far removed from indifference. The cold optimism which turns away without effort or regret from contemplation of evils, calmly concluding that "everything is for the best" may disguise itself under a pious and Scriptural phraseology, but it is only the cant of a hard heart and sluggish sensibility. True devout resignation lays at the footstool of God's sovereignty burdens which the soul unaided could not sustain. Mere optimism carelessly leaves with God what it is too indifferent to concern itself with. Resignation is the balm of a heart bleeding with sorrows or quivering with earnest sympathy.

FLEE TO HIM.

Sir Henry Havelock:

Flee in your troubles to Jesus Christ. The experience of upward of thirty years enables me to say:—"No man ever had so kind a friend as He, or so good a master. View Him, not at a distance, but as a prop, a stay, and a comforter ever at hand, and He will requite your confidence by blessings illimitable."

PAUL AND NERO.

Paul before Nero! if indeed it was so, what a contrast does the juxtaposition of two such characters suggest—the one the vilest and most wicked, the other the best and noblest of mankind! Here indeed, we see two races, two civilizations, two religions, two histories, two æons brought face to face. Nero summed up in his own person the might of legions apparently invincible. Paul personified the more irresistible weakness which shook the world. The one showed the very crown and flower of luxurious vice and guilty splendor; the other the earthly misery of the happiest saints of God. In the one we see the incarnate Nemesis of past degradation; in the other the glorious prophecy of Christian sainthood.

And now these two men were brought face to face—imperial power and abject weakness; —youth cankered with guilt, and old age crowned with holiness; he whose life had consummated the degradation, and he whose life achieved the enfranchisement of mankind. They stood face to face the representatives of the two races—the Semitic in its richest glory, the Aryan in its extremest degradation. The representatives of two trainings—the life of utter self-sacrifice, and the life of unfathomable self-indulgence; the representatives of two religions—Christianity in its dawning brightness, Paganism in its effete despair; the representatives of two theories of life—the simplicity of self-denying endurance, ready to give up life itself for the good of others, the luxury of shameless Hedonism which valued no consideration, human or divine, in comparison with a new sensation; the representatives of two spiritual powers—the slave of Christ and the incarnation of Antichrist. And their respective positions showed how much, at this time, the course of this world was under the control of the Prince of the Power of the Air—for incest and matricide were clothed in purple, and seated on the purple chair, amid the ensigns of splendour without limit and without control; and he whose life had exhibited all that was great and noble in the heart of man stood in peril of execution, despised, bated, fettered and in rags.—Farrar's St. Paul.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Erskine College, at Due West, S. C. has bestowed the title of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. A. J. Witherspoon, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel at New Orleans.

Items from the Christian Observer:

Rev. David Wills, D. D., has been invited to supply the pulpit of the Lafayette square church, Baltimore, during the summer.

Rev. A. S. Doak writes: "We have just closed a meeting of two weeks' duration at Unity church (Presbytery of Central Texas). We have had a precious revival after a long dearth. Rev. Mr. McMurray, evangelist of Central Texas Presbytery, preached fifteen sermons with the power of the Spirit. There were nine hopeful professions, and Christians were revived and strengthened. We have received four members on profession of faith, and expect to receive others soon."

Rev. Geo. Summey has changed his post-office address from Covington, Ky., to Orange Valley, Essex county, N. J.

Rev. J. C. Molloy writes to us from Owensboro, July 5th: "Yesterday was the day for our summer sacramental service, and the services were of a very interesting character. There were four additions on profession of faith reported since the first of May. Since that time we have also forwarded to Baltimore for Foreign Missions about one hundred and ten dollars."

Rev. L. H. Blanton has accepted the Chancellorship of Central University. Professor Charles Dabney, son of the Rev. Dr. R. L. Dabney, now pursuing a course of study at one of the German Universities, has been elected to the chair of Natural Sciences, for which he is said to have peculiar qualifications, and is expected to enter upon his duties at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. J. McL. Seabrook, a member of the last graduating class in the Columbia Theological Seminary, and a licentiate of Charleston Presbytery, has accepted an invitation to supply the churches of McDowell and Williamsville in Lexington Presbytery. His postoffice address will be McDowell, Va.—Southern Presbyterian.

Items from Central Presbyterian:

At a congregational meeting held July 4th, the Newbern church, Pulaski county, elected the following officers: Ruling elder—J. H. Larew and J. L. Barton. Deacons—H. Howe and Ernst Voge.

Rev. J. W. Hoyt, of Nashville, writes in a note: "I have just returned from a visit to Jackson, Tenn., from assisting brother Witherspoon in a meeting. Forty-eight were added to his church and two to the M. E. Church. Brother McNair, its former pastor, who sowed the seed there so faithfully must rejoice at the ingathering."

NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN.

The Rev. Charles Olmstead Reynolds, a member of the Presbytery of East Florida, died on Saturday night, July 3, in the City of New York. He was born at Hartford, Conn., in 1832, and was educated in Yale College, from which he was graduated. He studied for the ministry, and after a short term of labor at the North he was compelled, in consequence of impaired health, to seek a warmer climate. Going to St. Augustine he took charge of the Presbyterian church there, and for thirteen years served as its pastor.—Presbyterian.

Fifty-eight members in the Chinese Presbyterian church, Oakland, Cal. At the Chinese chapel, San Francisco, five persons were received at last communion.

The Trustees of Wooster University have declared vacant the chair occupied by Professor W. D. Scott, because of heretical utterances. The Philadelphia Presbyterian says: "Professor Scott was for some years pastor of the Arch Street Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, and the announcement has not unnaturally caused much surprise to his many friends in Philadelphia. We know nothing more of this case than we find in the secular newspapers, and we have no knowledge at all of the points in which Professor Scott's teachings are supposed to antagonize the ideas on which Wooster University was founded. It is a Presbyterian Institution, designed to be so with unusual distinctness and closeness. In such an Institution, of course, nothing contrary to the faith of Presbyterians can be taught without gross inconsistency with the purpose for which the University was founded, and the confessed ability and high scholarship of Professor Scott would only make the peril greater. But we are quite in the dark in regard to the grounds of this summary proceeding, and therefore must postpone all judgment concerning it until we have more light.

The Rev. Edward M. Deems was installed as pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church in Thirty-second street, New York, on the afternoon of July 11th. The Rev. Charles F. Deems, father of the incoming pastor, preached the sermon. Dr. Howard Crosby delivered the charge to the pastor, and the Rev. Dr. Erskine N. White the charge to the people.

MORAVIAN.

Rev. Dr. Rondthaler, of the Moravian church at Salem, N. C., is at the Normal School at Chapel Hill, and will lecture on the subject of German schools.—Mt. Airy Times.

LUTHERAN.

Rev. E. A. Wingard has resigned the pastorship of St. Mark's Lutheran church of this city. Mr. Wingard has done a good work Charlotte, N. C., and the people are sorry to lose him.—Southern Home.

At the late convention of the Augustana Synod, held in Des Moines, Iowa, thirteen candidates, most of them from the Swedish Lutheran Theological Seminary at Rock Island, were ordained to the Gospel ministry.

METHODIST.

Mrs. Francis Bronson Wyatt, widow of Rev. Solomon Wyatt, was born in New Castle, Del., in 1771, and is now nearly 109 years old. She is probably the oldest Methodist in the United States. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1800.

Thomas Sackley, Esq., gave a farm of 130 acres near Rhinebeck, N. Y., to the Methodist Conference of New York. Two buildings—on the farm when conveyed—have been put in complete order, and are occupied by two superannuated preachers of the Conference and their families. Two new buildings have just been erected, one for a farmer and the other for a worthy member of the Conference.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist churches in Philadelphia have reduced their indebtedness from $200,000 to about $30,000.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

Several hundred children have died in New York city from the excessive heat. In one day over seventy died.

The building of the Oxford and Henderson Railroad is beyond peradventure. The Raleigh & Gaston R. R. Company has leased it with a view to build and equip it. It is probable the work will be completed very shortly.

Reports from different parts of the country say that the corn and cotton are looking better than in several years. The tobacco is small.—Warrenton Gazette.

An earthquake on Sunday, July 4, was one of the most severe and widespread that has been known in Switzerland for several years. Two persons were killed. Several metres of the summit of Schnebelberg near Quarten fell, overwhelming a large wood.

In many parts of Southern Europe a flour is made from chestnuts, which is said not only to be cheaper but fully equal to wheat-flour in making of bread. A writer from that country states, that in some places wheat-flour and corn-meal are entirely superseded by this product, which is very nourishing, and can be saved two years or longer without injury.

The most terrible storm that was ever witnessed visited this place last Wednesday night, doing slight damage to trees and buildings, the tin roof on the railroad house being torn off; a portion of it was blown a distance of twenty or thirty yards. It is thought the corn crop is seriously injured.—Rocky Mount Progress.

There are 12,000 dentists in the United States, and they pack away half a ton of pure gold annually into the mouth of the American public.

A frog four inches long and one inch in breadth was found in the throat of a kingrail shot at New City. It was alive when drawn from the dead bird.

The Marquis of Bute has been so pleased with his visit to Jerusalem that he has bought a house near the Mount of Olives, which he will fit up as an occasional residence.

An almost perfect house has been discovered at Pompeii. It is in much better preservation than any previously uncovered. The frescoes especially are clear and bright.

The General Cab Company of Paris expect to save $200,000 a year on the feed of their 10,000 horses (without diminishing the necessary nutriment) by adoption of an elaborate plan of analyzing, weighing, measuring and mixing.

Cabarrus was visited by a severe hail storm Wednesday evening, which did much damage. In some places the growing cotton was completely ruined. Hail was found in considerable quantities the morning after it fell —Concord Sun.

Strange that people will suffer so much from dull feelings, the blues and debilitated body, when they can be so surely cured by simply taking a few doses of Simmons Liver Regulator. It will impart new life and vigor to the whole system by purifying the Stomach and regulating the Liver. Could our readers be brought into contact with the host of respectable witnesses who regard Simmons Liver Regulator as the safest and best family medicine for Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, Colic, Sour Stomach and Malarious Fevers, they would no longer wonder at the great fame it has acquired throughout the country.

"As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc, I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

"W. J. McELROY, Macon, Ga"

THE UNATTACHED.

It is one of our Church rules to put on a reserved list the name of every church member who has not been heard from for more than two years. This has been found to be indispensable, in order to keep our rolls in anything like working order. In some churches these lists include as much as thirty-three per cent. of the names actually on the roll. This serves to show what a large number of church members are floating around the country, unattached to any church organization, and consequently useless, to all intents and purposes, for Christian work. We suppose that in most cases this is owing more to neglect than to any criminal purpose. Persons feel unsettled and do not like to form church connections, or perhaps they procrastinate what they feel to be a duty, or else do not like for the moment to bind themselves by obligations which are not attractive; or to assume duties which require time or money, or self-denial. There may be many reasons to induce persons to float around in this manner; at first intending to do so only for a little while, and finally settling down into a habit of neglect which may last as long as they live. A Methodist Bishop some time since observed: "It is astonishing how fast a man will backslide with a church letter in his pocket. A church letter in a man's pocket is good to have. But it does not improve with age. Just the reverse! Its value consists in the fact that it is a link which binds him to the Church. It is a link which weakens with age. The sooner it is put to use the better for him as well as for the Church. There is such great and pressing need of the aid, the moral influence, the faith and sympathy of every Christian, that it is a great loss as well as a great pity for any Christian to remain unconnected with some church organization. Surely if men only would consider how useful they might be, and what a loss it is to the Church to be deprived of their services, they would act differently. We should make it a point to look more carefully after this class. Much good material is going to waste for want of it.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

THOMAS WILLIAMS died on the 17th inst., in Wilmington, N. C., aged 32.

His genial disposition and many manly qualities won for him hosts of friends in Pender county, which was his home, and in Wilmington, where he had many business and social acquaintances.

Years since, young as he then was, Mr. Williams was called to be the counsel and stay of a large family of doubly orphaned brothers and sisters, and nobly he discharged the trust that was laid upon him. A true man, the entire resources of a vigorous mind were united with the energies of a spirit never-tiring and indomitable in the discharge of the duties of life. A friend to those who needed friendship, and a foe to their oppressors, he deserves this tribute to his memory: His was an open hand, and his a loyal heart; he loved the noble and the base he scorned.

In this city, on July 6th, JAMES JACKSON, infant child of Benjamin and Etta Bell. Aged 2 months and 26 days.

In Richmond county, on the 14th of June, Miss NANCY McDONALD, aged about 60 years.

She was for many years a consistent member of Smyrna church. Her life was such as commanded the respect and esteem of all who knew her. We doubt not that she is now enjoying the blessed realization that to depart and be with Christ is far better.

In Marlboro county, S. C., on the 22d of June, Mr. DUNCAN McEACHIN, at an advanced age.

He was for many years a faithful and consistent member of Smyrna church, and we feel the very comfortable assurance that in death he passed from the church militant to the church triumphant. He was a man very highly esteemed by all who knew him. To show their last tribute of respect an unusually large number of persons attended his burial. He was an Israelite indeed in whom there was no guile.

At Haw River, N. C., on the 7th inst., ROBERT H. MOORE, in the 33d year of his age.

This is the fifth son his afflicted mother has buried in the prime of their manhood—three within the compass of a year. She has the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

The last few weeks of his life exhibited a marked change. He died professing a strong faith in the mighty Saviour who is able to save unto the uttermost. His favorite hymn, which was sung by request at his funeral, indicates the great change in his feelings:

"In evil long I took delight,
Unawed by shame or fear,
Till a new object struck my sight,
And stopped my wild career."

B. W. M.

In Richmond county, on the 22d of June, Miss HARRIET DIXON McCALL, aged 21 years.

We have rarely ever seen a young person more entirely resigned to the will of God in affliction and in the face of death than was the subject of this notice. About fifteen months previous to her death she made a public profession of her faith in Christ, and was received into full communion in Smyrna church. Although her membership with the visible church was of short duration, yet we feel that she had reached a degree of spiritual maturity, not reached by many who have been consistent members of the church for years. She spent much of her time in the reading and study of the Bible. With her the 23d Psalm was a special favorite, and it was while this Psalm was being read to her that she quietly passed through the valley of the shadow of death, fearing no evil, for the Lord her Shepherd was with her.

"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

At his residence, in Cross county, Ark., June 26, Mr. JAMES S. MEBANE, son of the late Dr. John A. Mebane, of Greensboro, N. C., aged forty-eight years.

At Union Springs, Ala., June 23, in the twenty-second year of his age, ARTHUR FOSTER, son of S. J. and V. C. Foster. Deceased has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church for seven years. Having graduated at Davidson College, he had just entered upon a life full of promise. But the Master called, and he has now entered upon a life full of glory.

PASTOR.

Mrs. ASENATH MORGAN GIBBS, the beloved wife of the Rev. George M. Gibbs, entered into rest on the 28th of May, 1880, in the 58th year of her age, at Cameron, N. C.

Mrs. Gibbs was the daughter of John W. and Mrs. T. H. Morgan, of Rocky River church, and here in her early life, when she was only twelve years of age, she united with the church of Christ under the pastoral care of Rev. Daniel Lindley. For more than forty-five years she walked in the footsteps of Jesus, and illustrated His redeeming and satisfying grace. Growing year by year in meekness and heavenly-mindedness, useful and beloved in the chosen service of the Master, she became more and more ripe for her reward, and meet for heaven. Thankful that for so long a time she was spared to serve in God's house below, let not those who mourn her departure murmur that God has called His loved and faithful servant to Himself, to dwell in His home above.

Nature had given attractions, in engaging sweetness of person and manner, and that indescribable charm that won and retained friends. And grace had done more in exalting and refining these powers, and securing a hearty and happy consecration of them to her Saviour. Under trial and affliction she was patient and submissive. Her temperament was cheerful and buoyant. And duty was the motive of her life. She was wise and prudent in her Christian intercourse, thoughtful and attentive to the wishes of others. She delighted in prayer, in secret devotion and in the services of the sanctuary. She was faithful in her religious duties, and possessed the rare and happy faculty of so introducing the subject of religion in her conversation with young people as to win their attention to it, and their love for her. She exercised great influence over the young, and was devoted to any enterprise for their good—the Sabbath School especially, in which she was eminently useful and successful—and she was honored of God in bringing many to Him.

Mrs. Gibbs in all the relations of life she was called to sustain, discharged her duty with commendable fidelity. In the trying position of a minister's wife, how well she seconded her husband's efforts, how prudently and usefully she lived, all bear witness in the different communities where her lot was cast. The little church at Cameron is afflicted sorely in her removal, and must greatly miss her. As a mother God blessed and rewarded her. She had the great pleasure of seeing all her children professedly believers in Christ. For this she had prayed and labored, and in this she felt that God had "regarded the prayer of His handmaiden." When the last united with the Church she gave thanks to God, and claimed it as a special answer to her ardent prayers. Her tender love, her thoughtful counsel, her earnest believing prayer, how sorely they will miss.

May God comfort him from whom He has removed "the light of his eyes," and the children from whom a faithful and affectionate mother is taken, and many dear friends in many places, who all mourn their loss, and rejoice in her gain.

"The actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust."

Her memory is blessed.

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, write blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

IN MEMORIAM.

After morning service on July 11th, in Washington, N. C., a congregational meeting was held, with Mr. James L. Fowle in the chair, and the following preamble and resolutions unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

This congregation has recently sustained a loss such as rarely befalls any church. On the 26th of June Mr. JOSEPH POTTS passed from the church militant to the church triumphant. He had entered upon his 85th year, and since early manhood he had been identified with this town and community in all its interests, social, business, and religious, and in all he was prominent. His amiable, social disposition won the love of a large circle of friends; his diligence and success in business commanded unqualified respect; and his irreproachable integrity of character wielded an influence in the community such as is rarely equaled. He was the last survivor of the little band that in 1823 petitioned the organization of this church, and from that time to the day of his death he was deeply interested in all that concerned its welfare, and zealous in every good word and work to promote its progress. He was early elected one of its ruling elders, and this high office he held and adorned for the unusual period of 51 years. His life was conspicuous not only for earnest, consistent piety, but also for eminent Christian activity. In addition to the duties of an elder he has frequently performed the functions of a pastor in lecturing for the congregation on Sabbath morning and evening, and in conducting the weekly prayer-meetings during those periods when the church was without the stated preaching of the Word. God has now called him from the scene of his labors to his reward in "the rest that remaineth to the people of God," and while we recognize His hand, and bow with submission to His sovereign will, we cannot but feel sorely bereaved as a congregation and as individuals, and mourn that we shall see his face no more upon earth; and we pray that by the grace of God we may be able to follow his lofty Christian example and meet with him in "the General Assembly and Church of the First-born which are written in heaven."

Therefore be it resolved. 1. That while we mourn most deeply such a loss as the death of this venerable Christian patriarch, we thank God for his long, godly life of active usefulness; for the legacy of his noble example and his earnest prayers; and for the assurance we have of his blessed rest after his long, laborious life.

2. That we sympathize deeply with his family to the third generation, bereaved in the loss of the venerated head and patriarch of their household.

3. That a tablet be erected to his memory upon the walls of our church building, and that Messrs. Jas. L. Fowle, G. H. Brown, Sr., and John R. Ross be appointed a committee for this purpose.

4. That a copy of this paper be furnished to his family, and forwarded to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

ADOPTED BY THE SESSION OF HAWFIELDS CHURCH, JULY 10TH, 1880.

Whereas, God has in His infinite wisdom removed from our midst our esteemed Brother A. WILSON, M. D., a ruling elder in this church, and in view of the grievous and irreparable loss that we as a session, the church of which he was a member, and the community in which he lived, have sustained, therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That while we deeply deplore his loss both to the church and the community, and sympathize with his family in their sad bereavement, yet we would endeavor to bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and whose chastisements are sent in mercy.

Resolved, 2. That he served his church and Sabbath School with fidelity and acceptance, till he became too feeble to attend to the duties of life.

Resolved, 3. That this heartfelt testimonial of our esteem, sorrow and sympathy be spread upon the minutes of the Session, and a copy be sent to the family of our deceased brother, and to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN with a request to publish.

By order of Session. S. K. SCOTT, Clerk.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer restores both the hair and its color, increases and thickens its growth.

It appears from the catalogue of Charlotte Female Institute for session 1879-'80 that the total number of pupils for the past session was 146, the largest number ever in attendance since the war; making it, as the catalogue claims, the most successful of the twenty-three years of its history. Nineteen of these pupils were from South Carolina. Alabama, Mississippi, and New York were also represented. The catalogue also announces that there is in connection with the Charlotte Female Institute a fully equipped Cooking School under the supervision of Mrs. Helen C. Campbell.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Shadows.

A little word—soon spoken,
In petulance and pain—
A golden link once broken
And never whole again.

Upon the brow a shadow,
Upon the lip a play,
The wealth of El Dorado
Can never buy away.

A shaft of sin and sorrow,
From heart to heart of love—
And O, the sad to-morrow
And the one heaven above!

O why should the true-hearted
Be to its own unkind,
Why should sweet love be parted
And scattered to the wind?

O why to all so smiling
Save to the one alone—
And other hearts beguiling,
But that we call our own?

O mystery of loving—
O awful, tearful way,
That lingers in the shadow
And trifles with the day.

Who are "Poor-Folks."

Polly was a bright and beautiful child, who, with a brother older than herself, carried home the laundry work to her mother's patrons. She was always neatly dressed, and had a happy smile and a cheerful voice.

One day Polly carried home some fine laces to a lady in a hotel. The servant told her the lady was ill, and could not be disturbed; but Polly had had strict orders not to trust her package to any one else; so she ventured to go up stairs.

She stood at the door for a moment, and then tapped very lightly, saying to herself, "If she is asleep, that won't wake her, and if she's awake, she will answer."

In a moment a low voice asked, "Is that you, Bridget?"

"No, ma'am," replied Polly, putting her lips very close to the key-hole, and speaking in a loud whisper, "It's Paulina Brown, that folks call 'Little Polly.' I have a very particular message for you, and I won' disturb you a bit if you will let me in."

The lady could not help saying, "come in," in answer to this modest request.

She was in trouble, and that had caused her a sick headache. She lay there all alone in a darkened room, with no one to care whether she got better or not.

Polly had just come from a bright, sunny room, with a gay rag carpet on the floor, and bright flowers growing in the windows; and this room, with its heavy draperies, looked gloomy to her. She went up to the bed, and gave her message in a low, soft voice, and then said, "Oh, Mrs. Ball, I'm so sorry for you! You haven't any husband or little girl to comfort you when you are sick! My mother has father, and Tommy, and me, and baby. Sometimes when she has her tired headaches I can drive them off just with my own hands and a little bay water. I don't suppose you would let me sit upon your nice bed and bathe your head, would you?

"Yes, Polly; I am always glad to have such a tidy little girl near me. You will find bay water in that pink bottle on the bureau," said Mrs. Ball.

While the little, soft hands were passing over her troubled brow the lady said, "Polly, I think your family are the happiest 'poor people' I ever met."

"Oh, Mrs. Ball, we're not 'poor people,'" cried Polly with a queer laugh. "There are three poor families in our house, but we are rich—almost. We were rich once, and had half a house, though we're not so rich now, since father lost his arm; but as mother can do up lace so beautifully we're pretty rich, still! We do lots of things to help the poor folks in the house, and other poor folks, too!"

"What can you do for them? "asked the lady.

"Oh, we save Mrs. Crane's coal by letting her steep her tea in our kitchen—days that she can keep warm by sitting in the sun—and we take care of Mrs. Barnes', baby, whenever she gets a lady's work and mother always makes broth enough on Wednesdays to share with some one that's poor."

"Who do you call 'poor folks,' Polly?" asked the lady.

Polly had no definition ready; but after thinking for a moment she replied, "Poor folks are folks that don't have everything they want."

"Then you have everything you want?" asked Mrs. Ball.

"Yes, ma'am," replied Polly, innocently. "We all have Sunday clothes besides our common ones; and we have good things to eat—mother bakes all our bread and pies, herself—and we have a real kitchen to work and eat in—without a bed in it, like poor folks—and we buy a whole ton of coal at once, instead of lots of bushels!"

And so little Polly prattled on in a low, pleasant voice, till the lady really felt better, and said so. "I'll tell you what's another real good thing to drive the rest of it off—air and sunlight—mother never shuts up for a headache," said the little nurse.

Here Polly looked at the bronze clock, and said, 'it's time now for the baby to wake up, and I shall have to go as soon as I let in a little of my sun and air; but I'll come in any time when you have the headache, and cure you again."

"Thank you, my good little girl; you have almost cured me now," said Mrs. Ball. "In my closet you will find a large paper bag full of oranges; take them home, and share with the 'poor folks' in your house."

The rich little girl ran home in glee to divide her treasures with the less fortunate.

The poor lady lay alone to reflect on the lesson she had just received. She had lost twenty thousand dollars, but she had thirty thousand [illegible]; and, instead of being thankful for that, was bewailing her fate, as if she were next to a pauper! She would still have all the comforts, although a few less of the luxuries, of life; and, as she remembered now, no one but herself would suffer by the change, for she had never "helped the poor folks in the house," nor out of it, as Polly's mother was doing.

"Poor folks," she said to herself, "are folks who haven't everything they want. I haven't that twenty thousand dollars, and I never can have it again. But I can learn to be happy on less, and to share even what I have with others."

A ray of "Polly's sun" peeped in, and a breath of her pure air was wafted toward her; and she rose, saying, "Because I have lost some of my fortune I need not therefore throw away my health, the best of all my blessings."

In Polly's sense of the word, the poor are often found amid elegance and luxury, and the truly rich in humble dwellings.—Sel.

No!

"No!"

Clear, sharp and ringing, with an emphasis which could not fail to arrest attention.

"I don't often hear such a negative as that," remarked one gentleman to another as they were passing the playground of a village school.

"It is not often any one hears it. The boy who uttered it can say 'yes,' too, quite as emphatically. He is a new-comer here, an orphan, who lives with his uncle about two miles off. He walks in every morning, bringing his lunch, and walks back at night. He works, enough, too, to pay his board, and does more towards running his uncle's farm than the old man does himself. He is the coarsest-dressed scholar in school and the greatest favorite. Everybody knows just what to expect of him."

"Quite a character. I should like to see him. Boys of such sturdy make-up are getting to be scarce, while the world never had more need of them than now."

"All that is true; and if you wish to see Ned come this way."

They moved on a few steps, pausing by an open gate near which a group of lads were discussing some exciting question.

"It isn't right and I wont have anything to do with it. When I say no, I mean it."

"Well, any way, you needn't speak so loud and tell everybody about it," was responded impatiently to this declaration.

"I am willing everybody should hear what I've got to say about it. I won't take anything that don't belong to me, and I won't drink cider any way."

"Such a fuss about a little fun! It's just what we might have expected. You never go in for fun."

"I never go in for doing wrong. I told you no, to begin with. And you're the ones to blame if there's been any fuss."

"Ned Dunlap, I should like to see you a minute."

"Yes, sir." And the boy removed his hat as he passed through the gate and waited to hear what Mr. Palmer might say to him.

'Has your uncle any apples to sell?'

"No, sir. He had some, but he has sold them. I've got two bushels that were my share for picking. Should you like to buy them, sir?"

"Yes, if you can agree upon the price. Do you know just how much they are worth?"

"Yes, sir."

"All right, then. I will call for them, and you may call at my house for the pay."

This short interview afforded the stranger an opportunity to observe Ned Dunlap closely. The next day a call was made at his uncle's, and although years elapsed before he knew what a friend he had gained that day, his fortune was assured. After he had grown to manhood and accepted a lucrative position, which was not of his seeking, he asked why it had been offered him.

"Because I knew you could say 'no' if occasion required," answered his employer. "'No' was the first word I heard you speak, and you spoke it with a will. More people, old and young, are ruined for want of using that word than from any other cause. They don't wish to do wrong, but they hesitate and parley until the tempter has them fast. The boy or girl who is not afraid to say 'no' is reasonably certain of making an honorable man or woman."

"Yes" is a sweet and often a loving word.

"No" is a strong, brave word, which has signaled the defeat of many a scheme for the ruin of some fair young life.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Bank Notes.

The use of paper money—of the ticket or bank note instead of coin—brings many advantages to a country. In the first place, for the same work it is a tool immensely cheaper. A sovereign costs twenty shillings to make; a bank note less than sixpence; yet they render the same identical service in enabling the exchange of commodities to proceed. The nation saves 19s. 6d. upon every bank note in circulation; that is, it retains as capital for the increase of wealth the goods which would have been sent abroad to purchase gold required for currency. This is a saving amounting to many millions of pounds, a clear addition to the working capital of the country. Further, a bank note is much easier to carry, and far more capable of being kept in safe custody. It is easy to conceive the embarrassments which would arise if heavy sovereigns had to be produced where payments are now made with notes, sometimes of £1,000 each. How many thieves would be lurking about, how many clerks to count, how much ringing on the counter to make sure the coins were made of gold. Then the bank note, by the help of the number it bears, affords great security against accidents and theft; it can be stopped at the bank, and, upon security being given, will be paid as if it had been presented. It can be no wonder if bank notes circulate largely in civilized countries.—Fraser's Magazine.

Maximilian's Remains.

In the very heart of Vienna, near the great market place where the peasants sell their vegetables and the butcher his meat, stands the Church of the Capuchins. It is an exceedingly common-place looking structure, and there are far nobler looking churches on every square. Its architecture is a mixture of all that is bad and distasteful. But down in its deep vaults repose the bodies of Austria's emperors, and its long line of archdukes and princes. The place is damp with the mildew of centuries, and the silver urns that contain the royal dust are black with age. Marie Theresa and her beloved "Franz" repose side by side in a double sarcophagus; and at their feet are the coffins of their children. History records that for thirteen years the disconsolate empress descended daily into this vault to weep by the coffin of her husband "gone before." Being angered at one of the little princes of her household one day, she sent the poor child down into this same damp sepulchre to atone for its misconduct. The child obeyed the command, but fainted at the dismal solemnity of the tomb, and was brought away insensible by the good Capuchin brothers. In a lonely corner is seen the simple coffin of the Countess Fuchs, the only person not of royal lineage interred here. She was the favorite instructress of Marie Theresa, who bestowed upon her the empty honor of a grave with princes.

But we care not for these remains of a despotic race of rulers. They opposed liberty and reform when living—we cannot respect their ashes. In a far off corner of the vault lies a coffin which has something to do with the history of our own time. It stands alone, and upon it are evergreens, crucifixes and other offerings, showing that the royal occupant has but just come to his narrow home in the tomb of his ancestors. It is the mortal remains of Maximilian—"Maximilian of Mexico," as the boastful Austrians have inscribed upon the coffin. Above waves the Mexican flag, and over all the eagle of that unfortunate country spreads its wings. What a mockery! Even in death the proud Hapsburgs do not acknowledge defeat.

What thoughts arise, as we stand in this royal vault, by the side of this richly wrought coffin, covered with orders and insignia unknown to us! We think of the day when twenty thousand people went to Miramar to see a vessel sail westward. Then comes vividly to mind the long struggles of Mexico; the conflicting rumors and uncertain news we read at home, and finally how the unhappy country threw off the yoke of the invader. Then of the morning when the unfortunate victim of political intrigue went forth to execution, and giving a handful of gold to the guard, begged that the bullet might do its work well. That shot resounded through the halls of the Tuileries and of Schonbrunn, and echoed along the rocky beach of Miramar. We pity the poor dust before us, for the ill-fortune of its life, because it was the puppet and victim of European politics.

We hasten out of the damp vaults of the Capuchins. Westminster and Sante Croce interest and please, because in their niches are monuments to men of piety, genius and learning. But there is naught here but the mortal parts of the proud and oppressive Hapsburgs.—Boston Journal.

Highland Character.

Two brothers of the name of McCallum had, like Abraham and Lot of old, agreed to set up their tents in different parts of Scotland—one choosing Craignish, and the other Knapdale, as his place of rest. There they lived for many years, and had sons and daughters born unto them who in turn had also their olive sprouts, till each of the old men had a numerous following of his descendants. All this time they had no personal communication with each other, and about the same period the idea occurred to both of the octogenarians to pay his brother a visit before he died. Accordingly they set out, each followed by thirty of his sons and their children, all smart young men, and, passing through their respective districts, by a sad fortuity, arrived at the same moment on opposite banks of the little brook at Achabhean. Here, according to the Highland etiquette, each party called upon the other to make way and allow their betters to pass, and equally as a matter of course, each replied by a similar polite request. In such a state of matters there was but one arbiter—the sword; and as every man was fully armed, to it they set and fought with such fury that ere long every one on both sides was hors de combat except two old men. As these, with sad hearts and trembling limbs, approached each other to finish the game, one of them suddenly said, "We are both old, why should we cut short the few days that remain to us? Has there not been enough of mischief done? Pass if you please, my pride is humbled with the fall of my brave sons, the flower of the MacCallums of Craignish." Upon this the other discovered that his antagonist was his brother, and, making himself known, the two sat down, and, with bitter lamentations, mingled their tears with the blood of their offspring, with which the little stream ran red.

Parisian Marriages

The preliminaries are generally arranged between the two families with the help of the notaries; less often the marriage is more romantic and springs purely from love, in which case the traditional steps of courtship and marriage are much modified. Supposing however, that a marriage has been recognized as advisable between two families, the first thing to do is to arrange an interview between the young folks For this purpose some neutral ground is generally chosen—a reception at a friend's house, a concert, a ball or the theatre. The opera is preferred by the world of fashion; the opera-comique is popular with the bourgeois and the provincials. The young man sits in the orchestra and the young girl, dressed in her best, is placed in front of a box. Between the acts the young man pays a visit to the box and is presented. The next day he pays a visit to the father and makes a formal demand of the young lady's hand. If he is accepted he begins to pay court to the young girl. Every day, at this stage of the proceedings, the young man is admitted to the house of his future as though he were one of the family. He is called by his Christian name. The day after the accordailles or his acceptation by the family, he presents his future with a ring, always the same one pearl, or two pearls mounted with two diamonds. You may see these rings by the score in the jewelers' shops. Every day, too, he sends a boquet of flowers. Nowadays these boquets are splendid, and cost a small fortune, for it is the custom to envelope them with lace, which is sometimes replaced by watered ribbon on which the name of the young girl is embroidered. In aristocratic families the first person to whom the marriage is announced is the Pope, who sends his benediction by telegraph on the day of the ceremony at the church. The mother, accompanied by her daughter, visits her friends in order to inform them of the happy news. In Mme. de Sevigne's days a young girl's wedding trousseau only contained three dresses. In the year of grace 1880 a wedding trousseau in high life is a very grand affair, and comprises twelve dresses all made up, with stockings, shoes, sunshades and hats to match. The trousseau, together with the linen, is worth from 20,000 to 50,000 francs. In the trousseau of the Princess Isabella de Groy, the wife of the Archduke Frederick of Austria, all the linen is counted by the gross. There are twelve dozen of everything. The wedding presents, the corbeille, are no longer sent in a basket covered with bows and ruches of ribbon. The modern corbeille is a piece of furniture, a chiffonier, a work-table, or what-not. A few presents only are placed in it and the rest are sent. A purse full of gold is always hidden in one of the drawers; it is the share of the poor, the charity purse. It is no longer the custom for the bridegroom to present the traditional Cashmere shawl. That has gone out of fashion. The corbeille of high life now contains two lace dresses, one white and one black, two velvet dresses not made up, two or three satin dresses, mantles and sorties de bal. Fans of all degrees of splendor, scent-bottles, a necessaire and card-case are indispensible. Bibelots, too, are represented in the corbeille by groups in Saxe, Louis XV. chatelaines, fans painted by Watteau, or any agreeable and precious knick-knack which the fancy of the bridegroom can suggest and the curiosity shops furnish. On everything the young lady's crest, motto, and monogramme figure, and on her church service her armorial bearings with all their quarterings will be displayed au grand complete. In the matter of jewelry we may add that pearls are now esteemed higher than diamonds. A necklace of pearls of five rows is worth 50,000 francs or 100,000 francs. It is no longer the custom to exhibit on the day of signing of the contract the presents given to the bride by her friends and relatives. In England they publish the list of the presents and their donors in the Court Journal and the local newspapers.—N. Y. World.

SECULAR NEWS.

A friend writes us from Bladen county: "Our farmers in this section are now very hopeful. God in His great goodness has been refreshing our parched fields with abundant showers."

One of the best farmers in the county told us one day this week that the wheat crop this year was larger than any crop in the county since the war. And further, that the prospects for a splendid corn crop were very flattering.—Louisburg Times.

Mr. Benj. Fulford of Hyde county informs us that the crops in that section are looking extremely fine, and at this time bid fair for an unusually large yield.—Newbernian.

The Wilkesboro Index publishes the death of Mr. Richard Allen, who was born ninety-four years ago at the place where he died, and was perhaps the oldest Mason in North Carolina, having joined Old Liberty Lodge, No. 45, in the town of Wilkesboro 72 years ago. Four Masonic lodges attended the burial services.

Col. Junius I. Scales, Senator from Guilford county, died at the Presbyterian Hospital, N. Y., last week. His remains were taken to Greensboro and interred Wednesday. General A. M. Scales, his brother, was with him at the time of his death.—Raleigh Visitor.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

OBLIGATIONS OF THE COUNTRY TO INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING.

WHAT DAVIDSON COLLEGE HAS DONE.

[Address before the Alumni Association of Davidson College, by Rev. Wm. S. Lacy.]

I congratulate you on the return of this annual reunion. It is a pleasure to meet and greet friends tried and true; to receive and extend warm welcomes, and to have the encouragement of so many interested auditors. On behalf of the Alumni Association, we cordially welcome this vast audience, and I desire especially to embrace the ladies, I mean include them, in this invitation. Our pleasure in this annual festival is chastened, however, as all our sublunary joys are, by memories of those who meet no more with us; whose hearty grasp and kindly salutation we sadly miss. The shadow comes even in the sunniest day, but life's path is beautiful, though it be darkened with clouds.

It is a subtle bond that unites us. It is not community of pursuit, or of methods of life, or of modes of thought. It is not the tie of party, or of patriotism, or of belief. It is that chord, tender, strong and enduring, that binds a household. Association in literary pursuits (which, like a quaint odor, is so suggestive of most sacred recollections), the friendships of college days; the obligation of affection to the institution that qualified us for life—these link us to these sacred scenes, and to one another. Our meeting, then, today, is a gathering of the scattered children at the homestead, wonderfully freshened and knitted since some of us quitted these scenes, but still the same old home. How glad is Alma Mater to welcome her returning sons! The good dame has put on her best gown—her newest lawn—and with smiles greets us on this festive occasion. And as we assemble under her ample and hospitable roof-tree, it is, I take it, to commune with her and with one another.

This is, as I understand it, our object in this assembly. It is a festival more of the heart than of the head. We have met, not to air our learning, not to display our garnered knowledge, not to reveal the gathered wisdom and experience of years, not to boast of our trifling attainments, nor with a "petty board of maxims," to make this hour tediously profitable,—oh! no—but to renew the associations of earlier and happier years, when life was young and sweet, when

> "The earth and every common sight
> To us did seem
> Appareled in celestial light—
> The glory and the freshness of a dream."

We have met, rather, to kindle again the flame of filial love and fraternal affection; to visit the fount of Helicon and hear the silvery tinkle of its enchanting water, and view again the sacred groves of Delphi.

The occasion and purport of this assemblage, then, suggest the theme of our conference, of our free and familiar colloquy as brothers. Turning from the seductive attractions of classic story, of English letters, or of scientific research, my heart selects, and a feeling of gratitude prompts me to speak of, what is due to our mother. I shall therefore direct your attention to the general theme of

THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE COUNTRY TO INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING."

Even in this quiet retreat of literature and study we may hear the great roar of the busy world. The waves of party passion beat in ceaseless rage, and in remote homes we hear the crash of the breakers. Whether we wish it not, we cannot but be deafened by the storm, or splashed with the spray of politics. This must needs be, because of the constitution of our governmental fabric.

Lord Lyndhurst, a native of Boston, and Josiah Quincy were schoolfellows in that ancient town. In after years, when both had risen to great eminence, in bantering raillery as one said to the other, "I went to England, the mother of arts and the nurse of greatness; I won fame and a title, and now I am a lord." "But I," said Quincy, with severe majesty, "remained in America, and am King." It is because each brow is crowned with such sovereignty that to each of us appertain obligations as citizens in the choice of rulers. The more that rule, that exert influence, are, as a general rule (mark the statement), educated men—men who have been trained for life at our collegiate institutions.

And I emphasize this point, as there is such a general clamor about "self-made men," "men of the people," when all of us come from the people, as if "self-made men" meant uneducated men, or as if peculiar honor or virtue attached to such. I would not detract from their well-earned laurels. It may happen, and it does sometimes, that there are those whose gigantic minds override all difficulties of circumstance, whose lofty ambition or loftier energy has brought them coveted reward, and triumphantly overborne all adverse obstacle. Such, however, are acknowledged and conspicuous exceptions. Nor would I be understood as deprecating that system that makes it possible for merit to win, even from the lowest ranks, the sweets of station and applause. The humblest in our favored land may, by his own strong will and earnest exertion, rise to eminence and power. These are the men that "constitute a state."

Yet the remark remains true: The country is indebted for its leaders in thought and action, for its political rulers, its legislators, its judicial and executive officers, to the institutions of learning throughout the land. It is a matter of fact, whatever notable instances to the contrary we may remember, that of the public men of North Carolina there are but two or three in the front rank who are not graduates of some institution of learning. It is a matter of fact that of the present Congress all-but about fourteen per cent. are men of liberal education, graduates of colleges and universities, and many eminent for literary attainments. It is a matter of fact (I use this by way of illustration) that in the British Parliament, notwithstanding hereditary sittings, a less number than six per cent. are not college-bred men. And in the annals of the State of North Carolina, of those who have filled its highest offices—that is, of its Governors, Senators and Members in Congress and Judges—more than eighty per cent. have been educated in incorporated institutions of letters, and received the diploma of some college.

Now, these statements have increased significance when we consider the proportion of educated men to those uneducated. And by educated I cannot of course mean a thoroughly educated man, for a German scholar would smile contemptuously at the term, and the thing meant thereby in this country. But I mean who has enjoyed the liberalizing influence of a college course, and has been taught to think, as distinguished from one who has not had such advantage. I have seen no statistics that may throw light on this; but I do not doubt that I am in reason when I say the proportion may be as small as one in twenty, and is not more than one in ten. If I have erred in this it is on the side of abundant caution. But this moiety, this insignificant part of the multitude, furnishes the leaders and rulers of the many.

Therefore if government be wisely administered,—if prosperity follows the prudent control of those in power—if principle, honor, integrity are maintained—may we not say that the country is under great obligation to the institutions of arts and literature that have furnished them these wise guides and competent rulers?

A word more as to the political significance and value of college-trained men. Is it not true that public sentiment is largely though quietly moulded by the thinking minds of every community? Are there not those whose profession or whose tastes forbid the handling of party machinery, yet whose influence and opinion affect the popular will?

And here I am tempted to suggest a thought it seems to me of sufficient importance to atone for the digression. Much is said in favor of popular education—"the education of the masses." The argument is, as the people are kings, are rulers, let them be made competent rulers—therefore support the common schools. I fully and heartily accept the situation. I insist that it is a necessary rather than merely a very desirable thing that the opportunities of education may be made abundant and free. And yet I cannot but ask, how much of the three, viz.: reading, writing and arithmetic, how much of what is termed a common-school education is needed to qualify the average voter to decide on questions of tariff or financial policy? I venture to assert that the true theory is that education begins at the top rather than the bottom. It is the most truly popular education, (that is, the education that is best for the people) that affords the best and highest possible training for the few, for the many if you choose, so that the multitude may receive from well-tutored and wisely-stored minds the most needful knowledge. And this is the view of such eminent leaders of the people as John Bright and Thomas Hughes, and of that accomplished scholar, in spite of his fanaticism, Charles Sumner. The people of the South have ever exerted a vast political power, and have exercised their franchise with majesty and effect. They learned their lessons of eminent political wisdom from the lips of great statesmen on the hustings—from men thoroughly informed on questions of public policy and thoroughly competent to teach the people. No man ever had a more intelligent constituency than John Randolph, of Roanoke, and it was his eminent abilities and exalted attainments that largely made them so. The sun gilds the mountain top before he glorifies the mists that sleep in the valley, and kisses the lofty plume of the pine ere he smiles on the modest face of the violet that blooms at its root. The pure stream rises in the higher places, and thence flows onward gladdening the land as it passes. Greener herbage marks its progress, while fair flowers and trees of rich fruitage and heavy foliage, and luxuriant harvests of waving wealth indicate its power and beneficence.

This leads me to remark as a further evidence of the indebtedness to institutions of learning on the part of the country, that to the skilled corps sent forth from their walls, is due in large measure the preservation of the social fabric. The support of local private schools—the most intelligent attention to public schools and the real wants of the poorer classes—the diffusion of information among the people on important subjects—the judicious consideration and defense of matters of public policy in morals, sociology and manners, all these and like valuable adjuncts to social order, are dependent upon those who issue from halls of learning. That "noble army of martyrs,"—(I speak it with becoming reverence,)—that corps of unappreciated benefactors of the race, to wit the teachers of schools of all grades, is largely drawn from college graduates. The learned professions also recruit their ranks from those who have pursued the arts and sciences.

And here let me remark; what a pity it is, that it is ever thought that only those who pursue professional studies should seek a liberal education? The merchant, the farmer, the banker, the manufacturer, the mechanic alike and all need the advantages of a college course. A sneer is cast at book-farming, and experience and practice are proclaimed to be all that is necessary. Now it takes very slender powers of intellect to discern, that experience and practice grafted on a cultivated mind, on powers of discrimination and judgment thoroughly trained, are worth more in any calling, than when added to a memory unstored, to a reason undisciplined, and a soul not awakened by culture. As well cast seed on ground unploughed, and say that because here and there a stalk of wheat grows, that there is no use in preparing the ground for the crop desired.

But then it must be remembered that a man is something more than a banker or a miller. He is a citizen under obligation to his country and his God. He is a husband, or he ought to be, for I hold that a man is but a half-man who does not love and provide for somebody's daughter. He is a member of society. The happiness of his wife, the culture of his children, the wise exercise of civil prerogatives, the extension of useful knowledge, the defence of Christian truth, demand of him that he should be the very best man it is possible for him to be. He leaves his apron at his bench, and his pen and blotters at the counting-desk, when he takes his place in society.

This is an eminently practical age. Knowledge is not only power, but knowledge is money. Science is applied to every-day life. Processes for shortening and cheapening labor, inventions fruitful of usefulness, and startling in novelty, are matters of such common occurrence as to fatigue the wonder. While most of them are the practical results of practical men, it is likewise true that the practical man learned the principle from some theorist.

Who can tell too how much of domestic happiness is due to institutions of learning? I do not know that a wife is made happier if her husband talks to her in Sanskrit. Perhaps it would add to mutual felicity for him to scold in that tongue, and if he cannot speak it, to hold his own. To the baby, it is well known, he speaks in language extraordinary handed down from the confusion of tongues at Babel. Observe, Babel Babe! I do not know that a husband is made happier if his wife wields the broom—(either end of this wonderful household implement) according to Puckle—though he may justly regard the curves abruptly terminating on his skull as hyperbolic—or para—or dia—bolic curves. By the average feminine application of the science of Mathematics most remarkable geometrical figures are evolved in tea-cakes, and in flower-plots. And as for languages, it is a well-known fact that a woman is mistress of her own tongue. And doubtless she would learn all languages living and dead, could she use more than one at a time! Oh the beneficence of liberal culture!

But, my friends, I do know that a manly taste cultivated by years of study, by association with the noblest thought and the purest minds of all ages, makes any man a more congenial companion to the woman who rules him. I do know that there is an elevation of soul, a thoughtfulness, a delicacy of feeling, an enjoyableness in those who have found solace in the sweetest books, or delighted in the conquests of study. The evidences of a chastened culture and pure taste, in tone, in conversation, in manner, in sentiment, garnish the home with delight, and fill full the fount of domestic felicity. There is no spot so inexpressibly lovely and attractive as the cultivated home, especially if the light of a sincere and cheerful piety illumines and gladdens the whole.

There are, gentlemen, special obligations to institutions of learning, resting upon men of letters; I say men of letters—meaning not so much men of advanced culture as those who delight in it and long for it. The seats of learning are to them the Meccas of the mind, the Delphic Oracles, the Porches of the Philosophers. The men of power are there—on whom society and the world are dependent. For it is the men of thought, rather than the men of action, that move the world. Bismarck and not Von Moltke, changed the geography of Central Europe. And Beaconsfield rather than Roberts or Wolseley fixed the boundaries of Afghanistan and Zululand. Of the three great Frenchmen, Calvin has done more to sway the world than Charlemagne or Napoleon; and Aristotle is still a leader, while Alexander sleeps. These men of power and commanding and abiding influence dwelt at seats of learning. Upon the great schools of the world do men of culture look with affection and hope.

These obligations of men of letters to seats of learning are felt to be more personal than general, and partake of the nature of personal gratitude. Like Ruskin or Milton they love not only what is in a good book, but the book itself with a strong attachment—its dress, its shelf, the place of its birth and the yard where it grew. Perhaps in earlier years, the cultivated taste of a thoughtful mother, or the broader learning of an educated father, quickened the thirst for knowledge or the delight in pure taste. But it was in the scholastic course that this thirst was stimulated to a consuming passion, and that delight kindled to rapture. To the wise guidance of experienced teachers was the subsequent literary life and taste largely due. Who has forgotten that Milton began his wonderful career as a poet while a student at college, and had the inclination of his mind so directed during those days of scholastic training? Lord Macaulay, too, then had his thoughts and tastes turned into the channel that brought fame not only to him but to England. Lord Jeffrey, Sydney Smith, and Henry Brougham, in their studies, projected the Edinburgh Review, and Christopher North commenced his interesting literary life while at the University. To the delightful attrition with emulous and generous minds, to charming association in kindred taste and studies, and to aspiration after college honors, has been due in a large measure later developments in special and preferred fields of study. What these men of letters are, what they hope to be, is owing to the foundation laid while students, and to the wise care of their Alma Mater. What wonder is it then that they look to the scenes of their early dreams, of such pursuits and hopes, with feelings of profound gratitude and resolves of appreciative affection?

Such, fellow Alumni, are the feelings with which we gather in our mother's home today. For the elevation of literary tastes, for the stimulation of noble endeavors, for the direction of our inquiries wisely and delightfully; for the sharpening of our intellectual tools, and the furniture of our intellectual workshops; for new and fascinating views of truth, in nature, in the soul, in the Word; for warm, true and abiding friendships quickened when the world's hollowness was not known, and cemented by tenderest recollections; how deeply are we indebted to this beloved Institution! Words of eloquence and song might tell, but my full heart falters and fails to utter, and as I remember, my poor lips grow dumb.

In the great work of beneficence to the world, our own Alma Mater has borne an honorable share. She is still young, her first President, beloved and honored, still lives; and she shall be ever young, because we trust immortal. Not yet has she reached half a century, but those of the second generation are returning to her halls. For many years, with most inadequate resources and incomplete equipments, her sons have yet been faithfully reared, and have brought credit upon their raising. During her forty-three years of useful existence, (for six years of which time no graduates issued from her rostrum), preferring quality rather than quantity, and excellence to numbers, and intending her degrees to signify something—an average of twelve per annum have received her parting blessing. Of her less than 450 graduates, more than three-fourths have entered callings the most influential, and the most fruitful of good to society. One hundred and twenty have become ministers, seventy-five are teachers, more than fifty have chosen the law, and an equal number the practice of medicine. Wherever scholarship and merit are appreciated her sons have won honor and success. They have reaped fame as authors and scholars. They have been called to fill professorships in colleges and universities. They have occupied seats in both halls of Congress. They have filled the highest judicial positions in more than one State; and they have filled lower but most responsible places of public trust with honor. Since the redemption of the State of North Carolina from negro domination, her sons have occupied legislative chairs in one or both Houses, at every session of the State Legislature. And I have been told that this has been true for more than half the time in another State likewise. Who will say then that Davidson College has not borne a full and honorable part among the institutions of learning in moulding and guiding the public weal? And these rewards are the more conspicuous when it is remembered that she has had but a limited patronage, and from that class to whom places of public emolument have not entered because of social alliances or hereditary claims; that she has graduated but few comparatively; that she has not had the prestige of State control or affiliation with leading public men, nor the glory of great names in political influence among her trustees or patrons until her merits secured them, nor the applause of timeservers who sought an object through her instrumentality. What she has won she has won because of worth.

Is it unbecoming in me thus to speak? I have felt that some one should. Let me hear the blame. We have been too coy and modest by half. We look on a beautiful scene by night. Through trembling leaves the moonlight twinkles on the grass. On the dimpled waters are reflected the diamonds of the sky, and the dark shadows from overhanging willows fringe the beach. "The long light shakes across the lakes," and through the vibrant air pulses the breath of fragrant flowers, while the waves of delicious song break upon the ear. The senses are charmed. But where would be the beauty were the heavens overcast with clouds, or had the faintly gleaming moon set? In speaking thus of my Alma Mater, I have but turned your eyes to the queen of night that glorifies the landscape.

SPURIOUS CONVERSIONS.

"It is not the number of professions, but their consistency which advances the divine glory. And in view of the number of spurious conversions there is no field of effort for the conversion of souls more important than that which is embraced in the walls of Zion—the conversion of self-deceived church members. And in view of the low state of piety among professed Christians generally—the covetousness, the indolence, the prayerlessness the spiritual ignorance, the inconsistencies, the evil influence and the bad examples which abound—we are bold to say that there is no species, no measure of success more excellent and more to be sought after than that which shall remove or diminish perceptibly, these sore and wide-spread evils. The conversion of sinners who are without the pale counts more rapidly and is attended with more eclat, both in the Church and in the world, while, on the contrary, efforts to train, to instruct, purify, and edify the church by searching, preaching, and by faithful discipline, is not only a difficult, but also a slow and unpopular work, hence less inviting and less stimulating. Anxious for numerous conversions and failing to secure success by such means, and in such ways as the Master prescribes, many are led to resort to other modes of efforts, unlawful in their origin and injurious in their results. For example, finding that the Scriptural doctrines, which they have been preaching are slow in their operation, and scanty in their apparent results, many have been tempted to modify their teachings with a view to wider influence and more rapid success,—a course into which every one unblest with success, is in danger of falling. Again finding that converts are few, when judged by the stern tests of the Bible, many are tempted to adopt a lower and a looser judgment, by which multitudes may be admitted to the Church.

Finding other denomination so ready and urgent to secure for themselves, all reputed converts, or the one willing to profess religion, some are led, forced as they feel it, to admit to the privileges of the Church persons who are untried, and thus in many cases by a premature profession, are made a cause of scandal; and in this way, at least, recklessly expose the church to the danger of impurity. And still further, inasmuch as the use of the appointed means of grace * * * seems slow in producing an effect, many are tempted to try other and more exciting measures, which are more rapid and extensive in their results, without regard to the character or permanency of those results—measures which have been found to promote spurious conversions, and to be in many ways injurious to all the best interests of religion. And in these departures, the ministry are often urged on by the membership of the church, who are apt to partake of the same impatience as to the result.

All these things form parts of a superficial system—a system destitute of solid and lasting results—a system which necessarily includes long seasons of coldness and deadness in the church, in irregular, evanescent forms of piety, and the multiplication of apostates.

A system which never acts except with the victims of spasmodic action, and which as surely tends to decay and death. These dangers are all enhanced by the numbers, zeal, and apparently superior success of rival churches, which are striving to proclaim the largest accessions and the most rapid progress. Our system is not framed for such rivalry. It professes to be governed not by expediency or human policy, but solely by the work of Christ."

The above is an extract from an article on "Success in the Ministry," in the Southern Presbyterian Review, July 1855. It has been abundantly exemplified, since that time by the proceedings of erratic evangelists, who seemed to seek the praise of men more than the glory of God. G.

STRENGTH FOR TO-DAY.

BY MRS. M. A. KIDDER.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there never will be a to-morrow,
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day,
With its measures of joy and sorrow.

Then why forecast the trials of life
With such grave and sad persistence,
And watch and wait for a crowd of ill
That as yet has no existence.

Strength for to-day—what a precious boon
For the earnest souls who labor;
For the willing hands that minister,
To the needy friend or neighbor.

Strength for to-day—that the weary hearts
In the battle for right may quail not;
And the eyes bedimmed with bitter tears,
In their search for light, may fail not.

Strength for to-day on the down-hill track
For the travelers near the valley,
That up, far up on the other side,
Ere long they may safely rally.

Strength for to-day—that our precious youth
May happily shun temptation,
And build from the rise to set of sun
On a sure and strong foundation.

Strength for to-day—in house and home
To practice forbearance sweetly—
To scatter kind words and loving deeds.
Still trusting in God completely.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there never will be a to-morrow,
For to-morrow will prove but another to day,
With its measures of joy and sorrow.

"HOC AGE."

BY MRS. M. E. SANGSTER.

Little girls a hundred years ago were subjected to many restraints which have now, happily, as I think, gone completely out of fashion. From the time Mrs. Sherwood, well known as one of the first and most successful writers in our language of fiction for children, was six years old until she was thirteen, she was obliged to wear every day, from breakfast until tea-time, an iron collar with a back-board strapped over the shoulders. She usually studied her lessons with her feet standing in stocks, and she never sat in a chair in her mother's presence. Bread and milk constituted the morning and evening meals, and a plain dinner was allowed in the middle of the day. She studied under the direction of her father and mother, the latter herself studying Latin, that she might be able to teach it to her children. On Saturday the little girl went to her father's library, and there received from him a subject, on which she was expected to prepare a composition. One morning he wrote at the top of her paper, "Hoc age," and nothing more. She retired to her room and wrote the translation, "Do this," beneath her topic. Try as hard as she would, she could think of nothing to add to it, and at the end of an hour she went to her father, in some fear lest he would reprove her for having been idle.

Her father smiled when she showed him her little essay. "Very well," he said. "You will not forget 'Hoc age' again; and let it over be in your mind, as an admonition, each day of your life, to ascertain and to do that which is most presently necessary. I wished you, my child, to dwell long upon the words, and therefore I did not explain my meaning."

Little girls, and older ones, too cannot do better than to remember this incident and accept its lesson. Not some remote and fascinating duty, but the one that lies nearest, is the one to which we should first attend.

And while we are glad that nobody dreams of standing stiffly in stocks, with neck in an iron collar, while obliged to read fifty lines of Virgil before breakfast, let us consider whether we might not be improved by practising some of the deference and reverence which a hundred years ago, youth paid to maturity. It is far pleasanter to sit by a dear mother, with head on her lap, or hand clasping hers, than always to stand timidly before her, but—does it look well to see Lucy sit while mamma stands, to see Emily letting mamma run up-stairs to find Jack's lost slate pencil; to see a dozen strange and wrong things of that sort in good families every day?—Christian at Work.

"IF I COULD ONLY FEEL IT."

"If I could only feel it," as a young officer said to me, when I pressed on him that enough had been done on the cross to save his soul.

"But," I said, "you have not got to feel it, but to believe. You may be saved without feeling. I believed in Christ about a fortnight before I knew I was saved. I might have known it at once, only I was waiting to feel saved. At last I said, 'Well, if I don't feel saved until I find myself in heaven, still I will rest solely on the Word of God.' God hath said in that Word, 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.' I know that now I do believe in Christ; I need to trust in my prayers, or something I could do myself; Christ, and His work on the cross for my salvation; therefore I have everlasting life. God says I have. Then Satan whispered, 'Do you feel you have everlasting life?' I could not say I felt it. 'Then you cannot have it,' whispered the arch liar. I remember it is written, 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.' I knew that I really believed in Christ, therefore I had everlasting life, whether I felt it or not. God said I had, and surely I must be right in believing Him, despite every feeling. I think then the devil left me (for a time); but I found I was safe, not because I felt it, but because of God's Word, which is unchangeable. I did not (as it so happened) feel joy or peace till long afterwards."

"I declare, I believe you are right," said the young man, who had been listening with the greatest attention: "I have all along been thinking that I have to bring good feelings to God before I could be saved."—Parish Visitor.

THE POWER OF ENJOYMENT.

Comparatively few people possess uniformly cheerful dispositions. Most of us have our sad hours and moods. But, whatever his disposition, a man is bound by the laws of his own being, and by those of his social relations, to cultivate the virtue of cheerfulness assiduously and constantly. He has no more right to injure his neighbor's happiness than to interfere with his pecuniary property, and he cannot indulge in venting ill humor or spleen, with gloomy forebodings or complaints, or even carrying a sad, sour, frowning visage, without sensibly diminishing the enjoyment or comfort of others, and thus infringing on their rights. Any individual who has tried to do so can win himself from despondency and surliness. The power of enjoyment is in itself a faculty capable of improvement, and as practice always enhances power it is a good thing to form the habit of enjoyment. It is not true that the sources of pleasure are few and rare, but it is sadly true that we pass them by unnoticed. We crave the excitement of business or politics or fashionable life, and forget the world of innocent enjoyment, that we trample under foot. Nature and art offer their treasures in vain, the loveliness of childhood, the attractions of home, the real satisfaction of honest labor, the simple pleasure of little things, all plead for utterance, but we repulse them. How can we possess a cheerful spirit and a glad heart when we scornfully despise our simple pleasures? Every innocent means of happiness should be welcomed, and gloomy thoughts persistently banished.

A CHEERFUL VIEW OF THINGS.

"How dismal you look!" said a Bucket to his companion, as they were going to the well.

"Ah!" replied the other, "I was reflecting upon the uselessness of our being filled; for let us go away ever so full, we always come back empty."

"Dear me how strange to look at it in that way," said the other Bucket. "Now I enjoy the thought that, however empty we come, we always go away full. Only look at it in that light, and you'll be as cheerful as I am."—Ex.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Protestantism in Italy has made such rapid progress during the last decade that there is now hardly a town even of secondary importance which does not possess at least one Protestant Evangelical church, and it was only twenty years ago that the preaching of Protestants was first permitted in that country. Of the churches there are now two kinds. One class is composed of foreigners who were born Protestants and subsequently went into Italy to live, such as the English, Scotch, and American churches, where the services are conducted in languages foreign to Italy; the other is composed of Italians who are converts from Catholicism, and worship, of course, in their native tongue. There are 50 of the foreign churches, and 138 of the Italian. The present missionary and pastoral force comprises about 100 pastors and 50 evangelists, the evangelists being in great part converts from Catholicism.

Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage has recently received a legacy under the will of Mrs. Anna Tyson, of Norwood, of the sum of $125,000, to be appropriated to the payment of nine annuities for the Stockwell Orphanage. A further sum of $75,000 was left by the same lady to Mr. Spurgeon's College for training Baptist ministers. The building of the Girls' Orphanage will be commenced immediately. The cost of the site, amounting to $27,000, has been subscribed, and $15,000 has been promised toward the first six houses and schools, the total cost of which is estimated at $25,000.

One of the significant signs of the advance of missions is the fact that a Christian church was lately dedicated within the Palace enclosure of the capital of Madagascar. It is a large, fine church, and is designed for the worship of the Queen and her court. The dedication services were conducted by the native pastors and by the missionaries of the London Missionary Society. It is a fact of interest that the Prime Minister of the Kingdom read the proclamation which was issued when the first stone of the building was laid, and added an interesting historical account of the progress of religion, holding in his hand one of the first Bibles printed in the Malagasy language, and explaining the constitution of the Royal Church.

A Paris despatch says the Minister of the Interior has told the Prefects to make a clear distinction between the Jesuit and other unauthorized orders. The Jesuits are not to be invited like others to have themselves authorized, but are ordered to dissolve, and by the 30th of June the company of Jesuits must disappear and evacuate their establishment. The other unauthorized orders will receive, before the 30th inst, official summons to declare whether they intend submitting to the decrees.

The first edition of the revised translation of the New Testament may be expected in the autumn, and along with the English translation two recensions of the Greek text will be issued simultaneously; the one will proceed from the Clarendon, the other from the Pitt Press. Professor Palmer is responsible for the Clarendon text, Dr. Scrivener for the other. The Athenæum says: "It is with regret that we hear it said that the form in which all Englishmen know, and most of them use, the Lord's Prayer is no longer to be the form which is to pass current. We shall rejoice if the report, which is widely circulated, proves incorrect.

Ritualism in the Episcopal Church goes on steadily with its absurdities. A firm of clerical tailors and church furnishers advertises to supply "pure altar breads," that is wafers, "warranted to keep in any climate." Some of the wafers are embossed with designs, such as a representation of the crucifixion; a crucifix, with "I.H.S.," and a heart sustaining three small wedges; an ascending figure, holding in one hand a banner; a crucifix, "I.H.S.," and a heart enclosed within a wreath; and a lamb bearing a flag. These wafers are of two sizes—one about as large as an English penny, the other about two inches in diameter, and the latter, the large ones, are for "priests."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1880.

THE CUSTOMS OF AFFLICTION.

There is no argument so unanswerable as that of precedent. Not being founded on reason it is independent of logic. When any recommendation is declined because, forsooth, "it has never been our custom," one is reminded of the old man's reproof of his son for having ventured to make the meal balance itself in the bag instead of burdening himself with time-immemorial stone.

Moreover customs of the kind now under consideration are the most difficult of all to change, because association gives them a sacredness which renders innovation to a sensitive mind something akin to sacrilege. However, as the world has awaked to demand change in the matter of funerals, it is not without hope that something yet more radical is suggested. Society has established it as a despotic dictum that there shall be rigid seclusion during the period of affliction, longer or shorter, according to the customs of the particular hamlet or town. This is perhaps proper for a limited time, but it is often carried to sinful extreme, and this seclusion is extended even to the services of the sanctuary. Unlike David, who, immediately after the death of his child, arose from the earth and washed and anointed himself, and changed his apparel, "and came into the house of the Lord and worshiped," they consider it the thing in many communities for the afflicted to appear nowhere until a certain set, well-understood period has passed. Thus they miss the portion of the services specially adapted and intended for them, the prayers and sermons which bring comfort and are suggested and prompted by their needs at this very time: when, however, the pastor has about finished these special themes and has again drifted into the ordinary channel of pulpit ministration the afflicted person again appears in the congregation just in time to miss that which was especially calculated to comfort and strengthen.

In some extreme cases this seclusion is carried on for months until health and spirits fail and perhaps the very reason totters under the strain. It may be very uncongenial, it may seem unnatural, to go quietly about life's duties; it may be far more pleasant to seclude one's self in monastic retirement and indulge in the luxury of grief, but is it right? Is the duty to the dead better performed by the neglect of the living?

Again, there is the time honored custom of mourning garments. There are undoubtedly good reasons for the custom, but are there not better reasons against it? If grief is sincere it needs not the assistance of these outward expressions; if it is insincere they are but mockery. It does seem that if there ever comes a time when brightness and cheer are needed it is then. Is it not reasonable that at such a time, when the mind is weighed down with grief and requires no ordinary elasticity to rebound at all from the load that oppresses it, there should be a studied effort to keep the grief ever present in all its weight and thus render impossible what is it best but difficult? It may be answered that the mind does not desire any relief or relaxation at a time like this. But at a time like this is the mind the proper judge of what is best? Is this tendency to be encouraged or repressed? The best reason for "wearing mourning" is that such dress is a shield against thoughtless levity, so grating upon the feelings at such a time. But during this period persons very rarely travel, and there is little danger of this intrusion in a community where one is known. All associates being well acquainted with the circumstances of the individual, few would be so inconsiderate as to shock the wounded sensibilities.

The great objection against it is the expense. Custom makes it imperative. Oftentimes it finds persons least capable of meeting the expense, e. g.: A father, after a long and trying illness, dies; during his sickness all income fails and all expenses increase; after his death the widow has to pay for physician's attendance, medicine and the undertaker's bill. In addition to all this extra expense at a time when the family is and has been for some time, without any source of revenue whatever, the mother and possibly several daughters are under the necessity of providing themselves with a complete outfit of mourning; when perhaps, too, they know not how their food for the next week is to be paid for. They are ill able to meet these demands upon their slender purses but inexorable custom requires it under the penalty of suffering the intolerable imputation of indifference to their dead, and the demand is met at any and every cost.

This is far from being an extreme case. Doubtless these words will fall under the eye of more than one widow who will recall vividly her anxieties at such a time to provide for this very expense. It very probably sounds revolting to her ear to discuss expense in such a connection, but it would not sound so were custom different from what it is; there has been considerable reform in this matter during the last century as may be gathered from reading old wills and biographies &c., and it is to be hoped that in the course of time still greater changes will occur.

HOW TO PREACH.

Perhaps it is not becoming in us to give any counsel on this subject. And we are sure we could not illustrate practically the difficult service. But it is not unbecoming in us to call attention to a communication on this theme, in another column entitled "Conduct of a Discourse in all its Parts."

Now for its history. Among the papers of the late Rev. Samuel Paisley, a minister, venerable and beloved, and in his day eminently useful, was found by a friend a dingy manuscript bearing this title. The paper shows age—being like the paper of half or three-quarters of a century ago; is rough unruled and has untrimmed edges. The ink is a clear, brownish-black, and the penmanship careful and creditable. The document is copied with special pains, and printed exactly as written—spelling, punctuation, capitals, and italics, all. It is worthy of a passing comment, that the writing is not only clear and good notwithstanding the exceedingly rough poor paper—but it is accurately spelled throughout and beautifully punctuated. In this age of fast writing and unseemly haste in everything, the communications submitted to editorial review are a study. There is such utter carelessness in the formation of letters, and entire oblivion of points, (sometimes of point) the dash being the only mark used—perhaps with an eye to a dashing style—that it is very difficult for an obfuscated editor or a bewildered printer to puzzle out a manuscript; and woe be to him if there are any typographical errors! This quaint manuscript with its many capitals is a pleasure to editor's eyes.

Rev. Mr. Paisley studied theology under the celebrated Rev. Dr. Caldwell; and it is supposed that this paper is a brief or note taken of that distinguished teacher's lecture on preaching. It is certainly a very brief and simple treatise on Sacred Rhetoric. Yet it is full of sound sense, a multum in parvo, compend, and we doubt not many of our older readers who remember Mr. Paisley, or his preceptor, will be glad to read it. We remark also that it would not damage many of our younger ministers, who may have studied for more ambitious works, to read this compendius and full analysis of the "Parts of a Discourse."

We observe that no answer is given to the vexed question: How long should a minister preach in this fiercely hot summer weather? Judging from the illustration furnished in this lecture on preaching, a sermon should be brief and pointed. We shall not grow warm pressing such a point however.

That preaching fails of its object, that is not heard, that is not understood, and that is not, in a certain sense, enjoyed. That preaching fails, that does not present thoughts rather than words, and furnish food for the soul, rather than entertainment for the mind. And even in long warm summer days, truth, the precious truth, the truth as it is in Jesus, is appreciated and welcomed by those who wait with diligence, preparation and prayer on God's chosen ordinance for reaching souls.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We publish to-day a part of the very admirable address of Rev. W. S. Lacy before the Alumni of Davidson College. In the next issue and the one to follow it the publication will be continued and completed. The length of the article on first page should not deter any one from its perusal. It could not be shortened and is well worth any-one's attention.

As we are about to go to press Messrs. Jackson & Bell, publishers, have laid upon our table the Minutes of the General Assembly for 1880. The work is very creditable indeed to the publishers, and the compilation and preparation by Dr. Wilson, Stated Clerk, calls for specially favorable notice. The preparation of the comparative summary of the Church for five years will be highly approved, and the preparing a "Summary of Synods" in connection with the usual "Summary of Presbyteries" is a decided improvement.

Messrs. Jackson & Bell are prepared to deliver the pamphlet on terms made known in another column.

We informed our readers last week that Mr. Charles W. Dabney, son of Rev. Dr. R. L. Dabney, had been elected professor of Natural Science in Central University, Richmond, Ky. Since then he has been elected to the professorship of Chemistry in the University of North Carolina, to succeed Professor Redd. Professor Dabney although young, has acquired a fine reputation for scientific and literary abilities, as the demand for his services proves. He is an alumnus of Hampden Sidney College and of the University of Virginia, and also studied at the University of Gottingen in Germany, under Professors Woohler and Hnbner. For a time he was professor of Chemistry at Emory and Henry College in Virginia and was very successful. If he shall come to North Carolina he will be heartily welcomed.

There does not appear to be so great a sensation produced by the reception of Cleopatra's Needle in New York, as might have been expected—perhaps as should have been expected. The name is derived from the erroneous supposition that the obelisk was removed from Heliopolis to Alexandria in the reign of Cleopatra. New York and this nation may well be proud of the gift because of its associations. Its height is sixty-nine feet six inches. At the base it is seven feet eight inches square and at the top five feet five and one-fourth inches square. W. H. Vanderbilt agreed to pay $100,000 when the obelisk was delivered in New York, but advanced nothing at all, taking no risk in the conveyance. The steamship in which it was brought over is owned by Lieut. Commander Gorridge and the entire outlay of expense has been his.

Mr. Hale, writing from New York to the Raleigh News, says of Prof. Henry E. Shepherd:

"I am glad to see in Sunday's News your proper tribute to the personal and literary merits of Professor Henry E. Shepherd, who has very deservedly been placed at the head of the University Normal School during the present session. I have reason to know how high he ranks in Baltimore, as well as among the most eminent philologists in other parts of this country and in Europe, and his native State may well treasure him among her comparatively few who have devoted themselves to literary pursuits. He has achieved more reputation as a specialist in English than any other North Carolinian that I know of, and it is safe to predict that he will give a great impetus to the study of our mother tongue through an awakened interest among the teachers assembled at Chapel Hill. Our own language should have our first care, and any one who marks how deficient in it even educated men sometimes are, must rejoice to see some of the attention now given to the dead and the foreign languages transferred to the English."

The Scottish American Journal shows us how much legal talent and legal work is sometimes expended on very small matters; small that is in the inception, not necessarily in the results.

"A great fuss has been made out of a pair of trousers, which formed part of a suit in a lawsuit. The Circuit Court of the United States had to decide whether the insertion of a metal eyelet used at each edge of the pocket opening, with the object of preventing the seams from ripping, was patentable. This simple question involved the examination of 450 witnesses, and the printing of 3,700 pages of testimony. In addition to this the brief of the plaintiff's counsel was 323 printed pages long, whilst his learned friend on the opposite side contented himself with 152 pages. And the result of all this examination, cross-examination, printing, talking, rebutting, and appealing is that Judge Blatchford has decided that an eyelet used for the purpose mentioned is patentable, and that its application in a pair of trousers is a novelty."

Those who have read the interesting and instructive works of Dr. Kane and Captain McClintock on Arctic exploration will recall the important services rendered by Carl Peterson, in reading the following notes of his life as sketched by the Interior:

"Mr. Carl Petersen, whose name is connected with some of the most renowned Arctic explorations, died at Copenhagen on June 24th. Mr. Peterson was a born Dane, but had lived many years in Greenland, and had there acquired a perfect knowledge of the Esquimaux language, being at the same time a most skilled hunter and fisherman. At the age of thirty-seven he was engaged by Captain Penny as interpreter, and accompanied his expedition in the years 1850-'51. Some years later he followed Dr. Kane on his unfortunate expedition, when the vessel had to be left in the ice and the crew were nearly starved and frozen to death. He had not been home more than a couple of weeks after returning from a two years' stay in Greenland before he went out again as interpreter with the Fox, Captain Sir Leopold McClintock, with Mr. (now Sir) Allen Young as sailing master. Of this expedition, lasting from 1857 to 1859, and leading to the discovery of the fate of Sir John Franklin, he has written a graphic description, supplying many details wanting in the well known book of Sir L. McClintock, and inscribed with the words chosen by Lady Jane Franklin for the flag of the Fox: "Hold fast." In 1861 he accompanied the Swedish naturalists, Nordenskjold and Torrell, on their first expedition to Spitzbergen, and when, in last April, the Vega passed Copenhagen, the hardy old sportsman and sailor, with his cross and Arctic medal, was one of the friendly faces greeting the discoverer of the northeast passage. Mr. Petersen died from heart disease at the age of sixty-seven."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

The Landmark states that the congregation of the Statesville Presbyterian church have tendered a vacation to their pastor, Rev. Dr. W. A. Wood. He will spend the time in the mountains of Western North Carolina.

The first number of the Christian at Home is before us. It is undenominational and proposes to avoid all civil, political, sectional and ecclesiastical war. Edited by Rev. A. Shotwell and published at St. Louis at $1 00 per year.

Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick writes us from Franklin, N. C., on the 15th inst:

"The 4th of July was an important occasion with us. One elder and two deacons had been chosen on the 3rd. The deacons were ordained by the "Laying on of Hands," and were installed. The elder, Prof. N. P. Rankin, having been ordained elsewhere was installed this week. These officers supply a felt deficiency. But from the interest manifested by the church in these elections and the Christian character of the men chosen, we expect great good to result."

IDAHO, N. C.

Mr. Editor: The ladies of this place had a meeting to-day and decided to build a Presbyterian church. The ground to build on was secured and work will begin at an early date. We have about $200 to begin on, and we hope for good subscriptions to come in as soon as the work is begun. The Fayetteville church has agreed to supply us with preaching until we can get strong enough to help which, I hope, will not be long. Very truly, yours, O. EVANS.

HARMONY CHURCH.

A most delightful season of grace and refreshment from the presence of the Lord has lately been experienced here. Services were conducted by the regular minister, Rev. S. C. Alexander, who failed in his endeavors to obtain help. The meeting begun on Friday, 16th July, and continued until the following Thursday. On the Sabbath the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. The attendance on that day was unusually large, and the interest intense. Thirteen persons, including the aged, youthful and those in the prime of life, were added to the church, and many others gave evidence of deep concern for the salvation of their souls. Christians also were revived and strengthened, and set forward anew on the road to Zion.

Our church building being in a dilapidated condition, the people are determined, by the blessing of God, to repair it at once. A committee was appointed to take the work in hand and have it completed by the early fall. AN ELDER.

Richmond county, July 24, 1880.

On the 3d day of August the elders and deacons of Mecklenburg Presbytery will hold their seventh annual convention at Mallard Creek church. Elder J. W. Reid, president of the last convention, will conduct devotional exercises at the opening. The following subjects will be considered and discussed: The best manner of increasing the spirituality of church members: introduced by Elders J. P. Alexander and J. N. Hanna; The duty of the Church in regard to the Young Men's Christian Association: Mr. G. Hanna and Deacon G. E. Wilson; The relative position of the Sunday school to the Church and family: Elders J. Sol Reid and F. Scarr; What relation does the Church sustain to the children of its members: Elders T. B. Price and J. W. Reid; The study of the standards of the Church, the duty of all church officers: Elders A. G. Neal and H. K. Reid; The duty of the Church in regard to Foreign Missions: Elders A. M. Neely and Kincaid; Bible Society: Elders J. A. Young and J. W. Moore; The necessity of greater attention to the cultivation of singing in the services of the sanctuary: Mr. J. A. Collins. It is earnestly requested that all members come prepared to take part in the discussions.

CONDUCT OF A DISCOURSE IN ALL ITS PARTS.

The Parts of a Regular Discourse are these six: The Exordium; the State and Division of the Subject; Narration or Explication; the Reasoning or Arguments; the Pathetic Part and the Conclusion.

In many Discourses some of these Parts may be altogether omitted.

The Design of an Introduction is to conciliate the good opinion of the Hearers; to excite their attention; and render them open to persuasion.—

If the Speaker is secure of all these it may be omitted.—

A good Introduction is of the greatest Importance and is extremely Difficult.

It should be easy and natural. It should always be suggested by the Subject. It should not be planned till the Substance of the Discourse is meditated in the Mind.

Let commonplace Topicks be avoided in an Introduction.

Study correctness of Expression.

Modesty is essential to a good Introduction. This Modesty, however, should betray nothing mean or abject.—

The Introduction is seldom the Place for Warmth.—

It should not anticipate any material Part of the Subject.—

Lastly, let the Introduction be proportioned both in Length and Kind to the Discourse that follows it.

After the Introduction succeeds the Proposition or Enunciation of the subject; which should be as clear, distinct, concise and simple as possible.

To this succeeds the Division or Method of the Discourse. In which observe, first, (that) the Parts be really distinct from each other; i. e. that no one include another.

Secondly. Follow the Order of Nature, beginning with the most simple Points, such as are necessary to be first discussed; and proceeding thence to those which are built upon the former, and suppose them to be known.

Thirdly, let the Members of a Division exhaust the Subject, otherwise the Division is incomplete.

Fourthly. Let Conciseness and Precision be peculiarly studied.

Fifthly. Cautiously avoid an unnecessary Multiplication of Heads.—

The next constituent Part of a Discourse is Narration or Explication. They serve to illustrate the subject of which we treat, before proceeding to argue on either side.

To be clear and distinct; to be probable, and to be concise are the essential qualities of Narration.

In Sermons Explication of the Subject occupies the place of Narration at the Bar. It must be concise, clear and distinct; in a style correct and elegant, rather than ornamented.

In the Reasoning or Arguments, (which constitute the Foundation of all manly and persuasive Eloquence) observe three things: first, the Invention of them; secondly, their proper Disposition and Arrangement; and thirdly, the Expressing them in the most forcible style and manner.—[Invention the Basis of all the Rest.]

The common Rule is to advance the arguments in the way of climax.

In some Cases it is proper to place the most forcible Argument in the Front, to prejudice the (or his) Hearers in his Favour.

When Arguments are strong and satisfactory, the more distant (sic) they are separated the better. But when they are of a Doubtful or presumptive Nature, it (is) safer to crowd them together into a Phalanx &c.

Arguments should never be extended too far, or Multiplied too much. This oppresses the Memory, diminishes the Weight of Conviction and is always enfeebling.

Another essential Part of a Discourse is the Pathetic (sic); in which, if anywhere Eloquence reigns and exerts its Power. On this Head—

Consider carefully whether the subject admits the Pathetic, and if it does what part of the discourse is most fit for its Admission—good sense the Criterion.

We must secure the understanding and Judgement in our Favour before the Pathetic can be admitted with any Force or Propriety.

To succeed in the Pathetic it is necessary to attend to the proper Language of the Passions. This we shall ever find is unaffected and simple. It may be animated with bold and strong Figures, but it will have no Ornament or Finery. There is a material Difference between painting to the Imagination, and to the Heart. The one may be done with deliberation and coolness,—the other must be rapid and ardent. Hence all Digressions should be avoided. Hence Comparisons are always dangerous.

Emotions which are violent cannot be lasting. The Pathetic, therefore, should not be extended and prolonged too much.

He that attempts to carry his Audience farther in Passion than they will follow him annihilates his Purpose.

By endeavoring to warm them in the Extreme, he takes the surest method of freezing them completely.

Peroration or Conclusion.

Sometimes the whole Pathetic Part comes in most properly at the Conclusion.

Sometimes when the Discourse has been altogether argumentative, it is proper to conclude with summing up the arguments, placing them in one point of view, and leaving the Impression of them full on the mind of the hearers.

It is always of importance to hit the precise Time of concluding so as to bring the Discourse just to a Point; neither ending abruptly, nor disappointing the Expectation of the Hearers when they looked for the Discourse being finished.

The Close should always be concluded with Dignity and Spirit, that the Minds of the Hearers may be left warm, and that they may depart with a favourable Impression of the Subject and of the Speaker.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE PAPACY.

To those who imagine that the Papacy has become so powerless that Protestantism can put off its armor and let the Vatican do its best or its worst, we commend the fact that at the present time three European Governments are harassed and engaged by Papal affairs. Perhaps if the claims, aims, and position of the Papacy were better understood the protest against the appointment of a pervert to Popery as Viceroy to India would have been louder and more widespread. We are not alarmists, but we see peril in the false assumption that Popery has ceased to be dangerous, and that there is no reason for watchfulness and strenuous resistance to the encroachments of the Vatican. A glance at the Continental struggles with Popery can hardly fail to have a beneficial effect on those Protestants who have been persuaded that Popery can be safely let alone.

The most powerful Government on the Continent is the German, and yet it has been and is worried and perplexed by the tactics of the Vatican. The Ecclesiastical Bill being debated in the Prussian Parliament is, in one sense, a concession to Popery. The laws which Pius IX. denounced as a persecution, and which the present Pope, with more suavity but not less firmness, opposes, do not in any way interfere with religious liberty. They do not hinder the profession and preaching of any creed, and do not impose any civil disability on account of creed. They only assert the right of the State in respect to secular education and the maintenance of order. They do not apply any restrictions to the Roman Catholic Church that are not applied to all other Churches, and the State is in no degree responsible for its laws conflicting with the ecclesiastical system and the policy of the Vatican. But the Papacy is not content with religious liberty and equality, but demands predominance. It is not surprising that Prince Bismarck was desirous to put an end to the dispute, if he could do so without the sacrifice of principle, of the supremacy of the State in all civil concerns. The long negotiations were, as we fully expected they would be, abortive. The Vatican idea of a compromise—of a modus vivendi—was to get all it could and to give nothing in return. The negotiations with the Vatican being over, the government has resolved, if it can, to conciliate its Roman Catholic subjects by a reasonable and generous concession—that is, by such a change in the law as will tolerate the exercise of the Papal ecclesiastical system unless it is used against the State. We regret the concession, but of course it is not for us to criticize the discretion of the government in its efforts to get rid of a discontent which may not be the less inimical to the spirit of national unity because it is altogether unfounded. But what is being done in the Prussian Parliament is a proof that the Papacy is not powerless to harass a foreign government which is the strongest government on the continent.

In France there is agitation about the decrees against the Jesuits and other unauthorized orders. The cry has been raised that whilst the prisons are being opened by the Amnesty the convents are being closed by the decrees. We observe that several of our contemporaries find fault with the French Government for adopting measures that are not in accord with the theory of Republican liberty. It is of course a matter for profound regret that such measures should be adopted; but before we condemn the French Government for a proceeding that violates our cherished principles of freedom, we should take into consideration the special circumstances of France. It is nearly two centuries since the last revolution in this country, whilst the last French Revolution happened barely ten years ago. The Republicans cannot forget that it was the Clerical Party which brought about the overthrow of the last Republic, and which supported the Empire. No one can doubt that M. Grevy and M. Gambetta are staunch Republicans, and that the latter statesman is far-seeing as well as vigorous. On account of the election he has proposed an unlimited amnesty, and, being anxious to conciliate support, he would not have supported the decrees against the religious orders but from a conviction that the proceeding was needful for the welfare of the Republic. The Jesuits persistently preach doctrines distinctly anti-Republican, and that is why the Republicans approve of the decrees, and why they are bitterly denounced by Orleanists and Imperialists. The action of the Government is bold, and it is not to be denied that it is attended by some risk. So far the appeals to the nation have not resulted in popular demonstrations against the Government, but the vehemence of the Opposition to the decrees—all the anti-Republican Parties are united on it—not only shows the strength of the Republic, but also is a proof of the power of the Vatican to embarrass a foreign Government.

The third Continental Power which is at this moment engaged in a contest with Vaticanism is Belgium. We have on a former occasion commented on the Belgian Education Act of 1879, which does no more than provide for educational freedom whilst protecting in a most definite manner the privileges of the priesthood in regard to religious instruction. The opposition to the eminently reasonable law went to the extent of menacing with excommunication parents, teachers, and all who acted in accord with the law. The Liberals urged the Prime Minister, M. Frere-Orban, to break off diplomatic relations with the Vatican, and that would have been done but for the assurance that the Pope did not approve of the conduct of the bishops, and that the authority of the Pope would be exerted to stop the opposition to the law.

However there has been no abatement of the opposition, and it is now discovered that the Pope, or at least those who act in his name at the Vatican, has been encouraging the bishops in their audacious defiance and unscrupulous denunciation of the law. The Belgian government has now taken the decided and proper step of withdrawing its legation at the Vatican. There will be an attempt to adjust the affair, but we hope it will fail. The sooner all diplomatic relations with the Vatican are over the better it will be for the peace of the Continent. All that Roman Catholics have a right to in any country is perfect religious toleration and liberty, and there is no valid reason for any government having aught to do with the Bishop of Rome.

The Papacy is not successful in Germany, or in France, or in Belgium, but its power to harrass foreign governments should be a warning to all Protestants to be vigilant.—London Weekly Review.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE THING TO DO.

Raleigh Christian Advocate:

If things are not as you would like them, do not croak and grumble, but go to work to make them better. If you do your duty you will have neither time nor inclination to grumble.

THE QUALITIES NEEDED NOW.

Nashville Advocate:

The true Christian citizen carries into civil affairs the very qualities needed now: conscientiousness, the courage of conviction, and the calmness and self-poise born of reliance upon God. But the man who goes into that arena with the name, but lacking the power of religion, will not benefit his country but will damage his Church.

TOO MANY HALVES.

Deadwood Pioneer:

A girl composed of eight halves is a mathematical anomaly, a scientific monstrosity. And yet we heard one recently, within half an hour, declare she was half dead with the heat, had half laughed herself to death at somebody's mishap or blunder, was half crazy to know something about something else, was half tickled to death at some funny remark of an ape of a beau, was half mad at an escort's presumption, and was half killed by a hairpin scratching her neck, while all of her—two halves more—was still alive, well and absurd. Girls, drop all these hyperbolical nonsensicalities that disfigure your daily walk and conversation, and be as sensible as you are pretty and lovable.

DECLINED.

Christian at Work:

The coming conflict in the Church is not one between doctrine—a contest between accepting the doctrine as well as well as the life of the Master, or rejecting his plain declarations while professing to follow in his footsteps! We need scarcely say that we know of no such distinction drawn or allowed by the great Teacher. Those who in these days insist upon drawing that line, who will have it that Christianity is a life but not a doctrine as well, and so would abolish all creeds and doctrinal tests, are simply wiser than their Master and the apostolic founders of the Church: they offer us vacant chaff well meant for grain; they offer us a pulseless, flabby, invertebrate, gelatinous mass of goodishness, which they ask us to receive and call by the name of Christianity. We decline with thanks.

USE THEM WISELY.

National Baptist:

There is need that the great truths of the Gospel be presented in the fewest words, in the clearest manner, and with the largest and fullest influence of the Holy Spirit. These things are not to be summoned up at the moment. In order that one may be in a condition to use these few minutes wisely, there must have been much prayer, much study of the Scripture, much meditation, much experience in dealing with souls, much communion with Christ.

READINESS FOR DEATH.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor:

The readiness for death is that of character, not of occupation; and God does not wish me to be always thinking about dying. He wants me to live. He wants me to walk with Himself, and if I do that I may leave the dying to take care of itself, or rather He will take care of the dying.

MAKE HASTE SLOWLY.

Christian Advocate:

The young man hastens toward a reputation. He gives ample proof of ability and success, but only later in life does he find out that the world will admit him into its favor only after years of steady wrestling with obstacles and slow stages of personal growth. One of the fundamental evils of our times is that the young are too hasty in endeavoring to reach a culmination of character. Each one should move on fearlessly in the pursuit of his object, and turn neither to the right nor to the left. The things to be discarded and disregarded are more numerous than those he is to aim at. Every weight must be laid aside. He should have one goal, and all other things should be forgotten.

NOT TO BE NEGLECTED.

So. Christian Advocate:

It is dangerous to neglect opportunities which God puts in our reach. When a man says he reads his Bible at home, prays in private and all that, mentioning these as a substitute for his enjoyment of the public means of grace, you may receive his statement with allowance, if not with suspicion. He may think it is all so. And this is just so much the worse for him. Self-deceived naturally precedes self-destroyed. If a man is genuinely engaged in religious exercises at home, reads his Bible, prays, grows in the grace which such an employment implies, then going to church, as an appointed instrument of God for his spiritual benefit, and as a means of salvation, will be not an enforced duty, but a sweet privilege.

DENOMINATIONALISM USEFUL.

Southern Presbyterian:

Denominational divisions exist. We have no power to abolish them. They are providential. They seem unavoidable. They really promote peace amongst Christians. They are suited to engage and employ the affections and energies of different kinds of real Christians. With all the painful accompaniments, they excite a valuable emulation. At any rate, we are bound to accept the fact. Each conscientious professor of religion must so far recognize it as to attach himself to one of these denominations. He cannot belong to two and especially to all of them, except in the general sense of entering the Church catholic or universal.

HOW IT IS MADE UP.

Bonar:

A holy life is made up of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles nor battles, nor one great heroic act or mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Shiloah "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the waters of the "river, great and many," rushing down in torrents, noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of self and the flesh, the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life.

THE MOST PRECIOUS TRUTH.

Interior:

The most precious truth known to man is the truth that Jesus Christ was God manifest in the flesh. As Christ was, so God is. What Christ exhibited on earth of character—benevolence, forbearance, love, tenderness—are in precisely the same degrees, the elements of God's character. When we are studying the character of Christ we are studying the character of God. As persistent, malignant unrepentant sin was abhorrent to Christ, so it is abhorrent to God. The fact that in Christ we see God so far as our limited powers are sufficient to apprehend Him, and that in Christ we have our only means of certitude in regard to God's character, is one of the facts which makes the truth of Christ's deity so incomparably precious to believers.

CHEERFULNESS A HELP.

Presbyterian Journal:

Every one ought to cultivate a cheerful disposition and let it irradiate their countenance. Thus they will not only be benefitted themselves, physically and socially, but diffuse a cheering light upon the pathway of others. The world likes a person of such a spirit. It helps him, moreover, in his business. There is a wonderful power in such a temper to inspire confidence, produce popularity and attract patronage. And why should not all be cheerful? After all life's disappointments and afflictions there is more in it to be thankful for than to mourn over.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

On Sunday last, (18th inst,) Rev. A. S. Moffett, who has been the efficient pastor of Loch Willow church, at Churchville, tendered his resignation. He has received an invitation to take charge of two churches at Petersburg and Lewisburg in Tennessee, and on Monday last left on a visit to that quarter. Mr. Moffett's resignation of this charge here was caused by the non-compliance of the congregation with the financial obligations it had assumed to the pastor.—Staunton Vindicator.

Items from the Christian Observer:

Rev. J. L. Brownlee has taken charge of the churches of Williamston, Midway and Honea Path in South Carolina Presbytery.

On Sabbath July 4th Rev. J. R. Jacobs was installed pastor of the church at Corpus Christi, Texas, in the Presbytery of Western Texas. At night, the following deacons and elders (previously elected) were duly ordained and installed: Terry Doddridge, Jeremiah M. Wardwell and G. R. Scott, to the eldership; and James McKenzie and Charles H. DeRyce, to the deaconship.

The effort of the ladies of the church at Paris, Ky., to raise money for benevolent objects, by publishing the "Blue Grass Cook Book," has been a success. They have realized nearly four thousand dollars of net profit, which has been used for the promotion of the church work.

At a two days' sacramental meeting held week before last by the pastor, seven persons were received into the church at Elizaville, on profession of faith.

Rev. W. T. Thompson changes his postoffice address from Shelbyville, Tenn., to 904 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C., for the present.

Rev. J. G. Praigg's postoffice address is at Cleveland, Bradley county, Tenn.

By appointment of Presbytery, Rev. Dr. Wharey, of Charlotte, county, preached at "Oak Level," in Halifax county, Va., on Saturday and Sunday, (10th and 11th inst.). On Sunday, the church with a seating capacity of about three hundred, did not hold the large crowd. After a solemn and impressive sermon the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper were administered. Two little ones were dedicated to the Lord, and three grown persons received on examination into the communion of the church. After a short intermission Dr. Wharey preached again, and kindly consented to remain several days—preaching only at night. The congregations were large and attentive. The sermons were plain, simple, powerful expositions of the plan of salvation.—Central Presbyterian.

Items from the Southern Presbyterian:

The Rev. Thomas R. English has been elected pastor of the church at Yorkville, S. C. We are glad to learn that the congregation are actively preparing to build a manse for its pastor.

On the fourth Sabbath in June the Rev. W. A. Slaymaker was installed pastor of Fairview, Friendship and Bethesda churches, all in the vicinity of Marion, Ala. Dr. E. T. Baird preached the sermon and gave the charge to the people; Dr. Raymond presided, proposed the constitutional questions, and gave the charge to the pastor.

NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN.

We noted last week that the Directors of Wooster College, O., had deposed Rev. W. Q. Scott, as was supposed on the ground of heretical teachings. Mr. Scott publishes the following card: "I am neither accused nor guilty of any heresy. I am neither accused nor guilty of any defection from the doctrines or the polity of the Presbyterian Church. Rumors to this effect, however, have been so widely published and have become so flagrant that I deem it my duty to announce my intention to call upon the Presbytery of Philadelphia Central, of which I have the honor to be a member, to sit in judgment upon the case at the proper time and place. It may be taken for granted that the Presbytery will reach by thorough process, and without the least difficulty, a satisfactory conclusion. It will vindicate me, doubtless, without qualification and without reserve."

Rev. Dr. Wm. C. Wisner, of the Presbytery of Niagara, died on the 14th inst. in his 73d year.

Rev. Dr. Livingston M. Glover, of the Presbytery of Springfield, died on 15th July. He was about 60 years of age.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

Rev. Samuel Nichols, nearly 93 years of age, has very recently had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him. The Christian at Work says that he was graduated from Yale College in 1811, and is now not only the only survivor of his class but is, with one exception, the oldest living graduate of the college. He is the oldest living Presbyter of the diocese to which he belongs (that of Bishop Potter), and is believed to be the oldest living Presbyter of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States.

Rev. M. Haskins, rector of the Episcopal church in Newtown, Conn., holds his place in spite of the vestry. He intends to hold on until dismissed by the bishop, and sue for his salary which the vestry decline to pay.

LUTHERAN.

The Presbyterian says: Messrs. Mosser & Keck, of Hanover, have given $20,000 to Muhlenberg College, to endow the Professorship of Greek Language and Literature, presided over by Professor T. L. Seip.

METHODIST.

The Chinese government has made Rev. Dr. Yonng J. Allen, a missionary of the Methodist Church South, stationed at Shanghai, a mandarin.

The Methodist ministers of Boston have formally requested the city authorities to cease giving free concerts on Sunday in the public parks, on the ground that music is promotive of Sabbath desecration and injurious to public morals. The Mattoon District (Illinois) Conference also has decided not to hold its annual camp meeting, the opposition to Sunday exonrsions being the chief cause.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. David Lindsey, aged 81, and who has for many years been laid aside from active labor, died at Garnett, Kansas, on the 5th of July inst.

BAPTIST.

In the Swedish Baptist Association of the Northwest there are seven churches containing 633 members. Two of the churches are in Chicago.

REFORMED DUTCH.

Trinity Reformed church of Plainfield, N. J., has bought on foreclosure of mortgage the Congregational house of worship. They paid $12,0000, $4,000 of which was contributed by the Board of Domestic Missions.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

The Marquis of Bute has been so pleased with his visit to Jerusalem that he has bought a house near the Mount of Olives, which he will fit up as an occasional residence.

On July 13, a shock of earthquake was felt at Memphis. Its motion was vibratory, coming from the northwest and lasting several seconds.

Yale College receives the generous gift of $100,000 by the will of the late Dr. Daniel Tyler Cott of Norwich, who graduated with the class of '25.

The wheat crop of Boone county, Mo., is the largest ever known. Good judges estimate that from 700,000 to 800,000 bushels, over $500,000 worth, will be harvested this season. The average yield per acre is about fifteen bushels.

Gen. Robert Toombs is one of the best farmers in Georgia. He made this year three hundred and fifty bushels of white rust-proof wheat on eleven acres of land. He gave one hundred bushels, worth $10 a bushel, to the State for distribution among the farmers of Georgia to sow for the next crop.

Uncle Jack Loftin tells us of the killing of a huge varmint sometime ago by David Williams. It resembled a wild cat and was so called, but differed considerably from the regular wild cat, and Mr. Loftin thinks it must have been a catamount. It measured four feet in length and had a tail twelve inches long, and had been for sometime a great terror to sheep in the neighborhood, having destroyed several hundred of them. It would kill a sheep, drink the blood and eat a little of the tongue and then hunt for new prey.—Kinston Journal.

A Miss Gwaltney, who lives with a brother in the upper part of Sharpesburg county, near the Alexandria line, was, some days ago, bitten on the foot and ankles by a coper-headed snake. The limb began to swell immediately, and the poison of the bite was in a moment diffused over her entire system. Intense suffering set in, and members of the family began to dose the patient with whiskey. In a period of time, not covering more than twenty hours, she drank a gallon of whiskey without the slightest effect from it, and at the expiration of that time, when our informant passed the house, a messenger had been dispatched for more, though at that time the pain was subsiding, the swelling going down, and the patient was sitting on the side of the bed and feeling tolerably comfortable.—Statesville Landmark.

The agent of emigration to North Carolina writes to the Raleigh News: "I visit the market towns of England, where every week the farmers and their wives come in from country districts to sell their produce, wheat, corn, &c., as also dairy produce, butter, eggs, &c., and also cattle, oxen, sheep and pigs. At these markets (I generally reach two or three in a week) I meet during the day from a hundred to a thousand of the farming class. I distribute pamphlets, bills, &c., and then in the intervals of their business gather them in groups and talk to them, first upon emigration, for all more or less think about that, then upon North Carolina, a place no one ever heard of. * * * I have, however, quite a number getting ready to come out as soon as possible this fall and next spring, and I can only conclude at present by asking the people of North Carolina to fulfill my promises to them by giving them a hearty welcome, and by easing their way to settling as much as you possibly can."

COTTON GINS—THE TAYLOR GIN.—We desire to call attention to Messrs. DeRosset & Co.'s advertisement of "The Taylor Gin." They have on hand a few which they will sell at 20 per cent. discount from the card prices.

If any of our farmers are in need now is the time to buy at bottom figures a Cotton Gin which has no superior in the market and but few equals. Address DeRosset & Co., Wilmington, N. C., for all information. The improved feeder and condenser will commend themselves to all who once see them.

"I wish I was dead," is an expression not infrequently used by the Dyspeptic and sufferer from Liver disease; the depressed spirits unfitting the mind for anything and almost driving him to despair. Be of good cheer, there is life and health left for you yet. Take Simmons Liver Regulator. It regulates the liver, dispels despondency and restores health. Look well that you get the genuine, prepared by J. H. Zellin & Co., enclosed in a white wrapper, with a red Z on the front.

"I can recomend your medicine. All the health I enjoy, and even my life, I may say, is in the consequence of Simmons Liver Regulator. I would not take $1,000.00 for my interest in the medicine. "W. H. WILSON, Lecturer State Grange, and President Florida Co-operative Stock Co., P. of H., Welborn, Florida."

Those who have employed Mr. J. L. Winner in the repair of watches and clocks speak so highly of his thorough skill and workmanship, that without hesitating we recommend all who desire work to be done in his line to give him a trial.

FUNERAL OF COLONEL SCALES.

The Greensboro Patriot contains a circumstantial account of the funeral of Col. Junius I. Scales on the 14th inst., from the Presbyterian church of that town. The funeral exercises were very solemn and everything accompanying and associated attested the sincere regret of the church and the community in their loss, and their sympathy for those who were personally bereaved.

For four years immediately preceding his decease Col. Scales had been a member of the session, and the remains were accompanied to the grave by members of the session as pall-bearers. The funeral discourse was preached most appropriately and most feelingly by Rev. Dr. J. Henry Smith, and the music was touchingly beautiful and impressive. The Patriot closes its report with this deserved tribute: "And thus the turf conceals from view forever the form of Junius I. Scales, a name worthy to be remembered with all honor, and which many hearts will treasure up as the synonym of the kind, yet inflexibly true, christian gentleman under all the tests of time, circumstance or place."

LOST IN THE PULPIT.

They make a great mistake who suppose that extempore preaching has been the law with all great preachers; in fact we may almost go so far as to say the reverse has been the case. Extemporising will often be exposed to difficulties which only a very honest mind can overcome, and make the best of. When Father Taylor, the American preacher, one lost himself and became bewildered in the course of his sermon, he extricated himself by the exclamation: "I have lost the track of the nominative case, my brethren, but one thing I know, I am bound for the Kingdom!" and the frankness of such a confession would be sure to save him from suffering in the esteem of his audience. But the more stately and dignified masters, it is very obvious, cannot deliver themselves in that way. The most singular instance of this kind in our memory is the case of a very distinguished man to whom we loved to listen in our boyhood, a preacher with a wonderful command over every faculty that could give brilliancy or beauty to pulpit exercises. He always preached without notes, and always broke his discourses into divisions, but once, to our amazement and that of the congregation, having travelled through, so far as we remember, two departments of the discourses, he caught himself up and said, "I—I forgot the third division!" He turned round to the organist, "Organist, strike up a verse!" He gave out a line of a hymn, and while the organ was playing and the people singing, he leaned in deep thought over the pulpit; the singing over, he announced the missing link. "But," said he, "isn't that singular?" and proceeded to show how he had lost it, and how he found it—proceeded, in a really enchanting way, to talk upon the law of association of ideas, and the mystery and marvels of retentiveness and memory, as proof of the immateriality and immortality of the soul, until the time was gone, and we really had no more of the sermon after all.—Sunday at Home.

HABIT, if not necessity, makes a Hair Dressing such as Dr. AYER's laboratory issues indispensable to many. The "VIGOR" is one of the most delightful we have ever used. It restores not only the color, but gloss and luxuriance, to faded and gray hair.

CUT THIS OUT AND SAVE IT.

If those persons laboring under disease proceeding from vitiated humors in the blood; causing Ulcers, White Swellings, Coxalgia or Hip Joint Disease, and the class of diseases termed Scrofulous, proceeding from hereditary taints, where the bones are destroyed, defying the usual treatment of physicians, will procure Swaim's Panacea, they will find a remedy which has saved thousands of lives; and thoroughly tested by the late Professors Chapman, Dewees and Gibson of the old University of Pennsylvania; besides hundreds of medical men eminent in their profession, continues to be a "forlorn hope" to sufferers worthy of its fifty years' reputation.

Swaim's Panacea is imitated and a preparation sold for it by druggists with a name somewhat similar. Purchasers therefore must be careful and see they get that containing the recommendations of the distinguished professors alluded to. It is seldom advertised in our public papers.

Swaim's Panacea is prepared only at Swaim's Laboratory, 113 South Seventh Street, below Chestnut, Philadelphia.

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In the Methodist church at High Point, July 20, by Rev. P. H. Dalton, Mr. HUGHES FISHER, of Chicago, to Miss LULA V. LINDSAY, of High Point, N. C.

On the evening of July 20th, near Hope, Ark., by Rev. W. T. Howison, Mr. CHAS. M. JOHNSON, formerly of North Carolina, and Miss CLAUDIA WRIGHT.

DIED.

☞Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

At his father's house, in Iredell county, July 16th, of typhoid fever, W. D. GRAY, youngest son of H. M. and R. C. Gray, aged 23 years, 8 months and 3 days.

He had been for some years a consistent member of Prospect church. Highly esteemed by all who knew him, he has left a large circle of warm friends and devoted relatives to mourn his death. But their "loss is his eternal gain." He died in full hope of glorious resurrection. F. P. H.

Near Franklin, on the 28th of June, Miss MARY R. SLAGLE, in the 22d year of her age.

For several years a quiet, consistent follower of Jesus, she died, as would be expected, calmly and peacefully. A happy home has lost part of its brightness. A family circle is broken on earth. But a happier home on high sheds its light upon her while she is numbered in that circle of glorified ones near the Throne.

Near Huntersville, in Cabarrus county, N. C., Mrs. MARGARET C. BARNETT, aged 30 years.

The deceased had been a member of Ramah church for a number of years. She had been confined to her bed for nearly sixteen months with consumption, and died in full triumph of a blessed immortality. She leaves a husband and two small children to mourn their loss. How blest the righteous when they die. J. W. B.

Near Huntersville, in Mecklenburg county, on the 9th of June, of billious fever, ISAAC W. BARNETT, in the 27th year of his age.

He leaves a widow and two little children and a number of near relatives to mourn their loss. But they hope that their loss is his eternal gain. He had been a member of the Presbyterian church of Ramah for a number of years, but at his death he was a member of Huntersville church. J. W. B.

In Statesville, at the house of her brother-in-law, Mr. J. B. Connelly, July 9th, Miss FLORENCE MAY McLELLAND. She was born Oct. 5, 1855.

From childhood her friends thought she could not live to be grown. At that early day consumption had marked her for its own. Her mind was as active as her body was frail. At times it sparkled with uncommon brilliancy. Her indomitable energy seemed to stay the encroachments of disease. Studious in her habits and eager for knowledge, she easily made herself acquainted with our best literature. February 15, 1879, she made a public profession of religion, and was received into the communion of the Presbyterian church at Statesville. Before taking this important step she studied the Confession of Faith. I know no one of her age better acquainted with the Scriptures. She gave abundant evidence that her heart was changed, and that her faith was "founded upon a rock." When the dreaded disease developed, it developed at once, and in all its power, prostrating mind and body, and by no uncertain marks shadowed forth the speedy coming of the last enemy. Such was her flow of spirits and ceaseless activity, never giving away to despondency, never complaining, that within three weeks of her death, no one, excepting her physician and immediate friends suspected that she was in a decline. These last three weeks were weeks of inexpressible suffering, with scarcely an interval of rest. It was sad to see one so lovely and beautiful called to pass through a burning fiery furnace heated seven times. Her body seemed to be consumed by a raging fire, which no skill nor kindness could relieve. But even then, when wild with pain, and all the springs of life were poisoned with disease, she gave continued expression to her unfaltering faith in Christ, and sometimes spoke of Him so beautifully as to move to tears those who were around her bedside. Two evenings before her death I was speaking to her of Jesus as her friend and Saviour. Assenting to all that was said, she added, "And He ever liveth to make intercession for us." These were the last words I heard her speak which I could understand.

PASTOR.

July 2d, at his home near Rocky River church, Cabarrus county, in the 46th year of his age, Dr. JAMES SEABORN BLAIR.

He will be sadly missed in many households besides his own, for he was a "beloved physician." Full of kindly social feeling, and full of "talk" his presence was a source of comfort and solace, while his medical skill frequently gave relief to many sick-beds. Of an eminently inquisitive, speculative, turn of mind, he thought for himself. For eighteen months prostrated by a disease which he well knew was almost always fatal, he had ample time to reflect upon the great matters of a future life. His dying declaration was "My only hope is in Jesus Christ the Saviour of sinners. I have worked this thing out, and the blood that cleanseth from sin is the only thing that gives peace. This is the only theory, the only theory, the only theory." J. M. W.

In Robeson county, on the 3d of May, 1880, Mrs. FLORA ANN McCORMICK, wife of Neill McCormick, in the 28th year of her age.

She leaves a disconsolate husband and one child, with a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her death; yet not as those without hope. For many years she was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and we trust she has entered into that rest which remains for the people of God.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Near Mallard Creek church, June 12, SARAH ULLIE, infant daughter of Mr. A. A. and Mrs. M. Garrison.

This lovely and intelligent little girl, not three years old, was the only remaining child of these bereaved parents. Within three years they have buried four children, and are now the second time left childless. The sweet voice of infancy that cheered and gladdened the hearts of fond parents has been hushed. But the Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice. Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? We have the highest evidence to believe and scriptural authority to say that it is well with the children. For He who has power on earth to forgive sins has said "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." While these children who were lovely and pleasant in their lives cannot come back to earth, their parents may go to them. May they by faith see the hand of a covenant-keeping God in their sore afflictions, and enjoy the precious consolations of religion under their crushing bereavements. For the Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. W. W. P.

Young's Analytical

Bible Concordance.

A Concordance. A Greek and Hebrew Lexicon. A Scriptural Gazetteer. 30,000 various New Testament Readings. 311,000 References—118,000 beyond Cruden.

THIS is perhaps the most important work in religious literature which the present century has produced. Being designed for the simplest reader of the English Bible, though greatly helpful to scholars of the most profound learning, it is, of course, important that its cost shall be brought within reach of those of most limited means. The reception already given to our prospectus assures us that the superlative merits of the work are appreciated by students of the Word of God, and that we may confidently anticipate an extremely large sale. We have therefore decided to make the price, until further notice, lower than any work of equal magnitude and value which has ever before been published.

Price, Complete, $1.50 and upwards, in various styles. Full particulars sent free on request.

FOR THE FAMILY

Cumbered About Much Serving.

Christ never asks of us such busy labor
As leaves no time for resting at His feet;
The waiting attitude of expectation
He oftimes counts a service most complete.

He sometimes wants our ear - our rapt attention,
That He some sweetest secret may impart;
'Tis always in the time of deepest silence
That heart finds fellowship with heart.

We sometimes wonder why our Lord doth place us
Within a sphere so narrow, so obscure,
That nothing we call work can find an entrance;
There's only room to suffer—to endure!

Well, God loves patience! Souls that dwell in stillness,
Doing the little things or resting quite,
May just as perfectly fulfill their mission,
Be just as useful in their father's sight,

As they who grapple with some giant evil,
Clearing a path that every eye may see!
Our Saviour cares for cheerful acquiescence,
Rather than for a busy ministry.

And yet He does love service, where 'tis given
By grateful love that clothes itself in deed;
But work that's done beneath the scourge of duty,
Be sure to such He gives but little heed.

Then seek to please Him, whatsoe'er He bids thee!
Whether to do—to suffer to lie still!
'Twill matter little by what path he led us,
If in it all we sought to do His will.

The Warning.

"Mother, may Sissy and I go after blackberries?"

"Where can you find them?"

"Oh, there's lots of 'em down in the railroad woods!"

"I'm afraid to have you go there, Johnny; you might be on the track, and be run over."

"Mother, I'll promise not to cross the track till after the morning train has passed, and then it will be quite safe; for you know there isn't another train before dinner time."

"Very well; you may go. Mind and take good care of Sissy."

In high glee the children started, carrying a basket that would have held a great many more berries than they were likely to pick. They soon reached a small patch of bushes, and Johnny showed Sissy where she could gather the berries without scratching her fingers or catching her hair in the briars, while he pushed bravely into the very midst where the thorns and fruit grew thickest. In half an hour they had all that were worth gathering, and moved on to look for more. They reached the railroad track, and Johnny, mindful of his promise, wandered along the side, carrying the basket on one arm, while he led Sissy by the hand.

"There ain't any more berries," said the little girl, fretfully.

"Yes, there are, pet; plenty, over there," pointing to the other side of the road. "Wait till the big cars go past, and then we'll go over and get them."

Sissy's face brightened at the promise. They walked slowly on until they turned a sharp curve in the road.

"Oh, what shall I do?" exclaimed Johnny, suddenly. "There's a tree across the track! The cars will be broken to pieces, and all the people killed. We must run and meet them. Oh, Sissy, see how fast you can run now!"

In his excitement Johnny did not think of leaving the basket, but hurried along over the rough ground, dragging Sissy by one hand, with the heavy basket in the other. They clambered over the fallen tree. Here the path became still worse. Large stones lay on the embankment, which was very steep, and seamed by the recent rains. Sissy began to fret. "Buddy, you run so fast! I'se tired!"

Johnny's heart was beating very rapidly. He knew the terrible danger that threatened the train; but he dared not leave the little girl and run on by himself.

"Oh, Sissy, don't cry yet!" he said, imploringly, adding aloud, "Oh, dear heavenly Father help us to stop the cars."

In the meantime we will visit the cars which Johnny is so anxiously expecting. A long train it is. Three hundred people stowed away in it.

How little they dreamed of danger! There sits an old gentleman who has been reading aloud, from his morning paper, the account of a terrible railroad accident on another line.

"Ah, well," he says, as he folds the sheet, "these things are always the result of carelessness. Engineer, conductor or somebody is always to blame for them. Now, the reason I like this road is because I know it to be carefully managed. The great point is safety. To be sure, they don't run as fast as some others; but it's safe; yes, sir, safe."

Ah, old gentleman, if you could look ahead two miles, to where that tree lies across the road just beyond a sharp turn, so that the engineer can't see it until too late to stop, you wouldn't lean back so comfortably for your nap.

Behind the old gentleman sits a pale woman, who has been listening to his talk. "Safe!" she repeats to herself. "Yes; safe because we are in God's hands—not for any other reason." And, as she pressed her baby to her bosom she whispers, softly, "Oh, God protect us, and may we all reach our homes in safety."

On flies the train. What is that object moving along so close to the trace, far down the road? It may be a cow. The shrill whistle strikes out the warning. They are shouting, and waving a hat.

"Only their fun," says the engineer, coolly.

"But it looks very earnest. There may be something in it, after all," he thinks, and slackens the speed of the train.

It was well he did. Another moment takes them round the bend and in full sight of the threatening danger.

'Stop the train! down brakes!" shouts the engineer. For a moment all is haste and terror, Then the cars stop—the locomotive actually touching the fallen tree; and the passengers pour out to see from what they have escaped. The perspiration breaks out on the old gentleman's face, as he looks at the tree and says, hoarsely, "Those children have saved our lives."

But the pale mother's eyes fill with tears, as she murmers, "Father, I thank thee for hearing my prayer."—Sel.

Cherry Pies and Logic.

Aunt Jerusha had just taken out of the oven six beautiful cherry pies. They were baked just right, and sent forth a most delicious flavor, at least so thought Master Ben Russell, who, as it was vacation, was on a visit to his aunt.

It was now about eleven o'clock a. m., and Ben, who had been chopping wood for his aunt, and hoeing potatoes for at least an hour, besides doing various other things which a city boy might reasonably be expected to do in the country—Ben, I say, felt hungry, and thought a piece of cherry pie would not be hard to take just then; he thought at least he could "worry it down." He was fond of logic as well as pie, so he thought he'd show Aunt Jerusha how to do it.

Now, Aunt Jerusha had a fine Maltese cat, which she valued very highly. She (the cat, not Aunt Jerusha) was sitting on a chair near the [illegible] watching a canary bird in a cage placed [illegible] to be above her reach. She thought [illegible] canary bird, or indeed the whole of a [illegible] would be far more delicious than [illegible] so she winked her eyes and curled [illegible] ing at Ben and then at the bird, as [illegible] said, "Pooh! pooh! nonsense, what's a piece of cherry pie to a real nice, sweet little bird? Ah! bird is good, I tell you."

Ben stared so solemnly at the cat as to attract the attention of his aunt.

"Bless me, Ben, what is the matter? You don't see anything wrong about my Maltesser, do you?"

Ben, pointing his finger at the cat, said, "I say, Aunt Jerusha, why do you keep such a cat as that?"

"Well," replied Aunt Jerusha, looking over her "specs" at the cat, and then at Ben, "I don't see why I shouldn't; she's a nice handsome cat, a well behaved cat, a good mouser, too—laws a me! I mind the day when old Uncle Robert's wife's sister Sally's little boy's cousin brought me that cat. Says he, 'It is a real Maltesser cat, and though it is small and weakly now, afore long it will be a most tremendous big puss and have a splendid long tail, and sich a great mouser it will be!' Yes, sir, Ben, as I said afore, she is a good, well behaved, industrious, famous mouser"—

"Oh! well, Aunt, you need not run over the whole catalogue of the cat; but now look here, who wants a cat with three tails?"

"Three tails, Ben, three tails! I don't see 'em, never saw 'em, she never had but one tail ever since the day that old Uncle Robert's wife's sister Sally's little boy's cousin brought her to me. Three tails! Laws a me! I never could allow a cat of mine to have three tails."

"Rub you glasses, Aunt Jerusha, shine 'em up and look again."

Aunt Jerusha removed her glasses, "rubbed 'em up" with her apron, replaced them exactly at the proper distance, and gazed steadfastly at her cat, and then at Ben.

"Boy," said she, "what do you mean? for I am certain that ever since old Uncle Robert's wife's sister Sally's—"

'Oh, never mind sister Sally just now, Aunt," cried Ben. "I'll make a bargain with you, Aunt Jerusha. If I prove that your cat has three tails then you are to give me a piece of one of those cherry pies."

"To be sure, Ben, I'll give you two pieces if you want 'em, but I know that cat has only one tail—laws a me! can't I see? I ain't blind—jess to think of that cat a walking about here for two years, with three tails, and me only seeing one all the time! Pshaw! talk to me! It's simply ridickolous. But go on, let me have your proof."

"Well, now, Aunt, look here. Your cat has one tail more than no cat. You agree to that, don't you?"

'Let me see," said Aunt Jerusha, knitting her brows and gazing intently at the cat; "one tail more than no cat; yes, that's so, my cat has one tail more than no cat has I admit that, but it proves nothing at all."

"Now, then, Aunt," continued Ben striking the forefinger of his right hand upon the palm of his left one at each word, as he uttered the tremendous proposition, "no cat has two tails!"

"I don't know about that," said his aunt, rather doubtfully. "Let me see, no cat has two tails; I don't believe I ever did see or hear of one with two tails; no, I never did, I guess that's so; go on, Ben."

'But do you agree to that proposition, Aunt Jerusha?" asked Ben.

"Yes, yes," exclaimed she, "you are bothering me now, but it's so, no cat has two tails."

"Then," continued Ben triumphantly, "if your cat has one more tail than no cat, and if no cat has two, of course it follows that your cat has three tails; so now hand over that piece of pie, for I am amazingly hungry."

"Well, well, laws a me! if these academy boys don't beat all natur. You've made your aunt tell a lie somehow, Ben; one tail more than no cat, and no cat has two tails, and my cat there has three! I don't believe it, if you do prove it. Let me see, can't I prove that no pie has more pieces than a pie, and give you a piece of no pie?"

"Oh! come now, Aunt, live up to your word; be good enough to hand over that piece of pie."

"Here it is, Ben, but you academy boys are getting too smart, I tell you; take your pie and clear out with you till dinner time. Come here, pussy, proof or no proof, you have only one tail, for I know that when old Uncle Robert's wife's sister Sally's little boy's cousin brought this cat to me—pshaw! then, what am I about? I must take the bread out of the oven at once; hiss, cat! take care of yourself, three tails and all," and the old lady laughed to herself as she went to work.—S. S. Cuthbert.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Woman's Superior Mental Imagery.

I have been astonished to find how superior women usually are to men in the vividness of their mental imagery, and in their powers of introspection. Though I have admirable returns from many men, I have frequently found others, even of the highest general ability, quite unable for some time to take in the meaning of such simple questions as these. "Think of some definite object, say your breakfast-table, as you sat down to it this morning, and consider carefully the picture that rises before your mind's eye. Is the image dim, or fairly clear? Is its brightness comparable to that of the actual scene? Are the objects sharply defined? Are the colors quite distinct and natural?' etc. On the other hand, I find the attention of women, especially women of ability, to be instantly aroused by these inquiries. They eagerly and carefully address themselves to consider their modes of thought, they put pertinent questions, they suggest tests, they express themselves in well-weighed language and with happy turns of expression, and they are evidently masters of the art of introspection. I do not find any particular tendency to exaggeration in this matter either among women or men; the only difference I have observed between them is that the former usually show an unexpected amount of intelligence, while many of the latter are as unexpectedly obtuse. The mental difference between the two sexes seems wider in the vividness of their mental imagery and the power of introspecting it than in respect to any other combination of mental faculties of which I can think.—Francis Calton, in Nature.

A Singular Root Growth.

A correspondent of "Die Natur" describes a singular form of growth of fibrous roots, which he and his associates observed in opening one of the ancient burial places, called cromlechs, at a town in the province of Posen, Prussia. Along with other objects usually found in such burial places, they noticed several urns, filled with ashes, calcined bones, and sand, and all closed with a cover shaped like a basin, fitting lightly over the rims of the urn. They took off the covers and emptied the vessels when they were astonished to find the surface of the sand in one of them was apparently covered with a deep-black peruke, ornamented with pearls of about the size of a pea. A more careful examination showed them that this curiously discovered "head dress" was composed of the fibrous roots of the horse tail rush, which grow abundantly on the top of the hill in which the graves had been made, the roots of the plant having penetrated the soil to the depth of three and a half feet, had made their way through the narrow crevices between the stones of the grave, had found the urns, had then pushed up perpendicularly through the minute space between the rim of the cover and the neck of the urn, and had arranged themselves within the urn into a regular net work. After the formation had been dried the course which the principal root had taken could be traced. The fibrous roots had branched out from it, and covered the whole surface of the sand in such a manner as to deceive the observer for a time with the resemblance of a beautiful head dress. The knots, which were taken for pearls, were irregularly distributed, and were manifestly thicker in places in the principal root. The formation affords an interesting illustration of the faculty which the roots of plants possess of seeking far and reaching the most suitable nourishment. The operation in the present instance involved a reversal of the common direction of the growth of roots, and that which resembled an effort to reach hidden food. The case furnished a curious parallel to the one which was described in this country a few years ago, in which the root of an apple tree which grew over the grave of Roger Williams, was found to have taken the place and shape of the body buried below.—Popular Science Monthly.

Balky Horses.

Among the suggestions said to be published by some Anti-cruelty to Animals Society, are these: If the horse when he balks, can have his attention diverted there is usually no trouble in starting him. This may be done in various ways of which the following are a few that have been employed: Take the horse out of the shafts and turn him around several times quite rapidly. This will make him entirely dizzy and lead him to forget that he does not wish to draw the load. A stout twine twisted around the fore-leg has been used as a remedy with good results. A string tied around the ear has the same effect. We have seen horses of the balkiest sort started in a moment by putting a lump of earth into their mouths. Even a piece of sugar or a handful of fresh grass will so divert the attention of a balker that he will often start off without trouble. Some mild treatment like these that set the animal to thinking of something foreign to his work is vastly better than any amount of whipping, and is much easier of application.—American Agriculturist.

Concerning Members of Congress.

Five thousand a year sounds like a little fortune itself to many a man in the South whose hard earnings annually fall to five hundred or less. But as a rule Southern men coming to Congress since the war have come with depleted purses or involved in debt. To such men life in Washington is a continual struggle between motives of economy and a laudable desire to credibly represent their people in social and official life. Many of them strike a fortunate middle ground between the prevalent extravagance of the capitol and the plainness which in a senator or representative is put down as meanness. Some live in high style, have a glorious time for a few years, and unless they strike a lucky speculation in stocks or accumulate by fortuitous ways, peculiar to certain classes of legislation, go home deeply in debt and have to borrow money for their next canvass. There are members who take cheap quarters, spend little or no money on receptions, theatres, carriages, etc., take thirty cent meals at restaurants, walk a mile or two to and from the Capitol, or on rainy days indulge in the luxury of a five cent ride in the street cars. Men like these save a considerable part of their salaries, and at the end of their terms are richer as well as wiser men. In the meantime their wives and children have been living in some country town, deprived of a share of enjoyment of the honors the old man gains, and of the pleasure of a few years' residence in the Capitol City. In many instances they had really better be in the country, though they probably don't think so.

I knew one Senator, a brilliant man, but indolent in habit and shabby-genteel in dress, who drew from bank at the end of his six years' term the comfortable sum of twenty odd thousand dollars, accumulations of savings from his salary. He lived plainly and remote from the Capitol, and would walk more than two miles to the Capitol when the thermometer stood in the nineties. He said he walked for his health. A few weeks ago I hunted up a certain member of this Congress for special reasons. He occupies a second story room on a street that might almost be called No Thoroughfare. The entrance is through a narrow brown door adjoining the shop in the first story, and at the top of the dark stairway, which brings you to his chamber, you grope your way to the first door—the one with the large square hole in it near the top, is his. There are no gas fixtures in the room. At night the long, many-jointed fixture in the hall is drawn through the hole in the door, and being doubled back so as not to interfere with the movement of the door, is lighted. Long strips of ancient papering hang down from the walls in some places, and the furniture consists of a very plain bed, a few chairs, a square wooden washstand with a hole in the top almost losing the china bowl and pitcher, and a small painted table covered with congressional bills and documents sprinkled with crumbs of smoking tobacco, stands on uncertain legs near the centre of the chamber. The occupant of this room receives a salary of five thousand a year. He will not resign on account of pecuniary distress.

Members of Congress have many unreasonable demands upon their purses, merely because they happen to be in the public service. Day after day they are importuned. Often an unknown man asks for money to get back to Augusta, or Raleigh, or Cincinnati, or to some other place. Another wants his check indorsed, another wants a loan to go into business, another pleads his war record and poverty to extract a loan. The forms of demands for money are as varied as they are numerous, and scarcely a cent is ever refunded.—Charleston News and Courier.

The Mouse-Eating Spider at the Zoo.

This formidable insect is one of the latest arrivals at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park. It comes from Bahia, a maritime province of Brazil, and is common in the South American forests. Its body, which is covered with hair, is three inches in length, and its legs are in proportion; so that, when extended, it is about as big as a cheese plate. It feeds on mice and small birds, which it catches by springing suddenly upon them from ambush in the hollow of a tree or beneath a large leaf. At the Zoo it is fed chiefly on a large kind of cockroach (twice as big as those often met with in our kitchens), which comes to England in the cages in which certain animals are imported, and have hitherto been a great nuisance to the managers of the gardens.—Graphic.

SECULAR NEWS.

The lightning has played some queer freaks lately, in Wilmington. Mr. A. D. Brown's house, on Fifth street, between Orange and Ann streets, was struck on the 21st inst. On the 22d, Wednesday last, the house in which Mr. S. P. Collier resides, on Front street, near Red Cross, was struck, and on the same day the house of Mr. R. J. Jones, on Market street. Considerable damage was done to the property of Messrs. Brown and Collier. The colored servant of Mr. Collier, with an infant in her arms, was knocked down, but soon recovered; beyond this no one was injured.

Prof. Charles William Dabney has been elected to succeed Prof. Redd in the chair of agricultural chemistry in the University.

The crops in the Cape Fear section are reported as very fine.

On Thursday last, during a severe thunder storm in Stanley county, while a party were engaged in thrashing wheat, the lightning struck among them, killing Mrs. Press Maulden outright. Col. Shankle was thought to be dead but revived again. Mr. L. F. Shankle had a foot paralyzed. Mr. Bosworth was severely shocked, and two of the horses attached to the machine were knocked down and badly bruised.—Wadesboro Herald.

We learn that the lightning struck the residence of A. S. Colwell, Esq., at Harrell's Store, Sampson county, on the 6th instant, passing down the chimney and stove-pipe and going through the floor, doing no other damage to the building. Providentially no one was hurt, though several persons were in the store.—Warsaw Brief Mention.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

YELLOW FEVER

That this terrible disease has for years held a despotic sway, at certain seasons of the year, in portions of our own fair land, and in other countries, is known by each and every one. As well known is it, that a cure, or even a preventive, has not been, heretofore discovered.

It is known to every intelligent man and woman, that the reason for this fearful scourge is neither more nor less than the malarial poison that emanates from low marshy lands—whether adjacent to salt or fresh water - especially in certain stages of the drying process, under hot sun; as well are these familiar with the fact, that uncleaned cess-pools, insufficient drainage, unremoved filth of any kind or character, are generators of this same death-dealing miasma. Observations of centuries has made every person, blessed with the least faculty of discernment, acquainted with the effect of this subtle malarial poison. Each and all know that Typhus and Intermittent Fevers are the lesser natural consequences of an inhalation of this poisonous exhalative, and that Yellow Fever is the greater.

After a careful reading of the late report of the National Board of Health, no other conclusion can be drawn, than that if the blood is kept in a healthy condition the birth, growth and spread of yellow fever is materially lessened, if not actually prevented. It is a matter understood by all and every one, that if the kidney and liver the organs that filter and cleanse the blood—are kept in a wholesome and sound condition, this same vital fluid will ever be clear from impurities. That these organs, the kidney and liver, can be kept free from disease, and at all times in a condition to well and faithfully perform their duties, is a matter beyond dispute, cavil or argument, and equally it is true, that a free use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills, will actually compel these same organs to perform their allotted functions.

Testimonials by the thousands are in the hands of the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure vouching for its curative qualities in all diseases of kidney and liver, and hence as a cleanser of the blood, and as well a preventive to yellow fever, we have no hesitation in offering it to the public.

WARNER'S

Kidney and Liver Cure.

The Stubborn Convinced.

In writing of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Bitters, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, the Sentinel, Weedsport, N. Y., has following: "That these possess all the remedial qualities claimed for them is a matter beyond dispute; bona fide testimonials by the thousand from well known citizens in public and private life are evidences strong enough to convince the most stubborn doubter, that they are the best medicines for the diseases for which recommended, ever yet known to the public or the physicians.

Game Played For.

The Republican, Omaha, Nebraska, says: "In the game of life the 'stake' played for is health, wealth and happiness. Each of these can be obtained by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetis Cure, Warner's Safe Pills, Bitters, Nervine and Tonic."

Gratitude Lavished.

Is clipped from the columns of the Journal-Courier, New Haven, Conn., the following endorsement "Gratitude of character strong, earnest and impetuous, is daily, in person and by letter, being lavished upon H. H. Warner & Co. for the introduction of, and the making so extensively known, their wonderful cure, named as Warner's Kidney and Liver Cure."

Mental Strain Relieved.

The Washington, D. C., Critic says: "It is intimated to us that numbers of the Senate and House are freely using Warner's Safe Nervine and relief of nervous prostration incident upon the severe strain upon their mental powers."

Not Open to Argument.

The testimony of the Sunday Herald, Rochester, N. Y., is taken from their columns and is to the effect "that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is a positive cure for disabilities for which it is a specific, there is no disputing; neither is there the 'ghost' of a chance to call into being a negative to so positive an opinion."

Honorable Men.

The Sunday Tribune, Rochester, N. Y., in one of issues prints the following: "The proprietors (of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies), each and all, are men born here, and here have lived the whole period of their stay on earth, and are men who have the unbounded confidence of all who know them."

Speedy and Sure.

The Journal of Commerce, Boston, says: "As a speedy and sure cure this (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure) remedy is safe, and the cases wherein it misses are those beyond the reach of human relief."

Faith and Confidence.

The following is clipped from the News, Marysville, Kansas: "In calling the attention of our readers to 'Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and other Safe Remedies,' we do so with a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good and said of them."

Good Advice.

The Daily Advertiser, St. Albans, Vt., has the following: "We feel sure that if such of our friends as are sufferers from diseases of Kidneys and Liver would but use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, they would be benefitted."

Quality Maintained.

The Rochester, N. Y., Express says: 'So far as the standard of quality is concerned, parties can rest assured the same will be maintained up to the present high character. As a remedy for the speedy cure of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and all complaints of the Kidneys and Liver, no article of any kind or character can equal it (Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure).

Wonderful to Contemplate.

From the columns of the Republican, Springfield Mass., is taken the following: "It is a settled fact that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are all they are represented to be by the proprietors, H. H. Warner & Co. The way they go into the habitations of those afflicted with disease for which recommended is truly wonderful to contemplate."

"Bona Fide."

The following is taken from the columns of the York Daily, York, Pa: "The testimonials in possession of H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, are not manufactured to order, are bona fide, and have attached date, time, place and signiture of the writers thereof."

Dividend-Paying.

The following is found in the columns of the Standard, New Bedford, Mass: "Parties, after using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, pronounce it the best dividend-paying (in health and happiness) property they ever handled.

Evidence Corroborated.

The Sun, Indianapolis, Ind., has the following: "Testimonials, not numbered by hundreds, but by thousands, are in hands of H. H. Warner & Co., all furnishing ample corroborative evidence that as curative, for specific diseases for which recommended, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies are unqualified and pronounced success."

Unbounded Confidence.

Peck's Sun, Milwaukee, Wis, in referring to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and other of Warner's Safe Remedies, has the following: "H. H. Warner & Co, Rochester, N. Y., are the sole proprietors, we have a perfect faith in the efficiency of their preparations, and an unbounded confidence in the truth of all that is good, and said of them."

Surest and Best.

The Journal, Battle Creek, Mich, thus puts it: "The surest safest, best blood purifying medicine known is Warner's Safe Bitters, in connection with Warner's Safe Pills. Regular practitioners prescribe them as a remedy for impure poisoned blood."

Confident, Reliable.

"In writing of the Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, of which H. H. Warner & Co., are proprietors, the Evening Dispatch, York, Pa, says: "We say all this that is good of them as we have a perfect faith in the efficiency, the preparation, and unbounded faith in the truth of all that is said good of it."

Deserve a Monument.

The Standard, Syracuse, N. Y., is the journal from which the following extract is cut: "That the proprietors of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure are entitled to a monument is unmistakably true. It is an indisputable fact that these parties be and are looked upon as Good Samaritans."

IN MEMORIAM.

Continuation of the Address of Rev. Wm. S. Lacy before the Alumni Association of Davidson College.

Fifteen years have elapsed since peace settled upon the land. Of the years of agony and fear that followed the struggle, now happily past, I shall not speak. But of the four years before, the years of bloody strife, let me say,—when every heart in our Southern land thrilled to the cry to arms and throbbed for liberty,—though many of the graduates of this Institution had entered the calling of peace, and duty summoned them to minister to spiritual anguish—there was not a battlefield from Bethel to Appomattox in which Davidson boys did not display their patriotism and their valor. Many rose to prominence and command. Of the living I speak not. At the head of his regiment, the 51st North Carolina, as gallant a body of men as ever kept step to Dixie, fell Col. J. C. S. McDowell of Burke, brave, wise, intrepid—just as he was leading his men to victory; Lt. Col. R. H. Gray of Randolph county, of the class of 1851, was likewise killed in action; Col. J. L. Miller of York District, S. C., of the class of 1848 fell while commanding his regiment; Col. William Edward Dick of Sumter, S. C., a generous, noble-hearted fellow of the first talent, died in camp. Of the many, of less rank, whose blood stained the heather, time fails me to speak, though from Manassas to Petersburg and on many a western field, there were martyrs of a fallen cause. And many sleep in nameless graves—among the great army of the unknown dead. Let us not let their glory sleep too.

"What though no stately column
Their cherished names may raise,
To dim the eye and move the lip
With gratitude and praise!

The blue sky hung with bannered clouds
Their solemn dome shall be,
All heaven's choiring winds shall chant
The anthem of the free—

The Spring with vine-clad arms shall clasp
Their hillocked resting places,
And Summer roses droop above
With flushed and dewy faces.

Fair daisies, rayed and crowned shall spring,
Like stars from out their dust,
And look to kindred stars on high
With eyes of patient trust."

"And their deeds—proud deeds—shall remain for us,
And their names—dear names—without stain for us,
And the glories they won shall not wane for us;
In legend and lay
Our heroes in gray—
Though dead, shall live over again for us."

Twenty-one years ago I received my diploma. I have therefore reached my majority and may speak for myself. Ours was the last class that graduated from the old Chapel. May I speak of my associates of that day? I do so reluctantly, for my feelings are warm and these tributes must necessarily be brief and imperfect, but I do so the more readily as I believe no one of that generation of students has been called to fill the place I fill to-day.

Of the class of 1857, two fell in the war, Bailey and Emerson, both brave and true men. Less than two years ago, a third member of that class after long months of wasting disease, and weary though not impatient waiting, entered into rest. No lovelier spirit, no more faithful or enjoyable companion,—no more gifted or accomplished minister—no more gifted or accomplished scholar, no truer friend of this institution, passed from earth, than when Henry Howard Banks fell asleep in Jesus. The fourth and only surviving member of that class, may he long be spared, is that cultivated gentleman and distinguished lawyer, Major DeVane of Wilmington, whose position as orator on this occasion, his professional engagements preventing him from occupying, I have unwisely undertaken to fill.

Of the class of 1858, consisting of nine, so far as I know, six survive. Rev. Robert LeRoy Douglass of South Carolina, died quite recently under circumstances that impress the memory. He was a good man, earnest and much beloved. Two fell in battle. Who knew them that did not love them?—John Michael Moore of Chester, and William White of Sumter. Noble, high-minded, spirited,—they were true representatives of their dearly loved and gallant State. We give them the tear of friendship, and recall with sad delight their manly forms and that charm of manner that won and retained friends. William White I knew well. His hand opened the door to me to yonder hall. He had as brave and honorable a soul as ever tenanted mortal frame. He was born to command—beloved in his class, and especially in his society, true to his friends and generous to a fault. Peace to his memory.

Of the class of 1859, quorum pars fui, eight of fourteen still live on the earth, and six live in memory. The pious and godly Barry whose life adorned the sacred calling he so yearned to enter, died after senior examination, and before graduation, and sleeps in yonder graveyard. The earliest called after leaving these scenes of study was one who bore an honored name and bore it well—Edmund Martin Soales. Well do I remember my loved classmate;—fair as a girl—of fresh unfailing spirits, with mind acquisitive and retentive, (winning the second honor easily)—ere yet the badge of manhood wreathed his face, he fell by disease in the State of Texas.

"Oh had it but been told us, then
To mark whose lamp was dim,
From out that rank of fresh-lipped men,
Would we have singled him?"

Two fell in the war;—one slain by a ball crashing though his brain at Gettysburg, James Bingley Lowrie of Charlotte; the other, Archibald Scott McLauchlin of Cumberland, dying of disease in camp. How different in traits of character, but both warm friends and true;—the one bold, aspiring, energetic,—the other shrinking, quiet, unambitious, and of most lovely spirit. By the hand of disease, before the war, James Porter Graham, a man unusually pure, sincere, and lovely in character and of earnest and useful piety—and John Franklin Watson, since the war, reticent, studious, successful, and an honored minister of the gospel;—each died in the morning of their day.

Of the class of 1860—twenty in number, nine have "gone over to the great majority"—of whom six gave their lives in the service of their country: Edmund Strudwick of Alabama, first—at Manassas in 1861; Whitfield Burkhead of Iredell, near Wilmington of yellow fever—1862; followed by Larkin M. Downs of Mecklenburg, the same year—all good men and true, Pinckney Wharton Hatrick, the last of the family bearing the name, from Buffalo Church, Guilford county, as one who knew him well writes to me, "a thorough gentleman, an humble Christian, a brave and true soldier and a trusty friend"—was killed in battle in the second day's fight at Gettysburg. Good, honest, brave old Joseph Thompson of Mecklenburg, one of the best in his class for scholarship, influence and character, lost his life at Williamsburg in the Peninsular campaign. Lost in this sad and glorious record is Clough L. Sims of Union District, S. C., a pure and high-toned gentleman, who offered his life on the altar of country, torn and wounded by the explosion of the mine on the lines at Petersburg, in July 1864.

William McDuffie of Marion, S. C., died in 1862, while a student of theology, with much promise of a useful life unfulfilled; and John Calvin Grier of Mecklenburg, after the war, died a peaceful death. The last called in this class, nearly two years ago, is my dear friend, B. Frank Wilson of Charlotte, a worthy son of an honored sire. He died suddenly and alone, with no one to witness his departure but his God, and the angels sent to minister to them who are heirs of salvation. He was a man singularly free from ambition, or worldliness, or selfishness—pure in heart and speech, honorable and high-minded.

The last class I knew was the class of 1861. Though all who graduated were in the army and served with honor, nearly every one as officers, only one is dead, and he fell in action, being slain in battle in 1862—James Monroe McCaslan of Abbeville, S. C., a man modest, brave and sincere.

Since last we met three Alumni have been removed from our number. One, not yet entered upon his chosen profession, still engaged in assiduous and conscientious study, died in the Seminary at Columbia during the winter—John F. Mayne, of the class of 1877. How highly esteemed, how dearly loved by those who knew him best, let the tears that still bedim his newly made grave attest.

In November, 1879, at Washington, Ark., Rev. William Brauch Crawford, of the class of 1872, entered, through the gate of death, another state of existence. At the early age of 28 his life work was done, and the Master bade him come up higher. His father, a graduate of this institution, though living in the far West, sent his son here to the halls he loved, and of which he is now an honored guardian. Zealous, faithful and useful as a minister, thoroughly conscientious and diligent as a student, and sincerely and devotedly loved as a pastor and a friend, his life, though so short, is a fragrant memory and an earnest incentive to us who remain.

Of the third I can scarcely trust myself to speak. A thrill of sadness shivered through the whole State when it was told, in hushed accents, that Colonel Frank Little of Richmond county was dead! He graduated at the head of his class in 1848. Everybody honored him and esteemed him, and every one who knew him loved him. One knows not which most to admire, his singular purity of soul, his modesty and gentleness of demeanor, his nobility and generosity of nature, the cordiality and sincerity of his friendship, his exalted sense of honor and duty, or his simple and unaffected piety. So round and perfect a character was his that no trait seemed to eclipse another. Perhaps his gentleness was supreme. He was as pure and as gentle as a woman. Possessed of a fine mind which large leisure and wide reading had abundantly and elegantly cultivated, gifted with an ineffable charm of manner, a delightful affability, an indescribable magnetism, that attracted and fastened without effort all to him, he was universally popular among all classes, and ardently loved by rich and poor, and any office within the people's gift was his, not for the asking, but if he would only consent to accept. He represented his county in the State legislature, but wearied of public life, and though importuned to allow his name to be presented for Congress, and for the highest honors of the State, he firmly declined. He loved the quiet of the country, he loved the companionship of chosen friends and he dearly loved his home and the family circle. He was ardent in his attachments and exceedingly tender in his feelings.

"His life was gentle and the elements
So mixed in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, 'This was a man.'"

But let no one think that because gentleness so ruled in his nature that there was any lack of strength, he was the manliest of men. It was my good fortune to serve during the latter part of the war in the famous brigade (Pettigrew's, afterwards MacRae's) of which he had been a distinguished officer. He was promoted from the captaincy of his company to the lieutenant-colonelcy of his regiment (not forsaking his men that he led with him to the war) on the field, for conspicuous gallantry;—Yes, on that bloody hill at Gettysburg, where North Carolinians were found as far in the fated front as any troops (Colonel Little among them), notwithstanding what so-called histories may say; and there it was he lost that arm whose empty sleeve told so eloquently of his misfortune and his valor. His men—whom he would not leave, though offered promotion in other commands, and whose families he cared for when at home—fairly idolized him. "He's as brave as Julius Cæsar and as kind as a mother" I've heard them say, as they would tell of his courage, of his consideration of their comfort and disregard of his own, of his wise foresight and gallant behavior. Being wounded, and having fallen into the hands of the enemy, he won even their admiration and friendship by the loveliness, nobility and manliness of his character. No longer able to serve in the field, he served in the councils of the State, retiring to private life of his choice. His death was as beautiful as his life. Over those sacred scenes let me draw the vail of becoming privacy.

I make no apology for thus speaking of him. I knew him and loved him. So did you all. But his relation to this Institution and to this Association make this eulogy, however unworthy of the subject, eminently fitting for the occasion. He was an earnest and devoted friend of this Institution. His influence was cast wholly in its favor. He was an ardent alumnus, an active member of our Association, and chosen by it one of the trustees of the College. For these reasons he occupied a peculiarly close relation to us, and to his Alma Mater. How truly and wisely he loved it, and how intelligently and devotedly he consulted its welfare, we all remember with gratitude and with sadness.

Such as he—ah! there are none such—bring glory to any institution. May there be many to emulate his virtues!

SEPARATION A NECESSITY.

A writer in the Christian Observer, of Southern birth, who was at the Madison Assembly, indulges in censorious reflections against the Southern Church for the separation existing between the two wings of Presbyterianism. The present writer has all the time been impressed with the conviction that it resulted in more good than evil. But whether good or evil it is a necessity. It is true they hold many doctrines in common, but there are principles vitally important to the purity and integrity of the Church about which they are not agreed. Can two walk together except they be agreed? With our convictions it would be treachery to Christ's crown and kingdom not to stand firm in the defence of the points in question. The existing separation is a positive duty.

A recent fluent declaimer on female heroism refers to the "Phocian women who voted unanimously to fire the house that sheltered them rather than become captives of the Thessalonian warriors engaged in battle with their husbands;" and holds up for admiration the act of Marie Theresa, twenty-four years of age and heir of a throne, throwing herself on the mercy of the conquered Hungarians, then riding, with a new-born babe at her breast, up the mount at Presburg, and waving her sword eastward, westward, northward and southward, inspiring the applauding people to a successful revolution against Frederick the Great. This is all very well. It is really nice. But the climax is not reached till he exclaims, "But we point you to nobler heroines in the persons of gifted and pious ladies, who, uninfluenced by political considerations, have abandoned domestic bliss and law-abiding localities, and elegant homes to teach the freedmen and their children amid the ostracism and perils of distant States. No braver ladies have figured in the history of our civilization than those who have studied long and severely, graduated with honor, and then have scattered themselves, from the cotton fields of the Atlantic to the distant cane-brakes of the Mississippi Valley, for the one object of instructing the ignorant. Excommunicated by contiguous society, slenderly supported, dwelling amid omnipresent dangers, and working for God as on the roof of a powder mill, they yet count it a joy to lay their educational acquisitions at the foot of Christ's cross."

Ministers especially should avoid heavy drafts on the imagination, and erratic flights in the regions of fancy. One truth is worth more than a million eloquent sentences concocted in an extravagant, unrestrained imagination. "Abandoned domestic bliss and elegant homes, dwelling amid omnipresent dangers, and working on the roof of a powder mill" The present writer has been instructing colored people more than thirty years but never found himself on a volcano, nor a powder house, nor amid omnipresent nor any other dangers, was never ostracised, not excommunicated from virtuous and refined society, and can any day go into the plantations and teach the laborers any lesson the Bible contains, and at its close be cordially received into the palatial residence of the proprietor, and enjoy that hospitality which, perhaps, only South Carolinians are accustomed to extend. The wealthiest and most influential are courteous and hospitable to the teachers of Christianity. Christian laborers are more pleasant and profitable than others. A worldly, if you will not admit a higher, motive would prevent a powder-house position, or omnipresent dangers. If displeasure has been exhibited toward religious teachers, perhaps it is because lessons not in the Bible have been inculcated. Were I to go North and teach the Bible it is confidently believed my treatment would be proper; but were I to engender discontent and communism among the laboring classes, and foment more antagonism between capital and labor, it would doubtless be different. Much moral mischief is frequently done by not properly bridling the unruly member. It is useful, but its history is largely a history of crime.

The writer was once a slave-holder. Some of his former servants are getting along very poorly—too fond of drinking, spending too much of their money for tobacco, and too much time fooling with pistols—others are doing very well; but they constantly affirm that they work harder and live more slenderly than when they were slaves. But I do not desire that they should be remanded into bondage, nor is any one authorized to charge this upon me.

If it is really true Southern professors have so much iniquity in their hearts, and are guilty of so many infractions against human rights, it is the duty of the Northern church not to countenance nor fellowship such evil doers. They should stand aloof, and cease not to confront a stern opposition to such flagrant vices. And on the other hand, if they are gratuitous assertions, misrepresentations and slanders, is it not equally incumbent on Southern professors to separate from those who do not love the truth, and do not make it the governing principle in all their conduct? When there is such a radical, and distant divergence of convictions, the Scriptures require the parties to separate, and remain apart. Until their love of truth will enable them to apprehend the truth alike, there is an absolute necessity for separation; and the less there is now said about it, the earlier it will terminate. In its debatable points the subject has long since been exhausted. Silence is now the most efficient remedy. Will not our Northern brethren cease to agitate? "Let us have peace." And in the atmosphere of peace, Christian union will ultimately have its perfect work.

MY LESSON.

There was a time in which I did not know
The blessedness of sorrow, nor could see
How that dread cup proof of Christ's love could be,
Nor why He gives because He loves us so.
I was impatient, and to learn was slow;
And yet, this lesson He has taught to me
Watching, until I learned the mystery—
With tenderest care, while I lay faint and low,
When faded from me every earthly thing,
Through the long darkness He was close beside,
'Twas to Him only I could call and cling,
'Twas on His love alone that I relied—
That wondrous love no mortal e're can sing
Or know, who has not suffered by His side.

THE LITTLE FAMILY FOXES.

BY MRS MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

One of the most malignant of the family foxes is discourtesy, and he creeps into households where one would not suppose it possible for him to find even momentary hospitality. People who are ordinarily polite, well-bred and genial, are sometimes guilty of rudeness in manner and speech and action at home, of which they would be ashamed in society. Parents are hasty and fretful in their way of addressing or reproving children, and children forget the respect and honor due to parents. A great deal of unhappiness overclouds homes, which might be bright as the morning, but for this wretched habit of brusqueness and incivility, which fastens on some unfortunate victims like a second nature. It has its different phases, to be sure. When papa indulges in it, the family are apt to say that he is tired. If it is mamma who is irritable and peevish, it is intimated that she is nervous. Like the lady in a charming little magazine-story, it is benevolently supposed that she may have "Neural" on the top of her head!" When Aunt Kitty or Sister Sophy are short and snappish, it is excused because they were up late last night at a party, and it is only little Floy or small Tom who is sent to bed in disgrace for answering impertinently and frowning blackly. A little leaven leaveneth the whole family lump, and it is curious to observe how rapidly and certainly this evil infection spreads. "Quiet people have quiet children," said a plain woman to me the other day, and she was right. Persons who are invariably polite to each other in the presence of their sons and daughters, do not often have to check the latter in a thoughtless or improper manner of speaking, for courtesy, as well as its opposite, is atmospheric and educational. It is worth while, if the fox we are thinking of has intruded into our vineyard and begun his work of spoiling our tender grapes of good-will, of gentleness, and of daily cheer, to think how best to banish him. There are three magic P's, which have never failed, when properly used, to utterly rout and destroy the subtle foe. Their names are patience, perseverence and prayer. If you feel that your family has fallen into the custom of being cross and unmannerly, pray first to have your own heart and temper sweetened, then meet angularity and crookedness with invincible patience, and be not discouraged in setting a good example.

Another little family fox is inconsiderateness. A family is composed of a number of individuals who have their several rights, duties and engagements. It is due to the whole that each one shall remember that he or she does not stand alone, but is one of a band or circle or little commonwealth. It may be a small thing to you personally that you arrive at dinner late by a half-hour, that you rise tardily in the morning, or that you bring unexpected guests in, without consulting the convenience of the hour or day. Yet just such trifles often annoy, vex and disturb a whole house, and meals and social evenings, which might be festivals of love, are rendered imperfect and unsatisfactory. Remember that selfishness is at the root of all want of consideration for others' rights and comfort. When we see a younger person occupying the easiest chair and leaving the hardest for some one of superior age, when one person monopolizes the light, or insists on conversing, or reading aloud, where the rest have books of their own, we are sure that want of thought has become a tolerated vice in that household. It ought to be repressed and driven away.

Another less common family fox, is lack of family loyalty. There are few families of any size who have not within their bounds one or another who is odd, or peculiar, or hard to get on with. But even so, it is not dignified or noble to make the peculiarities and eccentricities which are that person's "way," the theme of conversation with friends. Husbands and wives who tell of each other's faults and foibles, even to confidential associates, lose something of their own self-respect and sink in the estimation of their listeners. If there be a brother who has gone astray, if a sister be trying and unreasonable, if an aged person or an invalid have moods and fancies, if even a little child is disobedient and wilful, there is no need of revealing it to those outside the family. It is a family affair, strictly and should not be bruited about, or paraded before other eyes. Let people suspect what they choose, but never, if you value your family and love your kindred as you ought, make their sins and their defects matter of gossip. To some extent each modern household should preserve tradition of the mediæval castle, and isolate itself with moat, and drawbridge, and portcullis, from the espionage and the intrusion of all the world. Blood is thicker than water, and should be loyal to its own.

A family fox who is greatly to be dreaded is false pride. There are families who endure miseries untold because they live beyond their means, because they wish to dress, and visit, and entertain as neighbors do who have tenfold their income. Of this narrow and vulgar ambition, a brood of sordid and unwholesome things are born. It is impossible that children shall develop symmetry of character in houses where all life is a frantic struggle to appear as grand as the next one, the grandeur all tinsel and vain show. Exorcise this fox, and rather let plain living and high thinking than aught that is merely pushing and ostentatious possess your energies and serve your desires.—Christian at Work.

ONE CURE FOR DOUBT.

The scientist, while assuming to hold an impartial attitude, insists upon receiving the truth through a single channel, and will have none of it unless it comes ticketed by the way of the senses. Instead of opening the whole nature to its incoming, he persists in fastening a method upon that which is as free and pervasive as air, and the possession of which is, after all, more a matter of growth than of intellectual acquisition.

It is marvelous how the experience which life brings, without any direct or conscious instruction, makes its deeper meanings plain to us. The parable, the scriptural utterance, the poem read last year, was only partially understood, but now that some great sorrow has deepened and enriched our natures it is luminous with meaning. It remains unchanged, but we have grown into the truth which it embodies. What was sealed to the intellect is opened to the heart, and the problem that remained unsolved after the bitterest mental struggle is cleared by some sorrow or some share in the sorrow of another.

So long as the skeptic shall insist that the religion of Christ shall make itself clear in all points to his intellect, so that no mysteries shall remain and no deeper truths be withheld from a nature enlarged and enriched to receive them, so long it will be full of difficulties to him, and so long he will be incompetent to pass upon its claims or comprehend its spirit.

There were doubtless multitudes in Christ's day who, seeing in Him only a man's nature, were perplexed by His wisdom and His miracles, and were glad to throw upon Him the blame of their own blindness. To Him only who saw in Him a divine as well as human character was His life consistent and comprehensible. The same thought was in Hawthorne's mind when he compared the man who brings a critical spirit to the study of Christianity to one who should gaze only upon the outside of the great cathedral window, finding in it nothing but dull colors and confused designs. Let the same observer enter, and a picture glows before him of which the exterior gave no hint. Saint and apostle and angel are set in a radiant light, grouped about One whose form is luminous with heavenly beauty.

Some questions must be held in abeyance, some mysteries must await the coming of the fuller day; but in the meantime we are not left in doubt as to our duty. The spirit and the work which are the teaching and the fruit of Christianity are not left in uncertainty, and the lines by which we are to be led to clear spiritual understanding are drawn so sharply that none can mistake them. If we have doubts which we cannot resolve into certainties, and are perplexed by mysteries which we cannot make clear to ourselves, it is plain we are not to wear ourselves out in agonizing struggle, but to live the Christlike life, to work and to wait. Little by little the fuller light will come. A thousand acts of love performed will bring us a thousand times in communion with the God of truth, the crust of bread broken will feed our souls while it feeds another's body, and the cup of cold water given in the Spirit of Christ to one of His little ones will reflect for us some glimpse of the divine truth for which we seek; for it is written "if any man will do His will he shall know of the doctrine."—Christian Union.

THE DANGER.

We are not to suppose that the danger to Republican institutions in France, from the presence and teaching of the Jesuits in that country, is merely imaginary. Jules Ferry in a recent debate in the French Senate gave a summary of the works, especially the historical ones, put into the hands of Jesuit pupils. Among others he cited the writings of Pere Courval who "arranged" "The History of France" by Pere Loriquet, and the works of Pere Gazeau who imitated Pere Courval. The school inspectors find these books distributed and taught everywhere as standard classical works. They attack the Revolution and glorify the revocation of the edict of Nantes. They abuse such moderate men as Necker and Turgot; protest against the idea of national sovereignty and proclaim in the most forcible manner that France was beaten in the last war because she deserted the Pope. In fact their books and the whole course of Jesuit teaching attacks the very foundation on which the present state of things in France rests, and wish to be countenanced in teaching what, if believed and followed, would overturn the Republic. The struggle, in short, is between the lay spirit and the theocratic; between the Syllabus and the Revolution, and in such a life and death struggle it is not surprising that the black soldiers of Loyola should, as in other days, receive notice to go and at once. If an organized and powerful body of ecclesiastics were to proclaim to all their pupils, and in all their text-books, that Queen Victoria was a usurper and that whoever assassinated her would do a work excellent and meritorious in the eyo of Heaven, we doubt if either Canada or Britain would be at all a comfortable place for the permanent residence of these ghostly fathers. The Jesuit opposition to, and hatred of all Republican institutions in France are practically not much less than would be implied in the case we have supposed. When it is a struggle for existence, nations, like individuals, may be excused if they take measures of a degree of vigor which in less exciting times might be thought extreme. Still the very life of popular institutions is free discussion, and it is a risky business to resort to physical force, when as Guizot used to say, "those who stand by the tongue ought to be put down by the tongue." It is said that there are 150,040 members of different monastic orders in France. Of these there are 127,753 women and 30,287 men. Of 416 associations of men only thirty-two are authorized, but the latter are by far the most numerous. Only 21,000 persons belong to these unauthorized fraternities, and these must either submit or leave France. But the Jesuits must leave in any case.—Canada Presbyterian.

THE CHRISTIANITY OF EVERY-DAY SPEECH.

Those who have undertaken to lead Christian lives, and who are known to the world as having made confession of duties and obligations of high and unchanging character, are in constant danger of permitting themselves to forget the true nature of their obligations, and of being more or less influenced by the purposes and the sentiments of those who are not Christians at all. He who would constantly rise higher in the performance of Christian duty, must constantly struggle to rise; for in the Christian life there is rightly no such thing as stagnation or subsidence. When we are not positively and aggressively seeking to do right, and to be worthy of the Name we have named, we may be sure that our non-action will result in a practical acceptance of principles of thought and life which have been framed by the enemies of religion. In our work and our play, our thought and our speech, and all the conduct of our daily lives, it cannot be doubted that when we cease to shape our doings in obedience to our sense of what is right and wrong in the Christian sense, we fall at once to the level of those whose principles of living are essentially worldly and unchristian. It is hard to climb; it is easy to let go; and so it is that too many Christians practically throw the influence of their lives, or of a very large part of their lives, into the worldly and material side of the balance, and so destroy when it is their duty to upbuild, and follow the broad way of popular usage rather than the narrow one of individual duty.

Take, for instance, but one line of obligation, that of not conforming to low and unspiritual standards of speech. Are we always as careful as we ought to be in what we say about the religion we claim to believe? Do we always speak of it as a true and holy thing, about whose verity we have no doubt? Do we talk reverently of its Bible, its sacraments and other offices, its serving ministers, its gatherings, and its places of worship? The non-christian world has its own vocabulary of speech concerning all these things; do we ever adopt parts of that vocabular, as expressive of our own feelings, or, at any rate, of the feelings which, in our cowardly moments, we affect to have? We may be sure that there are plenty of people who are ready, and more than willing, to treasure up what we may lightly say of things which we profess to hold dear, and to try to justify the coldness and selfishness of their own unbelief by any lack of warmth or positiveness in our own expressions concerning the highest themes and the noblest duties. If by our daily speech we seem to express the conclusion that religion is a trivial and unimportant matter, that its creeds are outworn, its ministry an excrescence of bygone superstition, and its membership hypocritical and hollow-hearted, how is anybody to know that in our heart of hearts we hold any higher view? If the world finds us willing to accept its standards and its utterances when we are on the streets, what right have we to ask that it give us credit for any further faith or any devouter spiritual frame in our closets? We are measured, and we ought to be measured, by what we say, and by the manner in which our words are spoken. If our language in weaker hours, when consorting with the worldly-minded and unspiritual, betrays our higher purposes and our more trustful faith, we have no right to complain if we are ranked with unbelievers and with enemies of the cause which we pretend to follow. "He who is not with Me is against Me; and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad." There is altogether too much scattering abroad by means of the worldly words which we seek to embody in Christian speech.

In order to refuse thus to adopt a lower scales of speech and action than that which we are bounden to hold, it is by no means necessary to adopt a "strait-laced" mode of conduct, or to fall into Pharisaic or monastic habits of seclusion, or to become morbidly sensitive concerning the relations between "the church and the world." Not by such means shall we rise toward the ideal Christian life, but by testing our thoughts, words, and deeds by the simple question whether their true source is a constant desire to think, speak, and act as in Christ's name, or whether they spring from no nobler purpose than a shifting desire to get along as easily as may be, by following the general current.—*S. Wherever there is a soul on earth led by the Spirit of God, and filled by the Spirit of God with good and beautiful and true graces and inspirations, there is a soul which, as St. Paul says, is sitting in heavenly places with Christ Jesus—a soul which is already in heaven, though still on earth.—Charles Kingsley.

Thoughts, to flow easily, must overflow from a full mind. Alonzo Cano, the Spanish sculptor, completed a beautiful statue in twenty-five days. Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The last religious census in France shows that there are 35,387,703 Roman Catholics, 467,531 Calvinists, 80,117 Lutherans and 33,117 of other Protestant denominations. The Jews number about 50,000, and 90,000 are attached to no Church.

Dr. Jessup writes home that the church of Beirut, Syria, has consented to call a pastor of its own country and to provide for his support.

Last year 3,200 new members were added to the Baptist churches in Sweden. Baptist preachers are not yet permitted to solemnize marriages in that country.

The Sultan of Zanzibar has sent an order to the Mission Press at Beirut, Syria, for a complete font of Arabic type, and for a native compositor to manage his Imperial Press. Beirut is becoming the (Arabic) eye of the world.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

From time to time the work of Mr. Moody in St. Louis has been the theme of comment in our exchanges, and statements have been made as to its success or failure, and these corrected by counter statements, pro or con, as the case may be.

We do not propose to discuss Mr. Moody's work, methods, success or failure; but a recent paragraph on the subject suggests a theme of far more general importance than the topic with which it was concerned. The paragraph was vindicating the success of the work against insinuation of failure, and stated that any impression of this sort was owing to the fact that the estimate of the revival was based upon the increase of church membership in the city, whereas the greater part of those converted had not united with any church whatever, therefore any report of results based thus, left the major part of the fruits of the revival unestimated. The paragraph then gave the actual figures, according to which one only out of every five converts had connected himself with any church of the various denominations in the city. If this is true, then we say most emphatically that the success or failure of the movement must be based upon the one-fifth not the four-fifths. Any idea that membership in the visible church is a secondary, unimportant matter, is an exceedingly grave and serious error. To say that union with the visible Church is by no means an assurance of salvation is a very different thing from saying that it is of no special importance; the changes are so often rung upon this truth as a warning to the careless inconsistent member of the Church that those who are out of the pale of the Church sometimes unconsciously imbibe the idea that so far as salvation is concerned, church membership is a matter of very small moment indeed. On the contrary, however, its importance can scarcely be exaggerated. To regard the Church as a voluntary association, union with which is entirely optional, is a very serious error, and possibly a fatal one.

If the Church is a divine institution, then the duty of joining it is of divine obligation; to confess Christ before men is scarcely less important than to believe on Him. It is an unqualified demand upon every follower made by Christ Himself, and from the terms of the command, and the penalty of disobedience announced at the same time, we are led to infer, not obscurely, that wilful rejection of the command, in that it implies unregenerateness of heart, is a bar to salvation.

But while some will hesitate to admit this statement, none will deny that church-membership is essential to Christian activity and the greatest usefulness in the Redeemer's kingdom upon the earth. The Church is an organization for the growth of grace in individuals and the development and spread of Christianity in the world, and it is the only society constituted for this purpose. It offers therefore all the advantages of organized effort; in this it is alone. Moreover its aims are avowed and are universally recognized. To assume, therefore, a position of antagonism, or what is little better, of indifferentism to the Church, is practically to assume this position towards the aims and ends of the Church. Confessing Christ before men is in ordinary language considered synonomous with connecting one's self with some branch of the visible Church; it is the taking of covenant obligations; it is the entering into the sympathy of those who are thus recognized as Christ's avowed professed followers; it is to have the advantages of communion with such, their prayers and their counsel; it is to have the benefit of the restraints and safe-guards which are thus thrown around one, and the encouragements to duty and perseverance thus furnished. To waive all such advantages, aside from the intrinsic obligation above mentioned is, to say the least, very hazardous indeed. The observation of all pastors will testify to the sad fact that those who in time of religious interest make profession of conversion and fail to unite with the Church invariably prove unstable souls, and in a little while give lamentable evidence of the fact. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

WHAT GOOD?

At the time we write one Dr. Tanner is endeavoring to illustrate how long a man can live without food. He has upon him the eyes of thousands, aye hundreds of thousands, and of these, those of a philosophic turn are asking—"What good?" We classify at this time among the philosophers, and finding no satisfactory answer to the inquiry, or no effort on the part of our contemporaries to make the absurdity of the enthusiast answer any good purpose, we shall try our hand. We may be permitted to say that while we write Dr. Tanner is still alive, though one cannot help recalling from the studies of early days, experience of the Greek fool, who taught his horse to live without eating. Just then he died: that is, the horse died—not the fool. The fool, it seems, was wise enough to try the experiment on his horse, not on himself, and in this regard the Greek fool has the advantage of Dr. Tanner.

But it seems to us, and we wish now to drop unseemly levity, that Dr. Tanner and his conduct in many respects resemble Christians and their practice. The Doctor might almost seem to have taken his cue from such. Christianity is the life of the soul. Growth, progress, development, is the law of its being. Such growth, such development, requires spiritual food, constantly, regularly—not yearly, nor monthly, but daily. The food is at hand; from the bounteous hand of God it lies around on every side, is offered to us, is even pressed upon us. How astonishing that we should reject it, to illustrate upon how little we can live. Are any of us doing this? Then we may ask ourselves: What good? Dr. Tanner, we note, is living, at best, at a dying rate. He is, not unlike the starveling christian, surprising every one that he lives at all, but is he doing any good to his fellowmen or to himself? Would a community of persons living in Dr. Tanner's style, be worth for any sensible, practical purpose a single hearty, healthy, well-fed man? and isn't it worth while for some individuals and some churches to utilize this thought?

Having come to the churches, which are Christians in communities, we would like to state as a proposition that what we call coldness, deadness, or the like, is simply the effect of aggregate individual effort to live without food. The starvation process we do really try very thoroughly and very often. We know the results in every case, and our attention might well be diverted and held for awhile to the inquiry, What good? Our protracted meetings, and weeks of prayer, and days of prayer, indicate that we have starved about as long as we can stand, and that we must break up the fast. We ought to be, and we might be, individuals and churches, illustrating robust health, but we illustrate instead a state intermitting between health and disease.

What then! Are we opposed to revivals? Not at all! We recognize that there are states or stages of indifference in congregations which must be broken up. The regular administration of the ordinances cannot as a means (always as a means) effect this. The very novelty of a new preacher will serve to arouse and direct attention, and repeated, continued services will hold it, mayhap, till the all-important question is solved, and blessed results flow in upon the church. But it is true, nevertheless, that the accessories of revivals are remedies—they are the cure for an unhealthful state, not the sustaining means of healthful, vigorous life. In sickness let us spare no means which promise restoration to health; in health let us avoid everything which would produce disease.

We leave the question upon the minds and consciences of our readers. It is indeed of no value except as leading to the irresistible conclusion that life of any kind can only be sustained by food—that healthy, serviceable life can only be produced and promoted by proper food, duly taken and assimilated into the system.

DUTY IN POLITICS.

We do not propose to discuss politics. We do not propose to enter upon any discussion as to how far religious journals may discuss them. We do propose to discuss moral or religious questions as they arise, and when political views or political action lies directly athwart them, without partizanship we shall have an opinion to express. There seems no occasion to say more at this point.

A friend in the West writes to us:

"In reading your able editorial, headed "Our Dissent." The following query is suggested.

If all the candidates for a certain office are incompetent in our opinion, should we abstain from voting altogether, or choose the least objectionable?"

We are neither judge nor ruler, but express our opinion. If all candidates for an office are in our view incompetent we would vote for none; for while this would directly be the same as voting for each, the ultimate effect, if acted upon generally, would be to secure the nomination of competent persons. Few cases will arise, however, in which there is not a chance and an occasion for intelligent choice.

Having said this, which is from a general standpoint, we desire to say that generally there is vastly more than a mere choice between men, or a consideration of their special competence, involved in politics. This of course our very intelligent correspondent has not overlooked. Every candidate is as regards his public reputation and course of conduct directly a representative of his party. Even in his private character he must and does to some extent represent it. The tendency of his public conduct will certainly be in accord with his private character and private views. The people of Illinois would seem to understand this. The ability of R. J. Ingersoll the notorious infidel, seems to be unquestioned and as a partizan he would probably be entirely acceptable. He is said to have stated and doubtless with truth, that he could be Governor of Illinois, but for his atheistic sentiments.

Again, avowed principles, or past conduct, that is the history of parties, must be taken into account. From individuals or parties, in politics or otherwise, we look to past character as we know it—that is to reputation—as a guide for the future; and, bearing in mind that no party is better than its principles, it is clearly a duty to take them into account. As an extreme illustration—may it ever be extreme—if any party should urge the secularization of the Sabbath, no Christian would be at a loss as to the path of duty.

The elevated standpoint from which the Christian is to look down upon such questions, as upon all questions, is duty to God. He can never fail in his duty to man when he is serving the Lord.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We must beg all parties who desire that obituary notices shall be published in the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN to remember our terms, and further to send the notices to us direct. We do not look into the obituary columns of exchanges to find such items; consequently a request to copy is seldom seen.

We regret to see that the Interior admitted into its columns, some expressions and charges from a correspondent, that were grossly offensive to the St. Louis Presbyterian and that were characterized by the latter paper as inexcusably and wickedly false. The correspondent makes a poor showing. The Interior we must believe would have scratched the communication if its vision had not slipped.

The announcement that the amount necessary to build a mission chapel at Soochow has been appropriated will be good news to Rev. John W. Davis and those friends in North Carolina and elsewhere who worked so nobly to this end. See the Monthly Review of Missions in another column.

[This note was put in type before the receipt of Rev. J. W. Davis' letter, which will be found elsewhere in this issue.]

It has been seriously proposed by a Congregational clergyman that the Congregationalists abandon infant baptism and adopt the dedication of infants without the sprinkling. The object avowedly is to form a union with Baptists, who it is supposed will consent to sprinkling when applied to believers only. We cannot answer for Northern Baptists, but nothing but the go-under world answer the demand down this way.

The United Presbyterian hasn't the highest opinion of Pere Hyacinthe:

Father Hyacinthe still comes to the surface now and then—the last time in an explanation of his motives and intentions as to what he is doing in France. His present aim is to revive the Gallican Church so as to have the Catholic forms associated with evangelical religion, because, as he says, "Protestantism is unsuited to the genius of the French people." It is but one of the vagaries of which he has had so many, and its hope of success is only equal to its crudity since the financial situation of his enterprise is deplorable. Meantime Protestantism is proving itself well adapted to the "genius of the French people," and is making such progress as was never seen before, and such as is beyond all that could have been hoped for half a score of years ago.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Some very interesting news from Haywood county will be found in the letter of Rev. W. E. McIlwain in another column.

We learn from the Raleigh Observer that Rev. J. S. Watkins, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of that city, goes to the mountains of Virginia for a short vacation.

Rev. Dr. Nall, who has been at Versailles, Ky., suffering for some weeks from prostration caused by overwork, we are glad to be informed, is improving, though slowly.

Mr. J. N. H. Summerell, for the two month ensuing, will supply the pulpit at Paris, Ky., made vacant by Rev. L. H. Blanton's acceptance of the Chancellorship of Central University. Cannot the brother be recalled to North Carolina? Why should we let our young men of talent and piety leave us for other fields?

COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

After a long period of affliction, the smile of the Lord seems to be resting upon this Institution. Lately there has been manifest improvement in its finances. The floating debt, which last fall was $6,500, has been reduced to about $2,700: Within a few months, an investment of $10,000, which has not been yielding any income for several years, has become interest-bearing. Since the Assembly met, over $2,000 have been received from a debt, that has long been considered worthless. The prospect for raising the "Howe Memorial Fund" is good, and daily brightening.

God grant that ere long its doors may be re-opened! K.

HAYWOOD.

WAYNESVILLE, N. C., July 28.

Mr. Editor: Having been in the county of Haywood a few weeks I have thought proper to forward you the following news items:

The first I will notice is the MOUND BUILDERS.

Just now it is asked with a new emphasis Who were the mound builders? Throughout this county these mounds are found, and of late a number of them have been opened in search of relics which are exciting no small degree of interest among the mountaineers, among whom they have so long lain buried; and the citizens are induced to make diligent search for these relics, from the fact that they have now become articles of merchandise. A wealthy gentleman of Richmond, Va., has an agent employed in this vicinity collecting relics for his private museum. This agent has already bought and shipped more than $500 worth. These relics are of soapstone, delicately carved into the form of different animals, such as the bear, deer and squirrel, also into the form of different ages and sex of the human family. Some of these latter look very much like the small idols of India or China. After examining a number of them I became convinced that they were not cut out by the American Indians, and for the following reasons: their descendants, a number of whom are now living in the adjoining county of Jackson, seem to be perfectly ignorant as to how these were made or for what purpose. Again, in some of these relics there is an exhibition of such superior design and skillful execution as at no time characterized that race; and a third evidence is that habits of dress are represented of which the Indian race seemed to be entirely ignorant: for example, the representation of a woman clothed in European dress is seen carved upon a small slab of soapstone. But, having settled this question, the original question reverts upon us, Who were the mound builders?

LANDS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

Previous to visiting this county I had heard Rev. Dr. Miller speak of the excellent lands of Haywood, but now I have seen for myself and can fully indorse his statements. For a mountainous country the valleys are unusually broad and fertile, producing corn, wheat, oats, clover and grass in great abundance. And I have been agreeably surprised to find so many excellent dwellings. At one point in the Pigeon valley, near the ford of the Pigeon river, on the turnpike road, there were not less than ten good dwellings in sight and four of these were of brick, constructed upon the most improved plans; and buildings equally substantial and homes equally inviting I have found in other parts of this valley and along the banks of Jonathan's creek.

CLIMATE.

To a Mecklenburger this climate is truly delightful at this season. It is seldom so cool as to render fire necessary, and I have not heard any one complaining of heat. Instead of sweltering through long sultry nights and rising in the mornings still weary and worn, it is invariably so cool that a little protection from the breeze is always pleasant, and the night's rest never fails to prove refreshing. The question here is never how to sleep but how to keep from sleeping.

CHURCHES.

The Methodist and Baptist largely predominate in this county. Presbyterians, as to number, are indeed a feeble flock. We have only two organizations, the combined membership of which does not exceed fifty. We have not a single church building, the church at Bethel owning only a third interest in that building. But a better day is evidently dawning for our cause in this region. Unreasonable prejudices are steadily giving way to respect and confidence, as the people become acquainted with our doctrines and usages, and the better class of our ministry. The visit of brother Evans last summer is gratefully remembered, and the occasional labors of Bros. Davis, Martin and Dr. Miller are very highly appreciated.

Again, the Presbyterians of the county have been greatly strengthened by the accession of several valuable families and individuals from Buncombe, Alamance, Bladen and other counties. New life has been infused, and it is showing itself in a determination to work. The Presbyterians throughout the county are liberally aiding our brethren in Waynesville to build a church. A very suitable lot, mainly through the efforts of Mrs. Dr. Love, has been secured. More than $1,000 has been contributed; part of the lumber is on the ground, and the sound of the hammer and saw of Capt. Clayton, the architect and builder, is heard this morning from my window. The church of Waynesville was organized by our lamented brother, Rev. Alfred J. Morrison, assisted by Rev. D. T. Towles, on the 27th of Nov., 1875, with only eight members. This light hand has steadily increased until it now numbers twenty-three, and has two valuable ruling elders in the persons of Mr. J. Radcliff, the clerk of the court, and Mr. Jas. Parks, formerly of Mecklenburg. It is still the day of small things with them, and any contribution forwarded to either of the above named will be gladly received and wisely appropriated. These brethren deserve help, for they are making sacrifices for Christ. Think of men having nothing to rely on but their labor giving $100, $150, $200 and even $300 to build a house of worship. When we remember how scarce money is in all this region, how hard it is to make a dollar, let rich Presbyterians all over our State, who have their thousands in bank stock and at interest, look at this expression of love for Christ and the Church of their fathers, and hasten to the help of our Waynesville brethren.

In closing let me say that I have been well received by other denominations, especially by our Methodist brethren. On the third Saturday of July I preached for them in the country, and on last Sabbath night, at the close of their district conference, I had the pleasure of preaching to a crowded house of all denominations. Respectfully yours,

WM. E. McILWAIN.

LETTER FROM REV. JOHN W. DAVIS, SOOCHOW, CHINA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Allow me through you to express my warmest thanks to the friends of missions in North Carolina for the way in which they met the late appeal from Soochow. Dr. J. Leighton Wilson has written to me that the Committee of Foreign Missions has granted an appropriation of one thousand dollars to be spent in buying a place in Soochow for mission use. This appropriation was promptly granted by the Committee when they saw the way in which the money intended for the Soochow mission was coming in from North Carolina. With the kindness that they have always shown they did not wait till the exact amount was contributed, but sent at once permission for me to use a thousand dollars, as soon as they saw the prospect of receiving the money. I would like to call particular attention to this kind and prompt action on their part: "bis dat qui cito dat."

Let us give the Committee our steady support. We have a fine organization. Those who have control of the foreign missionary work of our Church deserve the sympathies and hearty co-operation of the whole body. If I were to stand up before the churches in our land to speak on the subject of foreign missions and were allowed to utter only two sentences, the first should be, give as an act of loving worship to Christ; the other, give the Committee of Foreign Missions your steady, liberal, prayerful support.

Up to date I have learned but few of the names of those who have responded to the Soochow appeal. I know that there has been prompt action on the part of the Presbyteries, and that some very liberal contributions have been made by individuals. One lady gave ($100) a hundred dollars, "A friend" sent ($20) twenty dollars, and "John" sent ($1) a dollar. As soon as I learn the names of those who have made contributions I shall write to them privately.

In the Soochow appeal the question was put to the Christian men and women in North Carolina, "What manner of hearts have ye?" As soon as I saw that this question was to have a fitting answer—that the reply, coming in the shape of prompt assistance, was this—"hearts that love Christ and desire His glory," I began to move in the matter of obtaining a place in this hoary city that might be consecrated to Christ's service. I went to work precisely as I should have done had there been a thousand dollars in my hands. When Mr. Sam. Watkins moved that the Presbytery take steps to raise a part of the needed funds, and supported his argument by a contribution then and there; when an unknown lady gave a hundred dollars, and "John" gave his dollar; when a letter came from Salisbury with five dollars in it from my old Sunday school teacher, Mrs. J. J. Summerell, and another from Oxford telling me of five dollars for the cause given by Miss Mary A. Anderson, and of five dollars more given by another lady: when I saw all this I knew what to expect, and went to work to try to buy a mission lot. I hope that before many more numbers of this paper appear I shall have the pleasure of sending you some good news from Soochow.

Yours very truly,

JOHN W. DAVIS.

A NORTH CAROLINA EDEN.

ASHEVILLE, July, 1880.

Asheville lies upon the mountains—so says one's idle fancy—like a child upon the bosom of its mother; borne up and away from the care and busy life of the lower world, yet guarded by the green summits that look down upon it from above.

* * * * * * * * *

If one may judge by the number of churches, and the Summer congregations, Asheville "remembers the Sabbath." Three of the Protestant churches front the same street, have services about the same hour, and are so near each other that ere the chant of the Episcopal choir is ended, one hears its burden taken up by the Presbyterian congregation, and while this solemn praise is still sounding on the air, joyful voices break forth from the Methodist sanctuary over the way; yet these varied melodies come back from the echoing hills as one harmony. Suggestive, is it not?

The Presbyterian pastor, Rev. Mr. Gammon, is universally respected and loved for his excellent qualities of head and heart.

The Catholic church occupies a beautiful site on a hill, in the rear of the town, and its attempt at Gothic effect, makes a pretty feature in the landscape. But O, the desolateness which greets the eye from the open door! Dust covers the floor, the rude seats—which are but boards laid across supports—lies thick upon the high box-like altar and bare walls, and is in each county fold of the faded brown cambric that curtains the confessional. But without the church we found Catholic Hill "a thing of beauty." The long shafts of sunset light fell through its leafy trees and across the softly-rounding green-sward, and brightened canvass of two tents pitched on the favored spot by a party from South Carolina. With their own vehicles, servants and domestic comforts, they were "roughing it" in very smooth fashion—journeying through mountain byways—having come from Greenville, via Caesar's head, and staying here for a week, en route for Warm Springs. "The way to live these cool, fair Summer days!" we sighed, but the sigh died at its birth as with upward glance we saw the mountains, glorified now by the golden mists of the dying day. And here is the true, the never-ending charm of this city "in the lofty regions." Other towns may lie upon elevated slopes, whose feet are kissed by waters as fair as the French Broad and the rippling Swannanoa, but few places are so grandly girdled about by "the everlasting" mountains. Near enough to be green, far enough to be blue, range beyond range, and peak above peak, "they lie in holy families," grand in "the warmth and splendor of day," beautiful in the purple glories of evening, and not less fair in the softer, and to most of us rarer tints of the sunrise. It was five by the court-house clock as I stood on the summit of Battery Porter this morning, to catch the glow of the early dawn. Asheville has grown since "The Land of the Sky" was written, and Battery Porter—whose name historicises an event in the late war—is no longer to be dreaded on account of the fences to be climbed and "the terrible dogs to be braved." Patton Avenue, one of the fashionable drives, has been cut through the base of the hill and it had been easy enough for me to let down the bars and gain the path that led from the road to the hill-top. "There went up a mist from the earth and watered the whole face of the ground," might have been written of this modern Eden. From the mountain-tops on the east, to those on the west, rolled the misty sea. Gradually the upper clouds in the west caught the tints of the morning—pale violet and pink—those in the east grew golden at the kingly touch" of the sun; the mist fell away from Pisgah, in the southwest and the less lofty heights near it, and rolled upwards to their basis from the fair green valley beneath; but suddenly dark clouds curtained the sun, the opal hues faded, the mist swept up the mountains and over the valley, and nothing of the earth was visible save the green summit of Battery Porter. Then slowly came another dawn. A wind from the north swept the vapor before it in fantastic shapes, like the train of an Erl-king, and again the far, bold summits, and nearer gentle hills gleamed in the crystal-clear atmosphere. There had been no sound save bird-notes, the tinkle of cow-bells, and the far-off rushing of the Broad. Now the lower world began to awake, there was a clang of "rising bells,"—the first welcome heralds of breakfast—and I came down through the daisies and the dew, to begin with the rest—another day in this "golden land of fair idleness."—Pepys in S. W. Presbyterian.

FAITH AS AN ELEMENT OF PATRIOTISM.

Moritz Busch, in the North American Review, tells the following story to give an insight into the character of Bismarck:

It was September 28th, and we were at dinner. The company had been talking of matters more or less indifferent, when the Chancellor turned the conversation to graver topics and at last began a discourse suggested as to the metaphor with which it began, by a spot of grease on the table cloth, Bismarck said—and I took down his remarks stenographically: "The grease spot (namely, the feeling that it is a nobler thing to die for country and honor, even without recognition,) is sinking deeper into the people, now that it is soaked with blood. The corporal has essentially the same sense of duty as the lieutenant and the colonel—that is to say among us Germans. With us this runs through every stratum of the nation. The French are a mass easily brought under the control of one man, and are then a great force. With us each one has a mind of his own; but where as now Germans in great numbers are of one mind, they can be relied on for mighty enterprises. If they were all of one mind they would be omnipotent. The sense of duty in a man who submits to be shot dead, alone, in the dark, this the French have not. It comes of the residuum of faith in our people—of the fact that I know there is One that sees me, even when the lieutenant does not."

"Do you believe, Excellency, that they really reflect on this?" asked Landreth von Furstenstein, one of the guests.

"Reflect? No; it is a feeling, a humor, an instinct—what you please. If they reflect, it is gone; they argue themselves out of it. How, without faith in a revealed religion, in God who wills what is good, in a Supreme Judge and in a life to come, men can live together harmoniously, each doing his duty and letting every one else do his, I do not understand."

Here the Grand Duke of Weimar was announced.

"I believe that he, too, will be revealed," said the Chancellor, laughing, "but let him wait." Then he went on talking for a good quarter of an hour longer, departing now and then from his proper theme, and oftentimes repeating the same idea in different words. "Were I no longer a Christian I would not remain an hour in the King's service. If I did not obey God, if I did not count upon Him, I should certainly pay no homage to earthly masters. I should have to live, of course; I should be in a good enough position and should have no need of them. Why should I fret and toil unceasingly in this world, and expose myself to perplexities and ill usage, if I did not feel that I must do my duty? I have a firm, unshaken faith in a life after death—therefore I am a royalist, otherwise I should be a republican. If I did not believe in a divine order which has destined this German nation for something good and great, I would forthwith go out of the diplomatic business, or I would never have entered it. To what original to ascribe the sense of duty I know not, except to God. Orders and titles have no charm for me. The firm stand that for ten years I have taken against all possible absurdities of the court I owe purely to my decided faith. Take from me this faith and you take from me my country. If I were not a Christian and a firm believer, if I had not the miraculous basis of religion, you would never have had such a chancellor. Give me a successor on this basis and I retire at once. But I am living among heathen. When I say this I do not mean to make proselytes, but needs I must confess this faith."

"But," said Katt, "surely the Greeks and Romans practiced self-denial and devotion—surely they had a love of country and did great things with it, and many people now," he was convinced, "do the same thing from patriotic feeling and the sense of belonging to a great unity."

The Minister replied: "This self-denial and devotion to duty toward the State and the King is with us only a relic of the faith of our fathers and grandfathers in transformed shape—more indistinct and yet active, faith and yet faith no longer. How gladly I should be off!" he continued; "I delight in the woods and in nature. Take away from me my relation to God, and I am the man to pack up to-morrow and be off for Varzin to grow my oats. I have then no King, and why? If it were not God's command why should I submit to these Hohenzollern? They are a Swabian family no better than my own, and I should have no interest in them."

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

Our latest intelligence from Greece is to the 17th June. Dr. Kalopothakes had gone back to Athens, after a sojourn of three weeks at the baths, much relieved from suffering, but not entirely restored. The other members of the mission are reported as being in good health.

From Campinas our latest letters are dated to the 8th of June. Mrs. Lane's health was still feeble, and it was expected that she and her two children would sail for New York the early part of July. Mr. Lane had just returned from Santa Barbara, where he received three persons to the communion of the Church. He mentions that two of the newly organized churches in that region were busily engaged in erecting church edifices, which indicates a great earnestness on their part and permanency of their work. Mr. Boyle's letter is occupied mainly about his colporteur's work, which he regards as promising important results.

The latest from China is from Mr. Davis of May 17th. Speaking of the importance of his having larger accommodations for holding religious meetings, he remarks: "On Sunday, May 16th, I had a communion service at my place. There were several women who, when told that we could not seat them in the house, asked to be permitted to stand in the court and look on during the services. Though it was about to rain, I filled the open court nearly half full of benches and had about as many hearers outside of the room as there were in it. * * * The woman of whom I have already written and her child were baptized, and the teacher in Mr. DuBose's boarding-school restored to church fellowship." Mr. Davis, as well as his many friends, will be gratified to know that the committee have appropriated the money necessary to purchase the new place, and that four-fifths, or thereabouts, of the fund has been contributed by the churches in North Carolina, his native State.

FINANCE.

The receipts for June amount to $7,720 87. Of this $6,370 16 are from churches and individuals, $539 81 from Sabbath schools, and $810 90 from ladies' missionary associations. There is a gain, as compared with the same month of last year, of $1,194 46. This improvement in receipts, if it continues throughout the remainder of the year, as it is earnestly hoped it will, cannot fail to be a source of comfort to all who love the great cause of Missions.—Missionary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

We learn from the South-Western Presbyterian that the authorities of the South-Western Presbyterian University at Clarkesville, Tenn., have chosen Prof. E. B. Massie of Charlottesville, Va., to the vacant chair of Mathematics in that institution. The Presbyterian says that the friends and patrons of the University are to be congratulated on their good fortune in having secured such an acquisition to the faculty.

The Staunton (Va.) Vindicator says that Rev. E. C. Gordon, formerly of Virginia, but now of Savannah, Ga., has received a call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian church at Salem, Roanoke county.

Rev. R. S. Burwell writes to the Texas Presbyterian, July 20th: "You will be glad to hear of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the camp-meeting being held here. Services began last Thursday night. The opening sermon was preached by Dr. Moore. Interest continues to increase. Six additions to the church on profession. Brother Chaney preaches in the morning, and Bro. Moore at night. God's people are revived, and a great many unconverted are deeply concerned about their souls' salvation."

Rev. J. C. Carson, evangelist of Abingdon Presbytery, who has been suffering from a dangerous attack of inflammation of the brain, has entirely recovered and resumed his labors.

Licentiate Wm. W. Ruff, of Montgomery Presbytery, who had been invited to supply the Presbyterian church in Covington, Va., until the meeting of the Presbytery, is laid aside from his work for the present by cerebral disorder of a very serious nature, the consequence of over study. His friends hope for entire restoration under proper medical treatment. We glean the facts from report of the Covington Tribune.

The Rev. E. Brantly, pastor of Zion church and stated supply of Olivet church in Bethel Presbytery, has offered his resignation, in order that he may accept a call from the church at McMinnville, Tenn. It is thought that he will be succeeded in Zion church by the Rev. W. G. White, of Kentucky.—Southern Presbyterian.

Items from the Christian Observer:

At a congregational meeting held on Sunday, June 20th, the Presbyterian church of Columbus, Ky., called Rev. J. B. Creighton, of Columbia, Tenn., to take charge of the church. He has accepted the call, and will enter upon his duties as pastor some time in September.

In a recent meeting of two weeks continuance held in Versailles, Ky., in which the pastor, Rev. G. H. Rout, was assisted by Rev. J. M. Evans, of Augusta, Ky., there were thirteen additions to the church on confession of faith and three by letter.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

Buffalo Presbytery has cited Rev. E. T. Adams, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Dunkirk, to appear and answer a charge of heresy.

The Presbyterian church at Providence, N. J., is over one hundred and fifty years old. The deed dates from George III. A debt has recently been paid, and Rev. Dr. D. M. Seward installed as pastor.

A wealthy manufatrer, Mr. Riddle, gave the ground and built a church costing $1,600 for the Presbyterians of Glen Riddle, Pa. The church was dedicated on July 4th.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist Home Mission Society received $213,821 and expended $182,988 during its last fiscal year. Its present indebtedness is $18,373 or $12,236 less than last year. There was decrease in legacies of $9,886, but an increase in general contributions of $15,323. The Society has 836 preaching stations and 461 Sunday schools under the care of its missionaries. Sixty-seven churches were organized during the year, and thirty-nine more missionaries were sustained than in the previous year.

INDEPENDENT CATHOLIC.

Since Bishop McNamara and his Independent Catholic church moved into the churchly building vacated by the extinct Episcopal church of the Atonement, on Madison Avenue, New York city, they have met with increasing success. Indeed, so great has been their success, that in a circular just issued by them they say that if encouraged by the sympathy and practical aid of the Christian public they will purchase the building for the purpose of preaching evangelical religion to the Irish and Roman Catholic people.—Presbyterian.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

The Cathedral in New York, (Cardinal McCloskey's), is under a mortgage of $400,000.

DEATH OF DR. MCLAURIN.—Dr. Hugh C. McLaurin of Brandon, Miss., was born, we think, in South Carolina, but has, from earliest infancy, called Mississippi his home. About forty years ago Dr. McLaurin studied medicine with Dr. Benjamin Robinson in Fayetteville. He was well known in North Carolina. A correspondent of the Newton (Miss.) Report writes thus:

"We were inexpressibly shocked by the sad news of Dr. H. C. McLaurin's death. He was at church on Sabbath, was taken sick that night, and died the next evening. The loss to his family is irreparable. And he was such a tender, loving father. The community has lost one of its firmest and most influential members, the medical fraternity one of its brightest stars, the church one of its purest members. He was a conscientious physician. He had been an acceptable elder in the Presbyterian church for fifteen years—ever since he came to Brandon in 1865."

The Christian at Work says: The Russian press continues to welcome Barker, the Philadelphian, who is in that country for the purpose of perfecting American contracts for the building of clipper ships, and erecting machinery for working the coal and iron mines of Southern Russia, and for the construction of grain elevators at Odessa.

Mr. Gladstone is quite sick though not considered dangerously so. The press telegrams of August 1st say: "Mr. Gladstone caught a chill after leaving the House of Commons on Friday, and is now suffering from congestion of the left lung. The latest bulletin issued on Sunday evening says his condition is less favorable, owing to a slight fever, but that he is in no immediate danger. The Queen telegraphed to ascertain his condition.

Colorado spiders are not to be laughed at. In a cave near Buena Vista they are the size of small birds, and they make a strange sound while weaving their web. While looking at the cave a miner examined the webs. Their strands were about the size of a No. 12 thread, and he thought that they could be used for thread. Having a needle, he broke off one of the strands and found that it would just fit. Sewing on a loose button he found it as strong as silk. So said.

Mr. H. M. Caldwell, a well known fruit fancier, living in Sharon township, brought to the Observer office yesterday something new in the way of fruit, which he has misnamed the "Chickasaw plum." It is a seedless peach. Mr. Caldwell favored us with its pedigree, to wit: An ordinary soft peach grafted on a plum and a year intervening regrafted. The product from the first graft was a peach with a small kernel. The second grafting produced the fruit on our table.—Charlotte Observer.

SYMPTOMS.—Slight pain in the side, the skin and eyes assume a thick yellow coat, digestion is impaired, an unpleasant sinking sensation at the pit of his stomach is experienced, the bowels are irregular, the mind fretful, the memory weakened, sometimes a slight cough, coldness of the hands and feet, sometimes loss of appetite and at others unnatural craving for food, dizziness of the head, blurring before the eyes, depressed spirits, feeling of uncertainty of having left something undone but can't tell what it is. Take Simmons Liver Regulator, it will remove all these feelings and make you well.

SAVED FROM THE GRAVE.—"You will please let it be known to the world that your Regulator has saved me from the grave. I have suffered for many years with Indigestion and Liver Complaint, and took everything that was recommended to me without any relief, until I tried Simmons Liver Regulator; it has cured me entirely. Recommend it to the human race.

CUT THIS OUT AND SAVE IT.

If those persons laboring under disease proceeding from vitiated humors in the blood; causing Ulcers, White Swellings, Coxalgia or Hip Joint Disease, and the class of diseases termed Scrofulous, proceeding from hereditary taints, where the bones are destroyed, defying the usual treatment of physicians, will procure Swaim's Panacea, they will find a remedy which has saved thousands of lives; and thoroughly tested by the late Professors Chapman, Dewees and Gibson of the old University of Pennsylvania; besides hundreds of medical men eminent in their profession, continues to be a "forlorn hope" to sufferers worthy of its fifty years' reputation.

Swaim's Panacea is imitated and a preparation sold for it by druggists with a name somewhat similar. Purchasers therefore must be careful and see they get that containing the recommendations of the distinguished professors alluded to. It is seldom advertised in our public papers.

Swaim's Panacea is prepared only at Swaim's Laboratory, 113 South Seventh Street, below Chestnut, Philadelphia.

At Summerville, Harnett county, N. C., on the 24th of July, at 4:30 a. m., NEILL McKAY, JR.

Reverence for religion and a high regard for the good was a marked characteristic of his life. He had no sympathy with skepticism in any of its phases. The divinity, authenticity and inspiration of the Bible he could not hear questioned without manifest disapprobation, hence his physical and moral courage, for which he was so much respected and admired. His name was the synonym of honor, justice, fair-dealing and good faith. One of our judges said of him, to the writer, "I have been long and intimately acquainted with him. I never knew him to take an undue advantage of an opponent; he would not, as we say, 'take a nigh cut.' He had an invincible opposition to making an affidavit. Assure him of sincere sympathy in his affliction and of my gratification at the tidings of the great change that has come over him."

As counselor and advocate, as solicitor for his county and district, as legislator and as a member of the State Convention he always acquitted himself to the satisfaction of his friends. Entering public life at his majority, remaining in public life, and before the public almost ever after, it is remarkable, and is now so spoken of by the best and foremost men of the State, that none of his competitors for honors, none of his opponents for office, could ever bring a charge against him based on the want of ability, fidelity or integrity in any of the various positions of honor and trust that he filled or sought to fill. To this unsullied character and reputation for ability and integrity, there was added at last, the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." God has graciously ordained that the angel of mercy and the angel of death sometimes go hand in hand. He said to the writer, "I wish a long interview; take time, it is important business. I am about closing as I should have commenced life. I know I am a changed man. I think I am a Christian. Some of the evidences of a change of heart are before my mind; but get the Bible, to the law and the testimony." After collecting many passages and referring to various tests of Christian character, he inquired, "what about the test of Zaccheus' religion? I am sure I can adopt it. I have always desired to be honest; if I have ought that is not lawfully mine, I am willing to make restitution with interest. I would come short of my rights two dollars rather than have one more than is my due. Under this principle, my heavenly Father sparing my life a few days, I will close my worldly business." This done he passed the few remaining days in cheerful Christian intercourse with his family and friends. When he noticed our grateful surprise at his assumed hope and confidence, he said, "I am no child; I am not a scared man; convene the session, ask them all to come and bring the church book; I wish to write my own name and put a seal to it."

It was intimated to him that his assumed hope and trust in the Saviour was the greatest possible comfort to his sorrowing friends, and the richest legacy he could leave to his family. With emotion, he said, "I leave to my family and friends another legacy, that grieves me more than all things else: The example of an irreligious life, the neglect of my church and family religion. Think of the long and dreary journies over the sand hills on Sabbath. With my present principles and feelings, if I had life to live over, I would live in obscurity, on bread and water, rather than desecrate God's holy day." His last utterances were expressions of surprise at the grief of those around him, when, as he assured us, he was free from pain, comfortable and happy. At no time exhibiting the slightest mental aberation and conscious to the last, he passed away so gently that his physician could not mark the exact moment when his spirit returned to God.

The Lord vouchsafe to his bereaved widow and ten surviving children the promises extended to all such, and "give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." * * *

At Lemon's Mineral Springs, Moore county, N. C., REID CLIFTON, son of J. W. and K. L. Scott, aged 10 months and 7 days.

"Of such is the kingdom of God." P.

In Rockingham county, N. C., July 13, 1880, Mrs. ALICE J. PURCELL, in the 36th year of her life.

She suffered greatly for eight weeks. During the first weeks of her illness she felt a strong desire to recover and be spared to her family. But as her sickness extended, her faith increased and strengthened, and for several weeks she would express herself thus: "I would not turn my hand over to decide the result. The will of God be done." Her frame of mind continued peaceful and comfortable, often exclaiming "though He slay me yet will I trust Him."

The morning she died, after exhorting all around her, and delivering her dying wishes, she sank into a peaceful sleep of about an hour. On awaking she said "He giveth His beloved sleep." A strange and beautiful brightness broke over her face, and her mother said "Darling, what is it?" She said "I am so happy! I am just as happy as I can be. Sweet Jesus! Precious Jesus! If I had strength I would shout 'Glory to God in the highest.' Death has no sting—the grave no victory. Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory. Mother, I love you. Oh! none but God knows how I love you; I love my dear husband, I love my precious children, but I love my Saviour more, and I want to go to Him." Many other triumphant and pious expressions broke from her lips. It was a "privileged chamber, and seemed quite on the verge of heaven." She was a good, obedient child, a most affectionate and considerate daughter, a devoted and efficient wife, a loving, faithful mother, a precious sister and a Christian neighbor and benefactress to the poor and sick around her.

She has left a husband who was peculiarly dependent on her for happiness, a smitten flock of six motherless ones, the youngest just two months old, two bereaved sisters, and a mother who feels such a yearning for her congenial and sympathizing love and intercourse that to her the loss is irreparable. Yet they say, though with breaking hearts, "Thy will be done," and they would thank the Lord for lending her to them so long. "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away blessed be the name of the Lord." M. E. M.

The writer requests the Central Presbyterian and the Richmond Christian Advocate to copy.

At the residence of her son, C. C. Krider, June 18th, Mrs. SARAH KRIDER, relict of Jacob Krider, in the 89th year of her age.

Mrs. Krider had been a professor of religion, a consistent and exemplary member of Third Creek Church for more than 60 years. She was indeed a mother in Israel. Faithful in the training of her children, in the discharge of all her duties, she possessed withal "the ornament of a meek, quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price." Her faith in Christ was unwavering, and she lived as seeing Him who is invisible. For months previous to her departure she was a great sufferer. But she bore her sufferings without murmuring, and with singular patience under the circumstances. And accordingly she was sustained to the last by a hope of which she was not ashamed, and which was an anchor to her soul "both sure and steadfast." Her end was peace, and we trust she has gone to enjoy the rest promised to all the finally faithful. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." A. L. C.

At Ayrmount, the family homestead near Hillsboro, N. C., on the 27th of July, 1880, Miss MARY KIRKLAND.

The sufferings of a lingering illness were in mercy spared to this beloved lady. In a brief interval of time she passed from earth, we may not doubt, to heaven. She was the last surviving child of William Kirkland deceased, whose family was one of prominent social position in the State. The reality of her faith in Christ was attested by a life of eminent usefulness in His service. The ministrations of her kindly affections to those who needed them, were limited only by the measure of her ability. In a wide circle of relatives and friends her name will long be fragrant. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints." F.

In Bethany congregation, Iredell county, July 28, Miss GERTRUDE SMITH, aged 19 years; daughter of Mr. C. W. and Mrs. Laura (Hall) Smith.

She had been confined to her bed for ten months with a painful disease, but was patient in her sufferings. She had been for several years a member of Bethany church, and when the Saviour makes up His jewels, she will be found among them. A large circle of friends mourn for her. PASTOR.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Two Glasses.

There sat two glasses filled to the brim,
On a rich man's table, rim to rim.
One was ruddy and red as blood,
And one as clear as the crystal flood.

Said the glass of wine to the paler brother:
"Let us tell the tales of the past to each other;
I can tell of banquet, and revel, and mirth,
And the proudest and grandest souls on earth
Fell under my touch, as though struck by blight
Where I was king, for I ruled in might.
From the heads of kings I have torn the crown;
From the heights of fame I have hurled men down;
I have blasted many an honest name;
I have taken virtue and given shame;
I have tempted the youth with a sip, a taste,
That has made his future a barren waste.

"For greater than any king am I,
Or than any army beneath the sky.
I have made the arm of the driver fail,
And sent the train from the iron rail;
I have made good ships go down at sea,
And the shrieks of the lost were sweet to me;
For they said, 'Behold how great you be!
Fame, strength, wealth, genius before you fall,
For your might and power are over all.'
Ho! ho! pale brother," laughed the wine,
"Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?"

Said the water glass: "I cannot boast
Of a king dethroned, or a murdered host;
But I can tell of a heart once sad
By my crystal drops made light and glad,
Of thirst I've quenched, of brows I've laved;
Of hands I've cooled, and lives I have saved;
I have leaped through the valley, dashed down the mountain,
Flowed in the river and played in the fountain;
Slept in the sunshine and dropped from the sky,
And everywhere gladdened the landscape and eye.
I have made the parched meadow grow fertile with grain.
I can tell of the powerful wheel in the mill,
That ground out the flour and turned at my will.
I can tell of manhood, debased by you,
That I have lifted and crowned anew.
I cheer, I help, I strengthen and aid;
I gladden the heart of man and of maid!
I set the chained wine-captive free,
And all are better for knowing me."

These are the tales they told each other—
The glass of wine and his paler brother,
As they sat together, filled to the brim,
On the rich man's table, rim to rim.

A Fable for Boys and Girls.

One bright afternoon in Summer a lot of cattle, horses and a donkey were in a large square field belonging to a farmer called Mr. Jackson. Most of the animals were either asleep, for the afternoon was hot, or were busily eating the soft, sweet grass. Only Beppo, the donkey, would neither eat nor sleep. He was very cross, and was so unkind as to try and disturb all the others as much as he possibly could. If he saw a poor cow trying to eat a good meal off some very nice grass she had just found in a fresh place, he would rush up to her and turn her off it; and so on and on, until really he became quite a nuisance.

And this is what he was saying to himself all the while: "I am not stupid, not I; I am the very best and most useful animal my master has; and, oh! how blind he is to say I give him more trouble and less help than all the rest!"

Just then an old sheep dog came across the grass and stopped opposite Beppo, looking at him very sadly, but without speaking.

"I wish you would not stare so," said the donkey, peevishly. "What do you want?"

But still the dog did not speak, only he stood looking at Beppo, with his large thoughtful-looking eyes, until he began to feel quite uncomfortable.

"I am sure master has no right to call me useless," he said at length, fretfully. "I have been at one thing or another all day."

"What?' Jarry's eyes seemed to ask.

"Well, first thing this morning Master Ned came for me, before breakfast, to carry him a good mile to take poor widow Bennet some milk for her sick child."

"And you went?" asked the dog in a low tone.

"Well, no. You see it was so much cooler and nicer on the grass than it was on the hot, dusty road; so I just galloped up and down here till Master Ned was out of breath, and I should not have been caught yet if he had not got another lad to help him."

"And then you went, I suppose."

"Well, we set off—but he was so very cross I soon saw that it was no use trying to please him, so I just rolled over on the side of the road and hurt my young gentleman rarely, I can tell you."

"Yes, and upset Widow Bennet's milk, and her little boy had such a bad morning for want of it."

"Well, I can't help it now; so it's no use being cross with me, Jerry."

"What did you, then, after you had turned round and run off home?'

"I don't think I did anything particular until those boys, Tom and Jack, both wanted to ride on me at once, but of course I was not going to stand that! so I lay down directly in the middle of the road."

"Yes, and hurt poor little Tom's leg. In fact, Beppo, I don't wonder that our master thinks you do more harm than good. Of what use have you been to-day?"

"Well, perhaps, I have not been much to-day; but in a general way I am sure I work hard."

"Do you?"

"Why of course I do; at least that is to say, I should do if they would only give me more sensible work. I don't see what good comes from those children riding me about."

"I don't always see what good it does for me to run about until I am hot and tired after the sheep; but I do it because it is the work which is given me, and I know it would be wrong not to do it."

"Well, I mean to wait until I have a really sensible piece of work given to me, then I will soon show you every one how well I can do it."

"Take care—take care, Beppo; it is far safer to do the work that is nearest you, however dull and unimportant it may be. For, after all, to do what God Almighty gives us to do, and to please him, is the best any of us can do," said Jerry, wisely.

Then up spoke a little daisy, saying: "I used to think it was very hard that I could not do anything grand and great. I used to fret a great deal about it at one time."

"You!" said the donkey, scornfully. "Well, don't you fret still? For what good such a tiny thing as you can do, I am sure I, for one, cannot imagine."

"Oh, no! I am very happy now," replied the daisy, meekly, "for, one day when I was very sad, the kind wind came and told me how the great God, up above, loved every little flower, how it was He who gave them all their beauty; and each one had only just to love Him for His great goodness, and to show their love by doing exactly what He bid them. And when I said I did not know what I could do, he told me my work was just to do nothing else but stand still all day looking up to heaven. And I was to close up every night and open out every morning, that I might keep just as fresh and pretty as He wished me to be. He said, though it did not seem much yet if I did that well He would be pleased, and that was the chief thing."

"But I don't believe you could do any good that way."

"Oh, yes! for once a girl came along the field crying sadly, but when she saw me, she said, 'Dear little daisy, you are looking up, and so will I—up to God,' and she smiled and looked comforted." The daisy's voice trembled with gladness as she spoke.

"Well, but such a thing would only happen once in a hundred years," said Beppo obstinately.

"Oh, no! Another day, too, I had a very sweet encouragement, for an old gentleman with white hair came along; and he said as he looked at me, 'The flowers always seem to me to say, 'God is Love,' for it seems as if all He made them for was to give us pleasure, as they are of no use but to delight our eyes, and how much He must love us when He makes such beautiful things only to please us!'"

"Now, Beppo," said Jerry, dryly, "what do you say of that?"

"I must say," answered Beppo, "that the daisy has taught me a lesson, for if such a tiny thing can do such great good by just doing well the little bit of work God has given it to do, I ought to be able to do some, and I mean to try."

And Beppo showed he meant what he said. For he became such a good, useful donkey that Farmer Jackson and his children were delighted with him. And it was a good thing for himself, too, for they all took such good care of him, in return for his faithful services, that he lived to a very happy old age.

And if a dog and a donkey and a daisy can do good, noble work, and please the great God, surely little girls and boys can do far more. Only do the little things well, dear children—the little easy things, which lie all about you—and then, perhaps, you can find large things to do; only you must do the little things first.

I know a little girl who used to listen when she was in the Sunday-school to what she was told there; and when evening came, she and her little brothers were put to bed, she used to tell them, over and over, again and again, the stories she had heard out of the Bible, and her poor mother used to stand outside on the stairs listening. And no one but He who knows everything can tell what good that little girl was the means of doing.

So now, children, do not be troublesome, quarrelsome and lazy, like Beppo was at first, but try, as he did afterwards, and as Jerry and the daisy did, to do the work well which is given you.—English Magazine.

Daisy.

We have often wondered why little girls named Margaret are so often called Daisy. The following from the Orphan's Friend suggests to us the reason:

"Daisy, the pretty little flower that grows in our meadows in such abundance, used to be called "day's eye," because it waked so early in the morning, and was always so bright. The French call it Margu-rite, because it was the favorite flower of the Princess Margaret. There are several beautiful varieties of the flower."

The Little Builders.

John Brown and Jemmy Atkins were great friends. At school, at play, everywhere, they were together, and when one learned anything new it was not long before the other knew it also. Now they were watching the masons, who were building a fine store on Main street.

"Did you know that we are builders, John?" said Jemmy, as he watched the men putting brick after brick upon the wall.

"No, we an't; we're only boys," said John.

"But we are; we are building a house which is to last forever and ever," said Jemmy, earnestly.

"Pooh! now you are fooling," said John. "Nothing in the world lasts forever and ever. That old Morgan house is only a hundred years old, and it won't last a hundred more."

"I can't help that," said Jemmy. "Mother told me our souls would live forever, and we were building houses to live in."

"How is that?" said John soberly.

"Well, she said that we build our characters day by day, brick by brick, just as that man is doing. And if we build well, we shall be glad forever and ever, and if we build bad, if we use shaky bricks, or rotten wood, or stubble, we shall be sorry forever and ever."

"That is queer. We ought to be pretty careful, then," said John. "But your mother is such a good woman she knows."

"I think it is jolly nice to be builders, don't you?" said Jemmy.

"Yes, if we build right. But let's see; what kind of bricks had we better use?"

"Always tell the truth; that's a big sill. Be honest; that's another," said Jemmy.

"Good!" cried John. "Mind your mother; there is another."

"Yes, and father, and teachers, too," said Jemmy. "There's a big beam of temperance in my building. Mother says that's a gospel beam and keeps the frame steady."

"Be courteous; there's a brick," said John. "And don't swear; there's another."

"And don't speak against anybody, and don't say any dirty words," interrupted Jemmy, "and we shall go on building as long as we live, mother says; every single day we add something to our house."

The gentleman who owned the new building stood close beside the boys, hidden from sight by a high wall. He listened to their talk intently, and then he stepped around beside them and said, "Pretty good work, my boys; only build on the sure foundation."

The boys looked a little frightened, but he smiled so pleasantly upon them that they felt at ease, and listened while he said:

"Give your young hearts to God, my boys; He is the great Master Builder. He will teach you to build so that He will say, 'Well done.' Seek first the kingdom of God, and all things else shall be added unto you.'" Then he added, "I wish every boy would build as wisely as you plan, dear boys. May God help you to keep them ever!"—Youth's Temperance Banner.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Removal of Diamond Reef, New York Harbor.

After eleven years of persistent work the four acre obstruction to the commerce of our harbor, known as Diamond Reef, has been entirely cleared away, so as give over the whole area a depth of twenty-six feet of water at low tide.

The reef was first attacked over twenty years ago, but no substantial progress was made toward its removal until the invention of General Newton's steam drilling scow, after the improvement of the East River channel was undertaken by the United States Government.

The reef was composed in part of hard rock, but mainly of a compact deposit of glacier clay, sand, and bowlders, firmly cemented together. At first the drilling scow was employed in blasting off the projecting points and edges of the rock, so as to secure a channel of moderate depth over all the reef. Latterly a system of face blasting has been carried out, to insure a complete removal of all the rock down to the required depth, the fragments dislodged being raised by grappling. To remove the bowlder drift a different process was found necessary. Though not so hard as rock the cemented drift was more troublesome, the drill bars glancing on the hard howlders, and the exploding charges of dynamite blowing out without greatly disrupting the body of the reef. To meet these difficulties General Stone devised his system of hydraulic mining under water. By means of powerful streams of water from a force pump, one stream being directed against the face of the reef, the other turned in the opposite direction so as to cause a strong current to carry away through a pipe the earth and stones stirred up by the first stream, it was found comparatively easy to wash away rapidly the lighter materials of the reef and convey them into deep water. The heavier bowlders were at the same time detached from the glacial clay and sand, so as to be readily grappled and removed in the ordinary way.—Scientific American.

Sailors' Want of Romance.

Sailors are undoubtedly the least romantic of God's creatures. The beauty of the coast around which they sail has no charm for them. A gorgeous sunset at sea is simply a signal to light the ship's lamps, a sunrise the signal to extinguish them. If, on a clear bright night, the sailor gazes at the wonder of the firmament, it is only to inform you that he "doesn't like the looks of that 'ere star near the moon; had weather brewing somewhere." This with an air of strained prophetic power. The sight of a strange port sends no thrill into the coasting sailor's frame. It merely causes him to utter "curses not loud, but deep," because the sails have to be furled and the anchor let go. What landsman has travelled around the coast of Devon and Cornwall, and beheld the sun set over the sea, without being filled with the infinite loveliness of the Creator's works? Behold the sailor entering the British Channel from the south! He scans the horizon at sundown. He appears totally wrapt up in his observations. "At last," you cry, "at last here is a germ of romance!" Suddenly a hoarse voice startles you. "Lundy bears nor'-nor'-east, half-east." "O bother!" The curtain goes down on your romantic picture. The sailor has but one idea in connection with the word light, namely: the flame which blazes in the high white tower that marks his way. Tell him of Goethe's last word, and he will reply, "The gentleman was quite right, sir. This 'ere coast isn't as well lighted as it might be." No one can blame the hardy mariner for the intense interest he takes in the beacon that guides him through the dark and perilous seas. His life depends upon it, and none but a sailor can know the infinite relief experienced when, after peering for hours through the darkness, the welcome light gleams upon his anxious eye; and as he shouts to the men he realizes the fact that at the same time he utters the repreive of himself and his companions, and announces not the discovery of new land, but the portal to safety and home.—Tinsley's Magazine.

Work of the Ants.

Some, like the common Formica rufa, build vast structures of all sorts of alien materials, sinking fairy piles into the ground, and with indescribable art dovetailing in little bits of wood to form durable partitions. Others, like the mason ant, build of earth alone, moistened with rain water, and kneaded into tiny bricks; while others, again, the mining ants, making use of a flat stone for their canopy, excavate extensive subterranean galleries and chambers. Some make themselves a city to dwell in within the heart of a tree, sculpturing out numberless stories whose floors and ceilings are as thin as paper, supported sometimes by vertical partitions, sometimes by concentric rows of slender pillars, the whole imbued with a blackish tint, by what agency remains obscure. For all these marvelous works they have no other chisel than their teeth, no other compass or carpenter's rule than their antennæ, and no other trowel than their forefeet, with which they affix and consolidate the moistened earth. The Brazilian Æcodoma cephalotes, as well as some other species, use the leaves of trees in the construction of their nests. On a perfectly calm day the passer by is surprised to see the leaves of a tree in full foliage falling in a shower. Closer observation betrays an ant sawing diligently at the foot stalk, while other ants at the foot of the tree are engaged in cutting the fallen leaves into circular pieces. The singular sight of thousands of these ants returning from their destructive harvests, and presenting the aspect of a multitude of animated leaves of a circular shape, has given them the name of parasol ants, in Surinam. With these leaves interspersed between the layers of kneaded earth they manage to "felt" the large domes which cover their extensive edifices, many of them from three to six feet in height, and as much as thirty to forty yards in circumference, and thus render them impervious to even the torrents of tropical rain. One knows not which to admire the most, their ingenuity in perceiving that no layer of earth, however tempered, would resist a tropical downpour, or the admirable method by which they work, one band of ants being toled off to bring the materials to a central depot, and another to place the leafy tiles in due order on the roof.—Contemporary Review

How Lightning Strikes

Prof. Colladon, Geneva, has made some interesting observations on the course of lightning when it strikes trees and houses. He holds that the great discharges which injure trees and houses seldom or never happen while the lightning has an unobstructed course, which it has along the thin upper branches of trees, where birds on their nests are often left quite uninjured by its descent. But it is where the electric current reaches the thick stem that the tree becomes a worse and worse conductor, and it is here, therefore, that the tree is what is called struck, i. e., here that the electricity, failing to find an unobstructed channel to the earth, accumulates in masses, and gives out shocks which rend the tree. And the same is true of houses whose lightning conductors stop short of the ground. Prof. Colladon has also shown that the close neighborhood of a pool of water is a great attraction to the electric current, and that the electricity often passes down a house or tree till it is near enough to dart straight across to the water; and he thinks that where possible lightning conductors should end in a spring or pool of water. Prof. Colladon believes that lightning descends rather in a shower, through a multitude of vines, for instance, in the same vineyard, than in a single main stream. It divides itself among all the upper branches of a tree, and is received from hundreds of atmospheric points at once instead of, as has been usually supposed, from one. Electricity is a rain, a number of tributaries from a wide surface, not a single torrent.—Eclectic Magazine.

Humorous.

A familiar instance of color-blindness is that of a man taking a brown silk umbrella and leaving a green gingham in its place.

An Irish newspaper says: "In the absence of all the editors, the publishers have succeeded in securing the services of a gentleman to edit the paper this week."

He came into the editor's sanctum with a large roll of manuscript under his arm, and said very politely: "I have a little trifle here about the sunset yesterday, which was dashed off by a friend of mine, which I would like inserted if you have room." "Plenty of room; just insert it yourself," replied the editor, gently pushing the waste basket toward him.

SECULAR NEWS.

The people who have come back from Beaufort report that shark fishing is now one of the chief sports. They have caught several of these dangerous creatures which measured 8 or 10 feet in length and the number does not seem to have been diminished much either.—Greensboro Patriot.

Mrs. Julia Lumsden was killed at Masonboro Sound, near Wilmington, N. C., by a stroke of lightning, on 27th ult. The lightning struck a live oak tree near the house and then entered the house shattering the bed on which Mrs. Lumsden was lying and injuring her so seriously that she soon died, without hurting an infant who lay beside her. A dog at the foot of the tree was killed. No rain fell at the place where the bolt was launched nor within a mile or two of the spot. Condensed from Wilmington Star.

During the last week we have passed through portions of Wake and Orange. The crops are looking as promising in these counties as they are in Granville; and in saying this, we will add that we never saw more encouraging prospects for an abundant harvest. The corn crop, with favorable seasons from now, will be the largest made in ten years. The tobacco crop is a short one, but looks well.—Oxford Torch-light.

It may be mentioned that of the twenty two species of oak found in the United States, nineteen are found in North Carolina; that of the twenty kinds of timber admitted to the New York ship-yards, as suitable for building vessels, nearly every one is found in this State in abundance. Of the mineralogical species there is a larger number found in this State than in any other of the United States. Its wealth in useful ores is almost without limit: in the most precious of metals it abounds: and many precious stones are found here.—Raleigh News.

Cathartic Pills
Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.
AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.
As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.
While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

SHALL THE PRESBYTERY OF ORANGE BE DIVIDED?

In our preceding articles we have shown that it was practicable to divide the Presbytery of Orange into two efficient presbyteries; that this division would not cripple the evangelistic work of Presbytery; that the divison was desirable because of a material reduction of expenses, and because each presbytery could have a better acquaintance with, and so that account could exercise a more efficient oversight over its churches than at present. This last point might be more fully developed. We hope some other brother will do so. We wish to mention one other argument in this article. It is this: that division would draw out a better attendance of elders. We all know that at any given meeting of Presbytery the churches contiguous to the place of meeting are more apt to be represented than those at a distance. This, of corse, is not a universal rule. There are some churches which are almost always represented, it matters not where Presbytery meets, and there are some, perhaps, which are never represented, even when Presbytery meets near by; yet we know it to be true that there are many churches which are much more apt to be represented when the place of meeting is near by than when it is at a distance. One reason of this is that many elders bear their own expenses, and while willing to bear a small expense are not willing or able sometimes to bear the expense of attending at a great distance. If the Presbytery were divided of course there are two places of meeting, each of which has its contigneus churches. Indeed we would probably never hear, at least in the western presbytery, the excuse for non-attendance, that the place of meeting was too far off and the expense too great. We sometimes, perhaps not infrequently, hear that excuse now. We hold that it is very desirable to have our churches more largely represented by ruling elders. We need their councils very much in the transaction of practical business, especially where finance is involved. We would say here that we hope the ruling elders will come out to Reidsville next fall, and give us the benefit of their counsel and votes in the decision of this practical matter of the division of Orange Presbytery. We are afraid that some of the churches in the eastern part of the Presbytery will not be represented for the very reason that the place of meeting is distant. We would urge all to come ont who can.

The proposition to divide the Presbytery will probably be somewhat in this form:

Whereas, the Presbytery of Orange covers a large territory, so that attendance upon its meetings involves considerable expense; and, whereas, the Presbytery is large enough to form two efficient presbyteries; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That the Synod of North Carolina be requested to divide the Presbytery into two Presbyteries.

2. That the line of division be, beginning

3. That the Eastern Presbytery be called Bnd Orange and the Western West Orange.

I think it would be best to take the vote on the first resolution first, then if the resolution to divide be adopted, let an election be had for the line of division, and let the blank of the second resolution be filled by the line which shall receive the majority of the votes of Presbytery. Four lines have been proposed. It might be best to designate these lines by terms for convenience in balloting. The line which forms the eastern boundary of Person, Orange and Chatham counties might be designated as "The Pretty Line." The line proposed last spring, beginning at the northwest corner of Person county, and following the western boundary of that county to the Orange county line, thence along the northern boundary of Orange to the northwest corner of that county, thence along the western boundary of Orange to the North Carolina Railroad, thence eastward along that Railroad to its intersection with the eastern boundary of Orange, thence southward along the eastern boundaries of Orange and Chatham to the southern boundary of the Presbytery, might be designated as "The Railroad Line." The same line, except beginning at the northeast corner of Person and running along the eastern boundary to the Orange line, thence westward along the northern boundary of Orange, &c., might be designated as "The Person Line." The line beginning at the northeast corner of Person, running southward alongthe eastern border to the Orange line, westward along the northern boundary of Orange to the northwest corner of the county, southward along the western boundary to the southwest corner, eastward along the southern boundary to the southeast corner, thence southward along the eastern boundary of Chatham to the southern boundary of the Presbytery, might be designated "The Equal Line." This last line gives the whole of Orange county to the East, while the West retains Person and Chatham. I have made up my mind to vote for this last line, because it comes nearer making an equal division of the churches as well as ministers, and because it gives to the West a still more compact territory. The fact that Orange county will be wholly in the eastern Presbytery need make no difference as to the name of the western Presbytery. The western Presbytery will have Alamance county, which was formerly the western part of Orange, and which contains old Hawfields church. As to which Presbytery retains the old records I suppose makes no great difference, so that they are safely kept.

In conclusion, I would say that others who see with me in this matter of the importance of dividing Presbytery, will be firm on this point, and not make a difficulty as to the line. Division is the important matter; the line of division is not so important; so it comes near making an equal division of ecclesiastical and ministerial strength. Mere personal considerations or feelings ought not to be allowed to have weight. C. M.

WHAT THE ALUMNI OF DAVIDSON COLLEGE MAY DO FOR THEIR ALMA MATER.

Conclusion of the Address of Rev. Wm. S. Lacy before the Alumni Association of Davidson College.

When the venerable and beloved Dr. Archibald Alexander was called but a few years before his death to render the service I am now attempting to perform—to deliver the address before the Alumni Association of his Alma Mater, Washington College—he made use of language which I wish to adopt as my own. His words are full of practical wisdom, as all the utterances of this remarkable man were, though expressed in simple and homely guise. We wish to know how we can requite the institution that has trained us for usefulness, the institution that we love and that deserves our love and service. Let us hear the wisdom of the sage:

"Gentlemen of the Alumni, the object of your Association doubtless is, to promote the permanent prosperity of your beloved and respected Alma Mater. The character and success of every literary institution depends very much on its Alumni, in two ways. First, they stamp its character by the talents, scholarship and principles which they exhibit when they come before the world in their respective professions and public occupations. In this way they honor or disgrace the place of their education, without any direct design to promote its prosperity, or the reverse; for the public must and will judge of a College or Seminary, not by a few specimens favorable or unfavorable, but by the general character of her Alumni. The more eminent, then, gentlemen, you become, for wisdom and integrity in your several pursuits, the more honor will you reflect on your Alma Mater,—and the want of ability or virtuous principle in any of you, cannot fail, in some degree, to inflict a wound on her reputation. * * *

"The other way in which the Alumni of a College may promote her prosperity is, by individual and associated effort to advance her interests. By defending her against calumny and misrepresentation; by communicating information respecting the facilities and advantages of education which she possesses; by leading their aid to give effect to applications to the Legislatures, or the public, for funds which may be needed; and especially, by selecting some one object connected with her reputation and interests, which by their combined efforts they will promote."

Gentlemen, let us heed these words of wisdom. And now suffer a few words of practical suggestion as to our duty as Alumni, and let us shew that we recognize our obligations to this institution. She has given us training. She has lent us influence. She has added to our usefulness and happiness. Let us repay—

1. By personal growth, by constant and diligent study, and by marked and useful advancement. Schiller says:

> * * * * "The ocean deeps are mute,
> The shallows roar:
> Worth is the ocean—fame is but the brult
> Along the shore.
>
> "What shall I do to be forever known?
> Thy duty ever. * * *
> He who ever acts as conscience cries,
> Shall live though dead."

We came here not so much to acquire, as to learn how to acquire. In no way can each of us so honor our Alma Mater as by real personal attainment and scholarship. And in fact, it is its high standard of scholarship that has given Davidson College its reputation. Take care of your character and her reputation will take care of itself. To have a Davidson diploma means something. Do not let that mean all.

2. By individual influence in behalf of the institution. Of the three hundred living sons, if each one could influence one student only to seek this institution—if each one would have one representative here, so directed by his special personal influence—who could measure the advantage to the college, as well as to the individual? Do not speak in a deprecatory way of your connection with the College. Do not apologize for the institution. Assert its just claims. And for this purpose familiarize yourself with its advantages, the distinction and ability of its professors, the thoroughness and amplitude of the instruction, the standing of its scholars, the large benevolence it offers.

3. By keeping fresh the memories of her sons. This neglected duty I have sought hurriedly to discharge in some measure. Let us be more tender and more faithful to those who have passed over the river, to their loved names and their honored memories.

If it be but a daisy that springs from their unseen mound, let us water it with the tear of affection. It is but duty. If it be a rich magnolia whose fragrant breath is stolen by every truant breeze, or a majestic oak that rears its lofty crown, whose rootlets have borne the buried dust high into the air,—let us pay the honor which such deserve.

But gentlemen, there is a duty also to the living—honor your fellows—cheer them when they win. Welcome each class that mounts the rostrum for their last adieux. Encourage them as they enter life's arena. Well do I remember that hero of history,—one of the foremost captains of all time; when by incredible rapidity and marvelous boldness the great Jackson, then almost unknown, had hurled his little handful of less than 3,000 men, against McDowell's magnificent corps at Kernstown, he brought up a jaded regiment from one part of the field where the battle was langnid to another part where the fight was hottest; and as the struggling disheartened band passed by scarce aware whether they were retreating or advancing, he cried in inspiring tones to the wavering line, "cheer the reinforcements, men—cheer the reinforcements." They cheered, and they won! Let us cheer our comrades! Let us cheer the reinforcements! Let us cheer each class that issues from these halls! They are gallant and true—and 'twill nerve them for the struggle. I recall the thrilling lines of Mr. Preston, as I thus speak. They are just and true:

> "What use for the rope, if it be not flung
> Till the swimmer's grasp to the rock has clung?
> What help in a comrade's bugle blast,
> When the peril of Alpine heights is past?
> What need that the spurring paean roll,
> When the runner is safe beyond the goal?
> What worth in eulogy's blandest breath,
> When whispered in ears that are hushed in death?
> No! No! If you have but a word or cheer,
> Speak it, while I am alive to hear!"

Once more. By concerted effort in behalf of some special object that must add to the power and usefulness of the college. In union there is strength. And though each one might be able to do but little, the aggregate will be vast and effective. Let there be something then to work for. Let there be something to show for the effort of the Alumni of Davidson College. Dr. Alexander in the address from which I have quoted, urged upon the Alumni of Washington College the formation of a library. That is a sore need here. For while the Societies have most admirable and well chosen libraries, they are chiefly confined to literature. Some vast and choice collection of books so as to make the College famous, such as the Peabody Library of Baltimore, or the giant University Library of England would bring pilgrims to this shrine of learning and win students from every quarter. It is not a thing impossible or chimerical. Fellowships in European Universities, as rewards for distinguished scholarships and successful attainment, would be a stimulus both to diligence and numbers. But I would not divert or distract the present exertions of the Alumni. What is perhaps most needed to equip the College to meet the demands of the age is a more ample endowment, and an increase in the corps of Professors. A few years ago a resolution was adopted by the Alumni Association, to endow an Alumni Professorship. All honor to the devoted friend who introduced and urged that resolution. I beg leave at this time and in in this presence to renew that motion. Do I meet with a second? Let no one say, "We can't do it." Can't do it! Down with this miserable cant!

That gallant and accomplished English scholar and gentleman Sir Thomas More, said to his daughters who urged upon him an indulgence, as he reluctantly and affectionately yielded to their united entreaty, "Ah, you daughters of mine you are wise and strong; you can accomplish anything when you put your heads together." To which they beautifully and respectfully replied: "Nay, father, we can do anything for you, when we put our hearts together." That's it, friends. We can do anything for the mother's sake, when we put our hearts together.

Yes, and we can do this. Forty-three years of useful and honored life has the College led. In seven years comes the semi-centenary, when the year of jubilee must be celebrated with feasting and joy. While every commencement we wish to be a season of "knitting severed friendships up," we wish to see a grand rally of the scattered children from far and near, with enthusiastic love paying homage on her fiftieth anniversary. I hope to see our loved Alma Mater still more useful, more honored, more beloved—because more completely and thoroughly equipped. And among, may I not say, many testimonials of the affection of her sons, and ample additional equipments, I hope to see—nay, I expect to see, if life is spared, a Professorship thoroughly endowed and manned (as all the others are) known as the Alumni Professorship! We are poor preachers, many of us, and in more senses than one; but we can, and must make our mother this present ere the day of her golden wedding. This is no idle dream. It can be done. It must be done. Many can give but little. But there are names we would not willingly let die, whose friends will remember so sacred a duty. There are those who, not graduates, yet received their education here. There are those whom God has given favor as he gave Joseph. And when we put our hearts together for the dear old mother, we can do it. Gentlemen, forgive me if my earnestness has detained you too long. I appeal to every son of Davidson College to prove his gratitude, to show his honor for his Alma Mater. I appeal to every one who cherishes a loved memory, for the sake of him who would so gladly have honored this institution and himself, by sacrifice and service, had he lived, to lend a helping hand.

Gentlemen, my task is done. I congratulated you at the beginning, I congratulate you at the close.

Yet I wanted to say this much. I trust I have not said it in vain.

EVIDENCE OF CONVERSION.

In detail the inword evidence lies very much this way. First, a wondrous sense of change comes over the believer. Having believed in Jesus Christ upon the simple evidence of God, there is a work of regeneration performed upon him, and he feels himself altogether transformed. A young girl once said, "Either the whole world is changed, or else I am." Everything seems so altered, for it is seen with new eyes. The man undergoes a radical change of feelings.

Then again there is a wondrous power which goes with the Word of God, not always, but yet often. Are you not conscious, my brethren, of often feeling when you are reading the Word, or hearing it, as you never did feel when listening to any other form of speech?

We are also conscious of a wonderful rest—"the peace of God which passeth all understanding." We see that we are forgiven, justly forgiven, saved by mercy, but still not to the violation of the justice of God, and therefore we are perfectly at ease. Yes, and sometimes we rise beyond peace. I am not going to tell many of the secrets of the inner life this morning, but yet I will confess that at times,

> "Our joys divinely grow
> Unspeakable like those above

And this witness is unanswerable. A man is told that a certain medicine is mere quackery. "See here," says he, "it healed me." What do you say to such an argument? You had bettter let the man alone. So when a Christian is told that the Gospel is all nonsense, he replies, "It saved me. I was a drunkard, and it made me sober, and more. I was a man of strong passions, and it tamed me, and more." What can you say to such facts? Why, nothing. It must be with you as with the rulers of old. "When they saw the man that was healed standing with Peter and John, they could say nothing against them.—Spurgeon.

MY WILL BE THINE.

> Take it, O Father, ere my courage fail!
> And merge it so in thine own will that, e'en
> If in some desperate hour my cries prevail,
> And Thou give back my gift, it may have been
> So changed, so purified, so fair have grown,
> So one with Thee, so filled with peace divine,
> I may not know or feel it as mine own,
> But, gaining back my will, may find it Thine!

WORK AND PAY.

And then remember, my son, you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or a pen, a wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a newspaper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. If you will look around you, you will see that the men who are most able to work are the men who work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with overwork, son. It is beyond your power to do that. Men cannot work so hard as that on the sunny side of thirty. They die sometimes, but it's because they quit at 6 p. m., and don't go home until 2 a. m. It's the intervals that kills, my son. The work gives you an appetite for your meals, it lends solidity to your slumber, it gives you perfect and graceful appreciation of a holiday. There are young men who do not work, my son; young men who make a living by sucking the end of a cane, whose entire mental development is insufficient to tell them which side of a postage stamp to lick; young men who can tie a necktie in eleven different knots and never lay a wrinkle in it; who can spend more money in a day than you can earn in a month, but who will go to the sheriff's office to buy a postal card, and apply at the office of the street commissioner for a marriage license. But the world is not proud of them, son. It does not know their name, even. Nobody likes them, nobody hates them; the great, busy world doesn't even know they are there. Things will go on just as well without them. So find out what you want to be and do this: take off your coat and make a dust in the world. The busier you are the less deviltry you will be apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier your holidays, and the better satisfied will the world be with you.—Burlington Hawkeye.

JOYFULNESS AND USEFULNESS.

Above all things, see to it that your souls are happy in the Lord. Other things may press upon you; the Lord's work even may have urgent claims upon your attention; but I deliberately repeat, it is of supreme paramount importance that you should seek, above all other things, to have your souls truly happy in God himself. Day by day seek to make this the most important business of your life. This has been my firm and settled conviction for the last five-and-thirty years. For the first years after my conversion I knew not its vast importance; but now, after much experience, I especially commend this point to the notice of my younger brothers and sisters in Christ. The secret of all true effectual service is joy in God, and having experimental acquaintance and fellowship with God himself. But in what way shall we attain to this settled happiness of souls? How shall we learn to enjoy God? how obtain such an all-sufficient, soul-satisfying portion of Him as shall enable us to let go the things of this world as vain and worthless in comparison? I answer, this happiness is to be obtained through the study of the Holy Scriptures. God has therein revealed Himself unto us in the face of Jesus Christ. In the Scriptures, by the power of the Holy Ghost, He makes Himself known unto our souls. Remember, it is not a God of our thoughts or our own imaginations that we need to be acquainted with; but the God of the Bible, our Father, who has given the blessed Jesus to die for us. Him should we seek intimately to know, according to the revelation He has made of Himself in His own most precious Word.—George Muller.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

The Spirit that makes us like Christ will make us like the angels, and like one another. And surely, as the Spirit of God more and more possesses the Church, that which divides and estranges will drop off, and that which unites and harmonizes will be magnified. The great family features will come out conspicuously. Hazlitt, the essayist, says, I remember, in his mature age: "I have been struck, lately, in looking into the glass, with my strong resemblance to my father. I never in youth was thought to resemble him, but in age my father's features seem to be coming out more and more each year." And so, a Calvinist and an Arminian, a Baptist and a Presbyterian, a Churchman and a Dissenter, may not look much alike, but let them grow in grace, year after year, and be filled with the Spirit more and more, and it wouldn't be strange if in old age they should say to each other, as they chance to meet, "Why, how much we look like each other. I shouldn't have thought it." We must be growing to look like each other, if we are growing in the grace of the Lord. "But all we beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed in the same image from glory to glory." To be like Christ is to be like each other. To be transformed into the same image is to be conformed to one another; and, while God shall permit us to remain still under the painful discipline of divisions and outward separations, let us cease chiding and blaming each other for these divisions; but let us thank the Lord for every new feature of Christ that comes out in the face of his bride, the Church. The Spirit is mightily at work all over the earth restoring the lost image of Christ in the face of the Church. And when the work is done, then the bridegroom will come; and when the bridegroom comes there will be no more divisions. "But we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."—The Watchword.

MAKING DRUDGERY DIVINE.

It is the light in which we look at the work we have to do, which settles the question whether we count it mere drudgery or a desirable service. Severe exercise and scanty fare seem very different to a young man, when they are the necessity of poverty, from what they seem when he is in training for a college boat-race. In one case he thinks of his deprivations; in the other of his hope of glad triumph. The details of every-day business in a counting-room are one thing to a clerk who has no thought beyond earning his wages, and quite another thing to a partner in the house who expects to make a fortune through attention to those details. And when a clerk is fired with ambition to prove himself so useful there that he also shall become a partner, the more he has to do the better. What is treadmill stepping to his companions is ladder-climbing to him. Toiling up a mountain side is wearisome work to one who thinks only of the rugged path and the cheerless surroundings; but it is an inspiriting effort to the enthusiastic lover of nature who anticipates a matchless view of grand and beautiful scenery from the summit.

But there is nothing in any hope of personal gain which so ennobles service, so renders drudgery a delight, as the fact that that service—drudgery though it may be—is for the welfare and happiness, or is at the call, of one whom we love. Perhaps there is no life on earth where there is so much drudgery—and, for a time, so little else—as the life of a young mother. It is do, do, do for that exacting, helpless baby, day and night, week in and week out. Distasteful things, patience-trying things, strength-exhausting must be done for the troublesome child; and when they are once fairly done, they are all to be done over again. What mother could endure this if she looked only at the drudgery side of it? But it is her darling who calls for it; and as long as that darling has need of it, her service is ennobled, and she finds joy in its performance. It is the thought of all this loving care and patient endurance of the parents in the days of one's infancy, that makes a dutiful son or daughter glad to do or to endure for a father or a mother enfeebled with age, and possibly in the helplessness of a second childhood. There is no dry drudgery in the ministries of affection then called for by that parent. Grateful recollections make every possible service a privilege and a pleasure.

And above all, that which glorifies service, and which makes drudgery divine, is the thought that it is for Him who should be dearer than parent of child, than husband or wife, than brother or friend. All proper service, all needful drudgery, of the Christian believer, is just this—nothing less, nothing more. St. Paul urged on slaves who were under the Roman yoke to count the daily tasks assigned to them by their heathen masters as the Lord's call to service. "And whatsoever ye do," he said, "do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men." Jesus declares that in the great day His test of the fidelity of His disciples will be their humble, faithful ministry to the poor and the needy on earth who loved and trusted Him. "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Yet just here is where there is greatest danger of counting as drudgery that which is a divine ministry. In all specific service for Christ there is much of dry detail to be attended to, which may be counted wearisome and ignoble when it ought to be looked at as glorious and ennobling. Think not of this visiting of the sick, of this attending on hospital or missionary society committees, of this leading of prayer-meeting exercises, of this preparing of sermons, of this writing of newspaper articles, of this teaching in the Sunday School, as a tedious and perfunctory service; but look at it all and always as representative work for the King of kings, and the Lord of lords. It is this nobler and diviner way of viewing every duty to which a servant of Christ may be called that is illustrated by the old writer who has said: "If two angels were sent down from heaven to execute the divine command, and one was appointed to conduct an empire, and the other to sweep a street, they would feel no inclination to change employments."

MATTER FOR SOBER THOUGHT.

Is there any demand for a prohibition movement in our country? Does the manufacture, sale, and use of alcoholic drinks deserve to be considered in the interest of good government? These are important questions for the citizens of our country. No one will deny that the dominant political parties are now fighting over the issues of the war which closed fifteen years ago. The results of that ordeal are the questions of controversy. These are used as levers to lift them into office. One of the chief inquiries has been, and now is, how to meet the public debt and properly control the financial interests of the country. We have now only time to refer to a simple phrase of this inquiry respecting the bearing of the temperance reform.

When the war closed fifteen years ago and the nation had its dead sons and widowed wives, and sad mothers and children, it had also an enormous debt. It had cost the Government, the States, and cities and towns of the North no less than $6,165,237,000 to compete the war. It has cost the South not less than $2,000,000,000 making a total expense to the country of $8,165,237,000. A few days ago we had a floral decoration and honored the memories of the dead with tears as well as garlands. It is a sad record. But let it be remembered that every year since the war closed the people of our country have paid alone for alcoholic drinks more than $600,000,000, or, in the fifteen years the sum of $9,000,000,000. In this we count not the vast and far-reaching and enormous sums of money expended and lost through the degredation and crime which have followed in the wake of this traffic, but that which the poor and the rich have expended for accursed drink—just the drink-bill of the nation. The reader may add to this the costs of crime, poverty, idiocy, loss of productive labor, etc. But the drink-bill alone of these fifteen years would have paid every dollar of the cost of the war North and South, and left remaining on hand for good uses $834,783,000. This is a commonly known fact. It is enough to startle our nation and make the Christian people reel with wonder. What have we for these wasted resources of our fair land? What remuneration comes to us for this expenditure of money for the seething, liquid fire? Ask our homes of disgrace, poverty, and ignorance! Ask our homes of sorrow, of shame, of bereavement, of broken vows, and utter helplessness! Ask our city prisons, our jails, our penitentiaries, and our insane-asylums, all filled with the victims of strong drink! Ask the court-room, the fellow pinioned on the gallows and dropping into eternity; ask these what we have for our drink-bill!

During the four years of civil war it is estimated that 1,000,000 lives were lost, but in these fifteen years which have passed since they fell, this war of intemperance has murdered not less than seven or eight times that number of our fellowbeings. Natis the king of Sparta, had erected a sorcerous figure of his wife Apego, royally clad. Into the hideous embrace of this gorgeously-clad machine he thrust those he would punish. The sharp irons which were concealed under the clothing of the hellish machine proved the death of many a poor man who was clasped in its iron arms. Such is the awful and inhuman and hellish structure, the whiskey traffic, whose sorcerons and lecherons arms are around our nation. It ought to cry out to God for speedy deliverance.

If such is only a faint sketch of the whiskey-drinking of our country, what were its horrors if fully told? Some may suppose that these belongs merely to the evils of drinking and not to prohibition. To any such we put these solemn questions: If the use of alcoholic drinks as a beverage is wrong, is not the manufacture and sale of the same equally wrong? If the former should be brought to an end, should not the latter speedily suffer death? We have suggested these facts, and ask our readers as Christians and citizens to consider with all others the claims of prohibition.—Religious Telescope.

WOMAN'S SAGACITY.

"What is the price of this bracelet?" asked a tourist of an old trinket-seller in Brittany.

"Is it for your wife or your sweetheart?" she responded.

"For my sweetheart."

"It's ten francs."

The tourist turned on his heel, when the old woman said:

"You've no sweetheart, or you'd have given the ten francs without a word. You may have it for three."

"I'll take it," he said, handing over the money.

"You haven't any wife either," exclaimed the old woman; for if it had been for her, you'd have beaten me down two francs. Oh, you men, you men."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

There are now sixty Protestant churches in Spain, whose congregations aggregate 20,000, and are rapidly growing.

A committee of extreme High Churchmen has been formed to "take steps for the removal of the bishops from the House of Lords.

The Inquirer, the Unitarian organ, notes that that body has sixteen members in the new Parliament, the largest number of which it ever could boast.

The vault in which Kant is laid at Konigsburg was lately opened, and his wooden coffin was found to be decayed and broken. It is to be replaced by a metal one.

A company of twenty-seven Trappists, exiled from France, will embark in a few days for the South of Africa, to which they have been given a free passage by the Government.

The Marquis of Ripon has ordered to be discontinued the practice of doing official work of any kind on Sundays, as has been hitherto done in certain departments of the Government of India.

It is stated that an American lady of Irish extraction has purchased the lease of Cedar Villa, Wright's Lane, Kensington, and has presented it to Monsignor Capel, who resided there until a few months ago. It is stated on the same authority that the claims against Monsignor Capel, in the Bankruptcy Court, will be paid in full.

The Roman Catholic Union of Ireland has passed a resolution of "deep sympathy with the Jesuits of France in the persecution under which they are now suffering," and calling upon the government "to take such steps as they shall deem necessary and fitting to protect the rights and property of British subjects from being affected by this most unjust action on the part of the French Government."

The Governor of Patras, in Greece, has issued an order prohibiting the villagers bringing in their goods for sale on Sundays, which was the usual practice until now; also warning the shopkeepers from opening their shops on the Lord's Day. The Greek ministry also decreed some months ago that the New Testament should be taught at all national schools.

Rev. A. H. Sweetzer, for twelve years a minister of the Universalist denomination, and lately pastor of the church at Plymouth, Mass., has become a Baptist. His change of views was the result of a deep religious experience, the beginning of which was in listening to a sermon by the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon on the Second Resurrection. His convictions were subsequently deepened in listening to Mr. Joseph Cook, and the question was finally settled in his own study through earnest prayer and examination.

The recent remarkable religious movement in France is attributed largely to the distribution of the Word of God. Rev. Dr. Fisk, of Paris, reports that four milliom copies of the Scriptures have been sold in France; that all the young men in the army have been taught to read the Gospel of John, and that half a million young men know that Gospel by heart; and that 100,000 soldiers, driven into Protestant Switzerland during the late war, have returned to France, each with a New Testament and various religious tracts.

The Paray-le-Monial excursions evidently lost their attraction to devout Roman Catholics. A Paris correspondent writes that, on the admission of the reactionary journals, the expiatory pilgrimage is a failure. "Priests, we read, were more plentiful in the first batch than the lay pilgrims, who were met at the railway by three hundred ecclesiastics in canonical vestments, and escorted to the church with the cross aloft and banners flying. The second batch was composed of ladies in deep mourning, and bearing tapers. Instead of singing Aves, they chanted penitential psalms. Many remained prostrate on the ground during the sermon, which was preached by a Jesuit, on the necessity of humility, charity, and penance to repair the wound inflicted on the Sacred Heart by the execution of the decrees. Relations with the Vatican being strained, the expulsion of the other orders from their houses may be delayed till after the fete."

YOUNG CONVERTS.

One of the most perplexing questions which confronts pastors and church sessions is that of employment of young converts—perhaps for clearness we should say recent converts. All who study the subject with any degree of patient earnestness will admit not only its perplexing character, but its great importance. A number of persons in a season of gracious visitation present themselves before the session, are received, and then—what then? We imagine that we have revived in the minds of many pastors and elders the thoughts that have oppressed them often. Shall these receive the advice which a pastor or session can give—how often do they give it? how often, for lack of time and opportunity, can they give it?—shall these receive such kindly counsel as limited time and the pressure of other duties permit and then be sent away, to buffet with the temptations, the trials, the perplexities of their new course of life, humanly speaking, unassisted? Unstified by faith, they are saved. True enough! and that thought pressed home would do its work, and do it well; but are they to be left to work out a terrible experience of doubts and fears, despondency and gloom, lightened, it may be, by occasional rays of heavenly light? Is the experience which, alas! so many of us have gathered a necessary experience? Are falls a natural, a necessary and therefore an inevitable factor in God's discipline of his children? Is chronic darkness the essence of Christian existence in its earlier stages? We do not believe it. Sanctification implies the renewal of the whole man in the image of God and the being enabled more and more to die unto sin and live unto righteousness. After the act, immediately after the act of justification comes sanctification. Immediately after salvation as an act of God's free grace, follows the way of salvation in which the saved by the aid of His Spirit are to walk. The Holy Spirit! Yes, the Holy Spirit brings through, assuredly brings through, those who are saved by faith—but, we are dealing with the means, the human instrumentalities, and is not the Church one of these? Is not its mission to specially watch over, to counsel, and to care for converts? If slips and falls do come, let them come not through neglect of the Church, but in spite of its care. We have sometimes thought, not that we lay too much stress on justification by faith, for that could not be, but that we partially neglect sanctification as a doctrine, and a vital doctrine (a thing to be taught) of Christianity. Perhaps the seeming indifference is due to the extravagances of perfectionism and the like into which it is sometimes perverted. Sanctification is in our standards a benefit, associated with justification and adoption, as accruing to those who are effectually called. And so adoption is to be taught in all its richness and fullness.

But where shall we stop and yet, not have a plan or mode of procedure for the Church. Some propose classes of young converts, which shall be specially instructed and as far as possible directed and guided; from others the advice is to put the young converts at once to work. Both well, both excellent, but beset with difficulties and partial at best. One objection to the latter is that it presumes adaptability for word, and thus overlooks all preparatory training. We are disposed to think that the surest means of correcting the deficiency is in encouraging the idea of brotherhood in its fullest, strictest sense, as between Christians. Lay the foundations deep and build the structure high, on Adoption. Our God! Our Saviour! Our Father! Our Brother! One family in Him! Brethren in Christ! Let these words express such a bond as draws the children of a family together, and thus make every member of the Church feel that to every other member he is a brother, by ties stronger and more sacred than even earthly ties. Every person entering the portals of the Church ought to feel, and every difficulty should be removed that he may feel, that in every one of his brethren there exists a love for him which longs to help him in his course; which would delight to counsel or encourage; such a love as will smooth the way where it can and will share the burden of sorrow or trouble where it may, in full recognition of brotherhood in Christ.

IN THE OLDEN TIME.

Some years since a friend of ours in rummaging among the debris of an old warehouse of Hall & Hall, in Fayetteville, N. C., fell upon a pile of old papers. One here and there he reserved, and they now lie before us.

Let us spend a few moments with these friends in the olden time. There has not been as much improvement in type manufacture in the last half century as we should expect, but in taste and in style of setting there has been great advancement. The specimens before us, with their fancy rules and bordered captions, their absence of head lines and of column rules are fitting representatives, perhaps, of an antithetic combination of lavish adornment and severe simplicity peculiar to their day.

The Carolina Observer of 25th September, 1817, published by Francis W. Waldo, informs us that John Randolph, Esq., of Roanoke, is making arrangements for a voyage across the Atlantic, and intends during his stay to visit England, France and Germany. Quite a trip that in the olden time, thirty to sixty days on the broad ocean in the outward trip, and not less in return. Here's a cure for the bilious fever: Dry snake root and Rochelle salts. The old-fashioned bilious, that, of which our fathers knew so much, and happily, we so little, and the remedy was like to it. Has crime its cycles? This item would serve, with some changes of locality, for 1880, thus: "A writer in the Commercial Advertiser states that thirteen duels have been fought at the monument of Hamilton, opposite New York, since the first of May last." The President, James Monroe, received an ovation at Pittsburg on September 9th. We have the latest foreign news, by ship Triton, twenty-nine days from Liverpool to Boston: A conspiracy against the Turkish government—of course—and news from Russia, Sweden, &c., &c.

The Fayetteville Intelligencer carries us back to July 6, 1810. The Intelligencer was printed by Ray and Black, and the copy before us is No. 29 of Vol. V., so it started its career in 1805—perhaps before. The first page is pretty much filled with a selected article on Prince Charles, the Pretender. The second page is devoted to foreign news. On the third we find what, in these days, would be called a condensed account of the Fourth of July Celebration. John A. Cameron, Esq., "delivered an eloquent and appropriate oration" after the reading of the Declaration of Independence by Dr. Robinson. "All the soldiery of the town exhibited a brilliant appearance, the magistrates, the trustees, principal tutors and students of the academy, and a considerable number of the citizens of the town and its vicinity, marched in procession." A dinner at Mason Hall followed, at which John Winslow presided and John McMillan acted as vice president.

We note from the Intelligencer that Dr. Henderson, Dr. Edward McKay and Dr. Robinson were practicing medicine in Fayetteville in 1810; that D. Anderson was president of the Fayetteville Academy, and P. J. Tillinghast, Jr., secretary; John Hogg was cashier of the Bank of Cape Fear, and Robinson Mumford clerk of the county court. Besides these we find names, too many to mention, who have descendants now living in Fayetteville, or who are still remembered there.

We can give a pretty full price current list of Fayetteville market in February, 1817. Some of the figures are startling: Bacon 12a 15 cents per pound; corn $1 30a1 35; molasses 65a70 cents per gallon; coffee 22a24 cents; flour $12a12 50 per barrel; cotton 22a23 cents per pound. In Wilmington: Lumber $17 per M; tar $1 25; crude turpentine $3; spirits turpentine 45 cents per gallon.

In these papers the absence of editorials is notable. They are simply newspapers—nothing more—and as newspapers are worthy of all credit.

In so far as it refers to editorials, this is likewise true of the Commercial Advertiser of New York city. We have in hand the first number of volume one, and promptly note that here advertisements occupy about two-thirds the space. The New York paper is thirteen years older than the Intelligencer, and dates from October 2, 1797. The news from Europe seems to have been about sixty days old, and doesn't specially interest us. Our eyes dwell with some interest upon a rough and undescriptive wood-cut of an old-fashioned stage coach, drawn by four horses, which heads the advertisement of the Philadelphia, Albany and Vermont lines of stages. No railroads then. These stages would leave New York at 8 o'clock every day (except Sundays)—please note the exception—and reach Philadelphia early next day; Albany was reached on the fourth day, and Bennington in the same time. The Marine Register shows three vessels as having arrived and that three were cleared. New York city has grown in commercial importance. One marriage recorded, September 14, 1797, and no deaths chronicled as in New York city, but two deaths registered as at Philadelphia without date. With this last thrown in as news for the ladies we leave the past and resume the duties of the present.

COMMUNION SERVICE IN THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

A correspondent of the New York Observer in an account of the celebration in London of the one hundredth anniversary of the Institution of Sunday Schools, gives a graphic account of the Communion Service in Spurgeon's Tabernacle. We copy:

"The most impressive service of the Convention was, as it seems to me,—and I am not alone in my opinion,—the communion service at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle on Friday of the Centennial week. Through some mistake about the distribution of tickets, many were prevented from attending who otherwise would have been present; but, as it was, the body of the house was filled and the first gallery was well occupied. The services were conducted by Mr. Spurgeon himself, and the theme of his remarks was "The Christian in Christ." The spirit which breathed through his words may be caught from one of them, which contained, as it were, their contracted essence. It was impossible, he said, to restrict communion, and that as blood is thicker than water, so the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, by which he hoped for salvation, was thicker than the water of his baptism. Our completeness in Christ; our work to be carefully done because done in Him; and how, by mediation, reading the Scriptures, communion with Christ, and sympathy with him through our work for Him, our times of nearness to Him were to be made, as he meant they should be, abiding,—mark the general outline of the thoughts passed over on the occasion. And then came the distribution of the elements, followed by a collection for the poor Sunday schools upon the Continent and joyous hymn of praise to our risen Saviour; and then the vast assembly rose, and by joining hands, and so forming a well nigh unbroken chain running through the whole house, we sang together the last two verses of "There is a fountain filled with blood," and then we were dismissed with the benediction. I say dismissed but still many lingered, conversing together of the memorable scene through which they had just passed; and one expressed the feeling of all, I think, who said that the weariness and annoyances of the trip from America were amply compensated by that one service."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Here is an item of brand-new news: "General J. A. Garfield is a member of the Campbellite Presbyterian church." For further information inquire of Zion's Herald.

Colonel Ingersoll is accused of wholesale plagiarism. The Presbyterian says: "One who has been through a full course of unbelief down to atheism shows where Ingersoll found his smart, sneering, sceptical sayings, and cites the place where the accuser found them. Even the sentence so often repeated by the sceptic, 'An honest God is the noblest work of man,' is said to have been coined by Blount, an English deist of the seventeenth century, who is reported to have been himself a great plagiarist. When Ingersoll purloined the phrase he was simply proving himself in the true infidel succession."

The Appeal, published in Chicago in the interest of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and now edited by Bishop Cheney, instead of by an array of names, comes to us in a brighter dress and much improved we think. In the Salutatory it says:

"With the present number, the Appeal begins a new era in its history. It has become the property of one of the leading printing and publishing houses of Chicago, in the personnel of which the Reformed Episcopal Church is represented by earnest adherents. Its advantages in a material and business point of view are thereby very largely increased."

The Farmer and Mechanic, than which few if any papers in North Carolina give evidence of so much painstaking work, has passed into the hands of Mr. R. A. Shotwell. He says:

With the close of last week's number (July 29th), the Farmer and Mechanic passed into my hands as sole editor and proprietor; the firm of Shotwell & Dowd having dissolved by mutual consent. Mr. John W. Dowd, however, does not take leave of our patrons, but will remain identified with the paper as its general traveling agent and correspondent. Any courtesy shown him will be reciprocated by me.

That bull-fight must have been a very ludicrous affair. The enterprising Spaniards, who intended to create a prodigious sensation have doubtless returned certainly wiser, and let us hope, better men. Mr. Bergh was present. Just think of it: a bull-fight without any injury to the animals, and, as the Christian Union puts it, "an Irishman to give local Spanish coloring by shouting 'Macar-r-roni.'" All honor to Mr. Bergh.

Editor Presbyterian: Please answer in your paper what is the rest of the following lines and where can they be found:

"'Tis said that the mills of God grind slowly
Yet they grind exceedingly small,
While with patience we stand waiting,
With exactness grinds he all."

I have just seen these lines one time and want the rest. READER.

August 7th, 1880.

Our querist has not been precise in quoting probably. Mr. Mills the editor in reviewing Moore's History of North Carolina in the Orphan's Friend gives us the following, which we think furnishes the answer desired:

"The mills of the Gods grinds slowly" is quoted. The original (Oracula Sibyllina viii: 14) has the word meaning God in the genitive singular. Longfellow translates it correctly:

"Though the mills of God grind slowly,
Yet they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience we stand waiting,
With exactness grinds he all."

From Rev. John W. Davis we have the North China Herald. We extract the following, which may interest our readers. It is from the Peking Gazette, and a transaction of the Imperial Court:

"May 12th.—A decree. Ming Ch'ing, who formerly held the post of Mongolian Lieutenant General of the Bordered Yellow Banner, a man of more than eighty years of age and of great skill and experience, in the reign of Tao Kuang served a campaign in Kashgar, after which he was appointed officer of the Guards with the right of entree to the royal presence. He subsequently took part in the campaigns in Taiwan, Shaiwan, Shantung, Honan, Anhui, Kiangsu, Chekiang, Chihli, and other provinces, in all of which he distinguished himself greatly, and received marks of Imperial favor during several reigns. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant General, and placed in command of the "Peking Field Force" and of other troops, the duties of which posts he performed with the most unremitting zeal and fidelity. Sometime since he was permitted to vacate his post on account of ill health, being at the same time honored with a present of ginseng, and granted full pay and rations, that he might devote himself to the cure of his complaint, and live to be a recipient of further Imperial bounty. We now hear that he has suddenly passed away, and our grief is most profound. As a further mark of Imperial favor let him be provided with a pall embroidered with the Sacred Canon of To Lo, let the Duke Tsai Lien (Fu Kwo-kung), with ten officers of the guard, attend his funeral and pour out the libations of wine, and further, let one thousand taels be issued from the Treasury of the Privy Purse for the expenses of his funeral. The posthumous honors accorded by law to those holding the rank of Lieutenant General are to be conferred upon him, he is to be absolved from all faults he may have committed in his official capacity, and the proper office will consider what posthumous honors are due to him in accordance with the law, and report to the Throne. Let his son Ai-lung, an officer of the guards of the second grade, at the Ch'ien-ch'ing gate, be made an officer of the guards of the first grade, and let his grandsons Ch'eng-te and Ch'eng-shou be brought into the Imperial presence by the chiefs of their banner, that it may be seen how highly we value an old and faithful servant."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

We have the best of authority for saying, what the friends of Rev. Dr. Charles Phillips, everywhere, will be glad to hear, that his health seems nearly re-established. He preached to the Hospital sick wards a Sunday or two ago and was penetrated with joy and gratitude at being once more privileged to speak for the Master after a two year's sickness.

COLUMBUS CHURCH, OUACHITA.

An esteemed friend gives us news of a gracious season at Columbus church in Ouachita Presbytery. Rev. W. E. Burke, of Prescott, and Marlbrook churches assisted the pastor, Rev. G. F. Robertson, in a protracted meeting which began on 22d July and was still in progress when our correspondent wrote: Six persons united with the church on confession of faith and one by letter. One infant and one adult were baptized. The pastor, the session, the people were greatly encouraged and strengthened.

SINKING CREEK CHURCH.

This church, in Craig county, Va., was organized about two years ago. Its membership, as yet, is only eight, and its growth in members will, probably, for years be slow, for Presbyterianism is comparatively new in that section. "Rome was not built in a day," neither is a Presbyterian church. Her foundations must be laid deep and strong, in much patience, labor and prayer. Rev. W. R. Coppedge is its present pastor. In connection with Sinking Creek he serves Catawba church in Roanoke county as pastor, and Newcastle and Bethel churches in Craig county as stated supply. He is much beloved, not only by his own members but also by those of other denominations. At a communion meeting at this church, in which I assisted the pastor, the first Sabbath of this month, one young man was received into the church on profession of faith.

On the same day a congregational meeting was held to consider the resignation of Bro. Coppedge as their pastor. He is contemplating a removal to West Virginia to take charge of Salem church in Greenbrier county, and Hillsdale and Carmel churches in Monroe county. The church resolved not to concur with brother Coppedge in asking Presbytery to dissolve the pastoral relation, but requested that Presbytery would give them more assistance than heretofore, while they would endeavor to increase their contributions towards his support. They also resolved to make the effort to secure the pastoral services of brother Coppedge for one-half instead of one-fourth of his time.

These resolutions were prepared by brother Nielson, one of the most energetic and determined workers in the State of Virginia or any other State. One such elder in a church is a tower of strength to the pastor. The above resolutions have the true ring about them. Think of it: Unable to support their minister one-fourth of his time, when he talks of leaving they determine not only, by renewed effort, to hold on to what they have, but in the face of all difficulties to make the effort to double it. Such a spirit is not easily put down, for difficulty is only a signal for renewed effort. I do hope Presbytery will retain brother Coppedge in his present field, for it is of too much importance to be neglected, and he has the hearts of the people and a knowledge of their wants, which it will take time and labor for anyone else to acquire.

There is another fact no less remarkable than the above second resolution, and equally characteristic of the man. I mention it for the encouragement of others that they may go and do likewise, for there are many similar fields in our Church. All the churches of brother Coppedge's charge are weak numerically and financially. Their minister was without a home, and his salary too small to rent one. A short time after Sinking Creek church was organized brother Nielson determined that a manse should be built. The long distance to saw-mills and the difficulty of securing other material made the expense heavy. To add to these difficulties the water in the well, which was dug and furnished with a pump at a cost of about one hundred dollars, stagnated. Not to be outdone, piping was secured and water was brought from a spring 1600 feet distant to the very door of the manse. Thus, in a short time, the manse was built upon his own land and deeded to the Presbyterian church, he superintending and carrying on the work as if for himself. The whole cost, about one thousand dollars, has been advanced by Mr. Nielson. After subscribing liberally himself, Mr. Nielson depends for the remainder upon the voluntary contributions of God's people. At his solicitation he has received contributions from New York, Boston, Canada, New Zealand, Scotland, Ireland, &c. From these various sources, and in response to a circular letter sent out to the churches, about four hundred dollars have been realized, leaving some six hundred dollars yet unpaid.

Bro. Neilson is a foreigner, a native of Scotland. Coming among us with such a spirit of determination and work for the Master, I want to see him encouraged. Will not every one who reads this send what he can to aid in this cause? Before going out and seeing for myself I thought in the midst of so many pressing calls at home I could not afford to give anything, but now I think it a privilege to give a dollar (wish I could do much more), and feel sure many others will look at it in the same light when the facts are known. Send your contributions to Rev. W. H. Coppedge (or Mr. T. B. Neilson), Sinking Creek, Craig county, Va.

In conclusion, I would not have you forget the fact that we are making a strenuous effort to build a manse in Giles county, but as yet no Nielson has come to the front. Still we are not without encouragement. A convenient lot of about six acres has been secured near Poplar Hill, containing all the buildings necessary except a dwelling house. Most of the lumber is already subscribed. It only remains now to raise money sufficient to pay for the lot and build the house. We have done what we could at home and yet we have not a sufficiency. All those who feel that "it is more pleasant to give than to receive" will rejoice to learn that we are now ready to receive subscriptions and donations. Anything from whatever source for this cause will be thankfully received and faithfully applied, if sent to W. B. Arrowood, Poplar Hill, Giles county, Va. Yours truly, W. B. A.

A CONVENTION OF ELDERS AND DEACONS.

Mr. Elder: The Convention of Elders and Deacons in Mecklenburg Presbytery met in Mallard Creek church, on the 3rd and 4th inst. The congregation was large, attentive and deeply interested in the proceedings. An excellent spirit prevailed. Brotherly love continued and abounded, so as to cause those who attended to feel that it was good to be there. The bringing together of such an intelligent body of Christian men, for the purpose of considering important subjects closely connected with the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, must do good to those who participate in the discussions. And to those who hear the opinions of godly men upon those subjects that are closely connected with the peace of Jerusalem and the prosperity of Zion. The first subject was—"The best means of increasing the spirituality of church members." The remarks made were well fitted to stir up the pure minds of the brethren in the way of remembrance, and to bring them to feel that they all had something to do in this direction in the moral vineyard of the Lord. The relation of the Church to Sabbath schools, to foreign missions, to the Bible cause. These were all ably discussed, on the first day, when the Convention was full and fresh.

The place of the next meeting was considered. Several places were nominated; but a letter was read from the pastor and session of Monroe church urging the claims of that place so earnestly that the Convention unanimously determined to meet them next August. If every session is represented at the next meeting, and the same spirit prevails that did at this meeting, great and lasting good will be done in curing groundless prejudices amongst our Church and commending it to the favor of the people. It is more than desirable that the next meeting should exhibit a fair specimen of the zeal, piety and intelligence of our elders and deacons. Let the brethren make sacrifices, if necessary, in order to be the instruments of doing good, and getting good. May all our officers be animated by the Spirit of their Divine Master; for it is written if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his. W. W. P.

AN INCIDENT.

Rev. Andrew B. Cross furnishes to the Baltimore Presbyterian some incidents of the battle of Gettysburg and we copy what he has to say in reference to Col. B. F. Little, who was so well known and so deservedly beloved in North Carolina. Mr. Cross was with an advance party to whose lot it fell to look after the Confederate wounded. He says: "We came across men with whom we formed most intimate associations which we have cherished with the warmest affection ever since. From among them we select Col. B. F. Little, of North Carolina." Col. Little was after a time taken to Point Lookout and with many officers taken at Gettysburg and elsewhere occupied a large building used as a hospital. We copy what follows literally:

"As our headquarters were in the main building, where we had stores, papers, books, &c., furnished through the Christian commission and others, and they had free access to our quarters, we were in the habit of meeting many of all grades who were able to walk. Among these none interested us more than Col. Little. But that which gave special interest, and has been a source of gratitude to God ever since, was the following incident. He was a pious, consistent, intelligent Presbyterian, and through the generosity of an old friend, James Lenox, of New York, I had secured a beautiful and extensive collection of books which I was able to give the use of to all who were interested in them. This brought him often to my room, and I often called at his cot in the hospital, and on those prisoners who were confined to their cots.

"He was among the oldest of the prisoners. A new collection had come in, and just at the time when there was about to be an exchange. By the leaders of this late arrival it was proposed that all the prisoners should draw lots for the exchange, which they succeeded in carrying. When the names were drawn, that of Col. Little was not among them. He came to me and mentioned it, and was intensely agitated though he had command of himself. He said he had not been home since the army had started North. That he had a wife and two children, the youngest only ten days old when he first left home. General Butler was at the Point—would I see him for him. There was no time to be lost, the arrangement was made.—General B. was on his steamer just ready to start. I ran on board, got his attention before he pulled the bell. He called to his clerk: "Look if Col. Little's name is on the list." "No, sir." "Write Col. Ould, 'I herewith send you Col. Little as a special exchange. Say so to Mr. Ashe, member of Congress from North Carolina.'" He pulled the bell—we hurried ashore—the boat was off for Fortress Monroe.

"It is not to be supposed Col. L. would be long coming to learn his fate. When he came to my room I said: "Well, if no other exchange goes you will; but more, the General has set aside the list who had drawn, and ordered that those longest in prison shall be returned first. If agitated before, it was nothing to what he was now. No one who has not been in some such circumstances can enter into the feelings of that occasion. He could not sleep, could not sit, was back and forth at my room. He did not know what to do, and so continued until the boat started which carried him toward home.

"Time and again since I have had letters of gratitude, and expressions of his manly Christian life. He has lived at home an exemplary Christian, and when in the army did not lose sight of his principles. On July 9, 1879, he changed a comfortable Christian home and family dear to him, and a place of usefulness in the Church on earth, to join the great company who have gone before of the Church of the first-born in heaven, and has left that wife and the children which God gave him, in whom he was so much interested, for whom he was so anxious, to look to his example and bear in remembrance his principles. He was a young man of thirty-one, with a young wife, when he went to the war; he died at home, in the midst of his family, friends, and in a neighborhood who mourned his loss, in his 49th year."

LETTER FROM CHAPEL HILL.

Mr. Editor: In the good old times "before the war," a summer vacation in Chapel Hill meant simply a six week's dream of peace and rest, when everybody did just as they pleased, dressed "anyhow," read novels all day long and

"Lay reclined,
On the hills like gods together, careless of mankind."

LOTUS EATING.

What halcyon days were those. No cares, nor any sense of responsibility invaded the repose. Half a summer morning in one or another of the college libraries. Home again with an armful of choice books. Half an afternoon in a "land of drowsy head." and then a soft, bright evening passed on wide piazzas, in pleasant chat or perchance in honeyed silence while a mocking-bird swaying in moonlight on the top of some tall pear-tree in the garden, poured out his heart in song. This was "summer vacation," a time to be looked forward to with delight, and to be remembered now with soft regret as some previous antediluvian state of existence; for the times have changed and we have changed with them.

THE NORMAL SCHOOL.

The establishment of the University Normal school has effectually dissolved that dream of peace. The libraries are no longer haunts of sweet solitude. You can't enter one for six weeks after the University Commencement, without encountering a dozen hungry normal students, bewildered by the feast set before them, and unable to decide what book to read first. Shall it be a novel? shall it be a history? shall it be an essay? shall it be poetry? shall it be a magazine? "Please recommend me a book."

No longer may you be stretched at ease on the grass in some deep shade, or propped against your favorite oak commune with your favorite author. The ice-cream man will descry you from afar, or the watermelon man, or the man with peaches and grapes, or quiet will be equally invaded by the sound of many voices, the tramp of many footsteps, strangers flitting hither and thither through the groves, crowds assembling round the well, hurrying to the chapel, solitude nowhere reflection impossible, the very air full of obstinate questionings and blank misgivings, full of the imperative mood and the future tense;—in short the schoolmaster and mistress are abroad, and Rip Van Winkle may no more dream out his "summer vacation."

SUMMING UP.

Now that the Normal School is over, has dimmed its camp-fires and is gone, is a good time to sum it up and take account of stock.

It has resembled its predecessors in all their best features; in the unflagging interest and diligence of the professors and the pupils, and their conscientious discharge of duty; in the spirit, punctuality and good order of the whole; in the excellence of the instruction provided; and in the cheerfulness, good temper and enjoyment which prevailed from first to last.

IMPROVEMENTS.

It was an improvement in respect of its organization, the lectures and recitations being so arranged as not to overlap each other—there was not so much crowding, and it was possible to attend nearly the whole course. It was an improvement in the exhibition under Miss Long, of the New York Public School System of instruction. This was a most attractive feature, and Miss L. sustained herself admirably under severely critical observation. She had about twenty of the Chapel Hill children to operate upon, and taught them reading, phonetics, spelling, arithmetic, geography, natural history, and the rudiments of vocal music according to the best approved modern methods. She did not use books at all, except in the reading lessons. Her drill in schoolroom manners and morals was perfect. Altogether it was a great success, and we were all proud of our quiet bright-eyed North Carolina young lady, who by dint of perseverance and ability has attained a position in New York City that enables her to come home and confer a benefit upon her native State. She returns to her work in New York in September. Superintendent Shepherd said he would give much to be able to engage her in his work in Baltimore.

The School Kindergarten Department was an improvement. Mrs. Pollock and her daughter were not as exacting as Miss Coe, and made their work more interesting to children and teachers both. Other things being equal it will ordinarily be found that a woman who is, like David Copperfield's landlady, "a mother herself" will know best how to attract and engage little children.

The school differed from its predecessors in having more instruction by lecture, and less by recitation, whether this is an improvement or not, will, of course be discussed and decided by the proper authority. Being an old fogy myself and strictly conservative, I am of the opinion that recitations are better that lectures though manifestly not so agreeable. The algebra, geometry and Latin classes required text books and study at home and so of the Shakespeare class—but in general the method was by lecture.

THE LECTURES.

As to the lectures by distinguished gentlemen from abroad, there was no falling off in quality or quantity provided. Maj. Bingham's lecture on the "Anglo-Saxon Man" is pure gold, and beaten gold at that. Bishop Lyman's, on "Egypt and the Nile," was very entertaining, and gave great pleasure. Dr. Rondthaler's, on "German Schools," was exceedingly instructive. Much was entirely new to us, and all of it interesting. Prof. Royall of Wake Forest gave us a scholarly and thoughtful discourse on the "Teacher's Happiness." Dr. Pritchard and Mr. Scarborough each gave North Carolina, through us, a good scolding. President Battle repeated two of his most entertaining lectures on the "History of the University and Chapel Hill." Professor Hassell of Wilson favored us with a very learned astronomical discourse. The series was unhappily interrupted by news from his home of the death of one of his children. Prof. Kerr took us all over North Carolina in a series of delightfully graphic lectures. Maj. Hotchkiss gave us the "Valley Campaign," and Prof. Shepherd added over and above his daily course several very charming and elegant studies in the English language and literature.

SUPERINTENDENT SHEPHERD.

This gentleman made friends and admirers of the whole Normal School, including outsiders and lookers on. And this is to be noted, because with a most winning address he insisted upon strict discipline and expected people to mind when they were spoken to. I have a great enthusiasm for these quiet, modest, characteristic North Carolinians who go abroad and make their mark high up in the world's esteem, and so sustain themselves as to reflect a lustre upon their native State, and who call it "coming home" when they return to us. Prof. Shephord did not scold his flock; on the contrary, he patted and praised it. He says there is much that is admirable in North Carolina, and much to encourage her people in their hope for the future. He did not seem to tire in praising the efficiency of the University Normal School, and expressing the pleasure he took in its work. One compliment he paid which gave this present writer great comfort to hear. In closing the school, alluding to the oratorical efforts just witnessed at its commencement exercises, he said that the "decay of oratory at the South" had been declared as assured, but he would need no more than the display of the morning to convince him that Southerners had not yet lost that noble birthright and distinguishing characteristic of their section.

CLOSING EXERCISES.

The closing concert was a very tasteful and really artistic affair, though gotten up hastily and making no pretensions. Concerts in general are very apt to be that way. A deal of discord can be elicited from musical people if you give them time, but if you rush them right through they give you only their very best. The instrumental and vocal performances were relieved by recitations, poetical and dramatic. Young Mr. Dowd of Charlotte (late of Trinity College) gave us Poe's "Raven" in very fine style. I thought it the gem of the evening. Mr. Hodge (late of Davidson College), with Mr. Pell of the University, were admirable in the quarrel between Brutus and Cassius. Miss Patterson of Salem recited "The Wounded Soldier" with real dramatic passion and power. But I shall never have done if I go on particularizing.

Let it suffice to say again that the fourth University Normal School has been like the three first: a success from first to last, and the State's money has been well spent, and two thousand dollars or less have been put where they will do the State most good.

SUMMER EXODUS TO CLEAVELAND COUNTY.

Some one has said: "Good travelers stop at the hotels; there is the best company and the best information." And gentle folks stop at the best watering places, and they are in Cleaveland county, N. C. Tired people all along the line of the Carolina Central Railway gather together at the head of the road and meet multitudes from the up country of South Carolina, during the heated time. The excellent waters and air make the season lively about Shelby, surrounded as it is by Wilson's, Patterson's and McBreyer's celebrated Springs. Everybody feels like he cannot do justice to the season without visiting these places and drinking these waters and exchanging salutations with the crowds that resort there for a short time. The old and the young—the fat kind and the lean—young men and maidens, tired mothers and housekeepers, sweet little babes gleeful girls and playful boys, in tidy, clean laces and linens, teachers and ministers, farmers, merchants, manufacturers, miners, agents, military companies and the doctors, come together to rest—to play, and talk, and ride, and sport, and laugh, and sleep, and eat and drink and drink these healthful waters, and cool off under the trees. Those who enjoy it most are not equal to anything else for the time, and carefully avoid any engagement whatever. The green hills, fruit trees, and sparkling little brooks delight the ramblers. The smooth broad streets of Shelby afford pleasant drives, in which the Shelby people take a good share. The hotels, post-office and railroad station are full of strangers and ring with the cordial greetings of friends and acquaintances.

Carriages, phætons and hacks brought many to swell the large assembly that crowded to overflowing the Presbyterian church on the first Sunday of August, affording a pleasant opportunity for the members to extend Christian courtesies and friendly offices and attentions to appreciative strangers who came to pray and praise with them; and the tired pastor found it easier to preach perhaps, than the people did to hear.

If the pulpit teaches and moves mind and heart, it must do it in few words. It is a severe trial for any Christian, especially young ones, to linger long in such resorts, spiritual energy is frittered away in talk, the heart is chilled and conscience relaxed in loosely kept Sundays. R. Z. J.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

The Vicksburg Commercial learns with regret, through private letters to the friends of Rev. Mr. Wheeler, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Independence., Mo., that his health is so impaired as to render a cessation from his pastoral duties a necessity, but we are gratified to learn further that his large-hearted congregation has furloughed him for a trip to Europe, paying all expenses.

Rev. S. F. Tenney writes to the Texas Presbyterian that he has just closed a meeting of six days at Bodan school-house. He was assisted by Rev. J. T. Paxton. A Presbyterian church was organized of six members with one ruling elder. The Church is called Bethany and is in the Presbytery of Eastern Texas.

The Rev. R. S. Burwell writes to the Texas Presbyterian from Denton, Texas under date July 26th:

The "Camp Meeting" at West Fork church, Tarrant county, closed last Friday night. Bros. Moon and Chaney left Thursday morning. The people said, "go on, continue the meeting, which I did till Friday night. We had unfavorable weather, but there was good attendance and great interest was manifested to the close of the meeting. Seven more additions to the church, besides those I told you of in my postal card, making thirteen. All on profession of faith. God's Spirit was with us and we had a glorious meeting. I never saw Christians so much interested and so refreshed.

The St. Louis Presbyterian says: A new house of worship for the Etna congregation, in Scotland county, Mo., was recently dedicated at Granger. Rev. M. G. Gorin, pastor of the church at Memphis, conducted the services in the presence of an over crowded audience, gathered from many miles around. Dr. S. A. Lyon, Ruling Elder, read a history of the organization. The building is commodious and neat and is paid for.

Items from Southern Presbyterian:

Licentiate W. H. Ochiltree, of the Presbytery of Montgomery, has been invited to supply the New River church, in Montgomery county, Va., and expected to begin his labors there about the first of August.

A correspondent writes that "an interesting union meeting closed at Greer's, S. C., last Sabbath week, which continued for two weeks. Mt. Tabor church has been greatly blessed. Nine members were added to the Presbyterian church, eight to the Baptist and fourteen to the Methodist. Many backsliders were reclaimed. Twenty-five or thirty were anxious, most of whom expressed hope in the mercy of God through Christ, and will soon unite themselves with some branch of the Christian Church. Mt. Tabor congregation is building a house of worship in the town, and, we hear, intend making it their permanent place of worship."

Rev. R. H. Reid, Chairman of Commission, reports: "The commission of Enoree Presbytery, appointed to visit North Pacolet congregation, found the church few in numbers, depressed and discouraged, with only one elder, and he an afflicted man unable to leave his home. We received four members by letter. Mr. T. Hoyt, who had been previously an elder, was elected and installed an elder of North Pacolet church. We found another Presbyterian elder living in the congregation who had not united with the church. He was instructed to procure his letter, and identify himself with the little flock. We found also eleven members of our church living in the bounds of the congregation. They were advised to procure letters from their churches, and unite with the church where they reside. We also appointed a building committee to erect a chapel at the town of Landrum's, on the Spartanburg and Asheville railroad. A committee of ladies was appointed to solicit subscriptions for this building. This congregation needs the sympathies and prayers of the other churches of the Presbytery. We hope they will receive encouragement and help. Contributions to aid in building the chapel may be sent to Mrs. Dr. Landrum, at Landrum's, or to Mr. T. Hoyt.

A correspondent writes to the Texas Presbyterian, 22d July, that a meeting of five days had been held at Whalock church in Brazos Presbytery, which church Rev. James Wilson is supplying. Congregations large, attentive and serious. Six persons were added to the membership of the church, and a number of men were deeply serious and anxious when we closed.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Hoyt of Nashville, Tenn., has received a call from the old Smyrna church.—Murfreesboro News.

Items from the Christian Observer:

The congregation of the church at Uniontown, Ala., have erected a two-story manse with eight rooms and costing, with all improvements, about $2,000, for their pastor, Rev. Dr. E. T. Baird. The church has fifty members.

On the second Saturday of June the Presbytery of South Alabama met at Uniontown and received Dr. Baird as a member, and on Sabbath installed him as pastor of the church. Rev. H. R. Raymond, D. D., the moderator of Presbytery, presided, preached an able sermon, and delivered the charge to the people, and the Rev. E. Anderson the charge to the pastor. Since the spring meeting there have been six additions to the church.

Mr. John R. McAlpine was licensed to preach the Gospel at the same meeting of Presbytery.

Rev. W. S. Johnson's address is changed from Waxahachie to Gainesville, Texas.

The Southwestern Presbyterian says that Rev. R. F. Patterson has been installed pastor of the church at Baton Rouge.

It appears from the catalogue of Charlotte Female Institute for session of 1879–'80 that the total number of pupils for the past session was 146, the largest number ever in attendance since the war; making it, as the catalogue claims the most successful of the twenty-three years of its history. Nineteen of these pupils were from South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and New York were also represented. The catalogue also announces that there is in connection with the Charlotte Female Institute a fully equipped Cooking School, under the supervision of Mrs Helen C. Campbell.

"This medicine is acknowledged to have no equal as a Liver medicine, containing those Southern roots and herbs which an allwise Providence has placed in countries where Liver diseases prevail."—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

Our readers will note that Dr. E. Nye Hutchison is Agent for the Taylor Cotton Gins in Charlotte, N. C. Dr. Hutchison is so well known and known so favorably to the Presbyterians of North Carolina that a word from us may be unnecessary; but bear in mind that he is the Agent of the Gins, and what he promises you may rely upon.

If those persons laboring under disease proceeding from vitiated humors in the blood; causing Ulcers, White Swellings, Coxalgia or Hip Joint Disease, and the class of diseases termed Scrofulous, proceeding from hereditary taints, where the bones are destroyed, defying the usual treatment of physicians, will procure Swaim's Panacea, they will find a remedy which has saved thousands of lives; and thoroughly tested by the late Professors Chapman, Dewees and Gibson of the old University of Pennsylvania; besides hundreds of medical men eminent in their profession, continues to be a "forlorn hope" to sufferers worthy of its fifty years' reputation.

Swaim's Panacea is imitated and a preparation sold for it by druggists with a name somewhat similar. Purchasers therefore must be careful and see they get that containing the recommendations of the distinguished professors alluded to. It is seldom advertised in our public papers.

Swaim's Panacea is prepared only at Swaim's Laboratory, 113 South Seventh Street, below Chestnut, Philadelphia.

In Fayetteville, N. C., on the 27th ult., Miss FLORA McALISTER, daughter of Hector and Isabella McAlister, and great-granddaughter of Rev. James Campbell, in her 73rd year.

As the mortal remains of this excellent Christian woman were interred at the Bluff church, of which she was an esteemed and much beloved member, we were forcibly reminded of the benefits secured in the everlasting Covenant to believers and their children: "I will be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee." There stood the monument, erected by Fayetteville Presbytery, to perpetuate the memory of Rev. James Campbell, who first preached the glad news salvation to his Highland "kith" on the Cape Fear, and at the Bluff, Long Street and Barbecue.

And now, in the fourth generation, the Covenant promise was fulfilled in the consistent life and peaceful death of this ripe Christian.

Miss McAlister, was a sincere and devoted friend, and to know her was to esteem and love her. She had been long an invalid, but "sufficient grace" enabled her to bear with patience her protracted infirmity and her end was peace.
PASTOR.

On the death of Mrs. ALICE J. PURCELL, at her residence, "Retirement," near Wentworth, July 13th, 1880:

When last, in cold despair, I bent,
Tearless by my beloved dead—
"This is the final stroke," I said;
"For now are all Death's arrows spent,
And I have no more tears to shed.

Then thou afar didst call to me,
O truest heart that ever beat!
"Turn, from all worldly strife retreat,
And share my happy home with me!
Turn to the South thy wandering feet!"

O sweetest voice that ever spoke!
O clearest eyes that ever shone!
O golden bird, forever flown!
I would that Death's remorseless stroke
Had spared thy breast and pierced my own.

And I, who said (while thou wert left),
"This is the worst, my joy is past;
The final blow has come at last;".
Now know I was not all bereft.
While yet my heart could hold thee fast.

Like the poor shell-fish, I have borne
My pearls, hid from the billows swell,
And nourished in my heart's deep cell:
But now my gems are from me torn,
And I cast out an empty shell.

O loving friend, the true and tried!
Who knows indeed "the best," "the worst,"
Of aught? My schemes are all reversed.
But God is God, whate'er betide:
Beginning, ending, last and first!

My Alice, Alice fond and true!
Among good women noblest, best;
Pure gold that felt the fiery test;
White jewel, flawless through and through,
Shine thou upon thy Saviour's breast.

Love's earthly harvest must be pain,
But not a single grain is lost:
Sorrows may come, an armed host,
Or one by one a legthening train—
True love will never count the cost.

True love will never count the cost:
Now, eagle-winged, the clouds above;
Now prone on earth a stricken dove;
But nothing loved is ever lost—
For love is God's, and God is Love.

O soul so pure! O heart so fond!
Bright hair that shamed the gold bird's breast
My Alice, dearest, sweetest, best!
A new star lights the bright Beyond,
Shining among the spirits blest.
L. H. BARTRAM.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a meeting of the Session of Greensboro church, at the pastor's study, August 2nd, 1880, a committee appointed previously (Lyndon Swaim and Sam'l C. Smith), reported the following paper and resolutions, which were adopted:

JUNIUS IRVING SCALES, late an Elder of of the Greensboro Presbyterian church, died at the Presbyterian Hospital, New York city, July 12th, A. D., 1880. He had been a sufferer for two or three years with what afterward proved to be disease of the heart, and went to that institution in April last, with the hope of benefit from its modes of treatment; but it was ordered by Providence that his life should be closed there.

Col Scales was born in Rockingham county, N. C., June 1st, 1832, of parentage influential in civil life, and in the Church—his father still living in honored old age. His education was finished at the North Carolina University, whence he graduated in 1853. Having prepared himself for the practice of the law, he settled at Graham, in Alamance county. On the 13th December, 1859, he was married to Miss Effie H Henderson, daughter of Col. A. Henderson, and granddaughter of Chief Justice Henderson. By this sad bereavment nine children are left fatherless, and all at an age requiring the tenderest care. The God of the fatherless be merciful unto them, and give grace and strength to the widowed mother for the life task before her!

He removed to Mississippi in 1861, just at the breaking out of the late war between the States; was a Captain in the 30th Mississippi regiment, and promoted successively to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel and Colonel. He was wounded and captured at the battle of Chickamauga, and imprisoned on Johnson's Island, whence he was released in 1865, and returned in shattered health.

He removed to Greensboro after the war, and resumed the practice of the law in co-partnership with his brother, Gen. A. M. Scales.

In civil life Col. Scales received distinguishing marks of popular confidence, having been elected to the lower House of the General Assembly of North Carolina of 1857–'58, from the county of Alamance, and to the Senate from the district composed of the counties of Guildford and Alamance in 1876, and again in 1878. He was active and influential in the Legislature, securing the highest regard of his fellow-members, and enjoying the entire confidence of his constituency.

Our brother Scales was received into the Presbyterian church at Carrolton, Miss., in 1861, on profession of faith, under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. E. T. Baird, whence he was received into the Church at Greensboro, N. C., at the November communion, 1868. On the 25th of February, 1872, he was ordained an elder of the Greensboro church, having been elected at the same time with John H. Dillard, Charles G. Yates and Lyndon Swaim.

As an elder he was of course nearer to the Session than in any other relation. On account of his knowledge of law, he was peculiarly useful to our body in all its matters of business. In his province of spiritual overseer he was wise, considerate and true to the interests of the Church. He loved his Church not merely as a sect, but as a powerful and chosen constituent of catholic Christianity in the world, under our One Great Head divine. In his public and social life, and in his church connexion, he was ever the same genial, kindly, liberal-hearted man, illustrating beautifully the life and character of the Christian gentleman.

Among the records of death in the eldership of of our church, none perhaps, have been so mournful and touching as that of our departed brother Scales. He died away from home, without the ministrations of those he loved most tenderly, and who would have been tenderest with him at the solemn hour when heart and flesh fail, and the spirit returns to God who gave it.

Yet we are assured that in the Hospital where his life closed he had such kindly attentions to his bodily wants as dutiful hands could give, and the soothing companionship of one who was able and willing to perform all the offices of friendship and of an affectionate Christian brother, the Rev. Dr. Charles Phillips. The Session desires especially, at the close of this memorial record, to express its sense of grateful feelings towards Dr. Phillips for his watchful care and solicitude at the dying bed of our brother and our friend.

The following resolutions were adopted:

1. That though we mourn, we mourn not without hope, and thank God for the example our brother has set us by his walk and conversation and earnest adherence to truth and duty.

2. That as a Session we sympathize deeply with his bereaved family and commend them to God and to the Word of His Grace.

3. That this memorial be spread upon our records, and that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased and to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN for publication.
